Engineers Go to Riverton, Ala.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—A party of United States engineers passed though this city en route for Riverton and Decatur, Ala. They came to this city by rail and left on the United States steamer Colbert for down river points. Riverton, Ala., will be the first stop.

Small Fire in the White House.

Washington, D. C.—One of the chimneys in the executive offices of the White House caught fire Saturday but practically no damage resulted. One engine responded, but the blaze was extinguished by a few buckets of water. A fire, started in all the open grates of the offices, caused the blaze in the chimney.

MONUMENT UNVEILED

In the Presence of a Large Assembly, the Confederate Shaft Was Unveiled.

SKY SMILED UPON THE SCENE.

Daughters of the Confederacy, Veterans, Militia, School Children and Citizens Took Part.

Birmingham, Ala.—Under a bright sky in the presence of thousands of men, women and children of Birmingham, the splendid Confederate monument in Capitol Park erected by Pelham Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, was unveiled Wednesday.

The event was attended with all the pomp and dignity demanded by an occasion of such keen historic interest.

A monster parade through the principal streets of the city to the park preceded the ceremonies at the monument. The parade formed in Third avenue opposite the court house and after proceeding through the down town districts moved to the park, which was reached at 11 o'clock.

There the interesting ceremonies incidental to the unveiling took place. A stand for the speakers had been erected to the north of the monument, and upon it were gathered the participants in the regular program, the officers and members of Pelham Chapter, the sponsors and other notables.

Packed around the stand and the monument were several thousand people, all intent upon witnessing the interesting event and every one keenly alive to the significance of the occasion.

Military was used to keep the crows back. Gathered nearest the speakers' stand were the children from the Birmingham high school, while Prof. J. B. Cunningham, of that school, had a place on the stand.

Called to Order.

At exactly 11 o'clock Mrs. J. A. Rountree, president of Pelham Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, lifted a beautifully decorated gavel and rapped the vast assemblage to order.

The ease with which the crowd was controlled was noticeable. There was instant attention as the announcement was made by Mrs. Rountree that Dr. L. S. Handley, pastor of the Central Presbyterian church, would invoke the divine blessing.

With bowed heads the great concourse stood and listened attentively to the fervent prayer of the eloquent minister. Dr. Handley's prayer was peculiarly appropriate. He thanked God for having given this country such noble men as those in whose memory the shaft was erected. He prayed the divine blessing upon the occasion. He spoke most eloquently of the men who had given their lives for the South and thanked the divine spirit for a reunited country, closing with the Lord's Prayer, in which the great assemblage joined.

When Dr. Handley had concluded the band played the "Bonnie Blue Flag," and the high school pupils and many others in the audience joined in singing this patriotic air. Flags were waved and cheers rent the air as the words of this famous song were wafted upon the gentle breezes which blew across the park.

Mrs. Rountree Speaks.

Next on the program were the introductory remarks by Mrs. Rountree, who was in charge of the ceremonies.

The Unveiling.

When Mrs. Rountree had concluded word was given for the monument to be unveiled. Confederate colors had been wrapped around the die of the monument. On one side stood little Miss Selene Rountree and on the other Master Charles Clisby. At the word they pulled cords and the cloth which had hidden the die dropped amid wild plaudits from the multitude. Then the band played "Dixie" and a scene of great enthusiasm followed. Those who occupied the speakers' stand arose and joined in the demonstration. The air was filled with waving flags and fluttering handkerchiefs. The scene was inspiring.

Mrs. Brown's Speech.

Next came the presentation of the monument by Mrs. Charles G. Brown, chairman of the monument committee of Pelham Chapter. Mrs. Brown received the closest attention while she spoke and was heartily applauded.

Its History.

The cornerstone of the Confederate monument, which was unveiled at Capitol Park Wednesday, was laid on the afternoon of Thursday, April 26th, 1894, attended with appropriate and most impressive ceremonies and in the presence of a vast multitude, including many prominent Confederate veterans. This occasion was the crowning event of the great Confederate reunion, which was held in Birmingham that year.

Preceding the ceremonies at the park, the grand review of the veterans took place. The procession formed on Avenue E and moved along Twenty-first street across the bridge and marched to Park avenue. The reviewing stand was at the head of Twentieth street and on it stood the late Gen. John B. Gordon, at the time commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans, and all the ranking officers of that organization, the governors of several of the Southern states, and about one hundred other distinguished personages.

The column marched by the reviewing stand to the rear of the park, and then entered, forming around the foundation of the monument.

General Lee Spoke.

General Lee was received with tremendous applause, and spoke at considerable length voicing the sentiment of the occasion and recounting the heroism displayed by soldiers of the Confederacy during the civil war. In conclusion he said: "As we lay this cornerstone and leave others to finish our work, so may the blood of our martyrs be the seed of such a race in the future. May we take up our life work of loyalty to our reunited country as we lay it down, and crown it with success worthy of our forefathers. What higher praise can a man have than is conveyed in the words 'Confederate soldier?' Palsied be the tongue that would cast a slur upon his memory and recreant is the son who does not glory in such a sire."

Cornerstone Laid.

The cornerstone was then laid by the late Hon. Francis L. Pettus, at that time grand master of the Masons of Alabama. The corn, wine and oil were poured by Misses Nellie Johnston, Carrie Cobbs and Lucille Lane, three dainty little misses who were appropriately costumed for the occasion, one wearing red, another white and the third blue. When the stone had been adjusted General Gordon declared it set amid great enthusiasm.

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. Dr. J. E. Martin, of Tennessee, after which the band played "Dixie" and the vast assemblage dispersed.

Site Chosen.

On March 22 the site was chosen. Mayor Fox made a short and eloquent talk, dedicating the ground to the sacred uses of a Confederate monument, and baptized the spot with a bottle of wine. The first stroke of the pick was made by Commander Rufus N. Rhodes, of Camp Clayton, the second by Gen. Fred S. Ferguson, of the United Confederate Veterans, and the third by Mayor Fox.

The foundation was gotten ready for the cornerstone, which was laid on April 26, 1894, as previously stated.

On the east side of the cornerstone, facing the rising sun, are the words: "In Honor of the Confederate Soldiers and Sailors." On the north side are the words: "Cornerstone Laid April 26, A. D., 1894."

The total cost of the foundation was $1,020.

Work of Pelham Chapter.

The history of the monument itself is an interesting story extending over a period of the last five years. The success of the project is due chiefly to the efforts of Pelham Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, which has raised funds for the three stone bases and die and the monument itself, which stands forty-three feet six inches from the ground.

Mrs. A. A. Clisby was the president of the chapter when the idea was first suggested by Mrs. J. U. Hardeman, who gave to the chapter a marble shaft fortyseven feet in height and sixteen inches square, which had been presented to her by the Talladega marble works after its exhibition at the state fair. The ladies at first thought the project beyond their means, and after they had decided to undertake it the marble was found inadequate for the purpose planned. Undaunted, however, a committee was formed and work was begun to raise funds for a larger and more expensive shaft.

Mr. L. N. Archer was selected to design and erect the monument. He gives now a conservative estimate of the value of the monument as $4,000, although his bid was below this price, his idea being to aid the ladies and to keep the contract within the hands of a local firm. The ladies consider themselves peculiarly fortunte in having so generous an offer made them.

The Monument.

The monument stands as a straight shaft on a die and cap. On the die are the inscriptions and the designs, the crossed sabers for the cavalry, the muskets for the infantry and the anchor for the navy. On the four corners of the base are balls, representing the artillery. The inscription on one side reads: "The manner of their death was the crowning glory of their lives."—Jefferson Davis.

The other inscription is on the front and reads: "To the memory of the Confederate soldiers and sailors. Erected by Pelham Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, Birmingham, Alabama, April 26th, 1905."

Mrs. J. Asa Rountree is now president of Pelham Chapter, with Mrs. A. A. Clisby as secretary and Miss Sophia Wittichen treasurer.

The committee on the program for the unveiling were Mrs. R. H. Carter, Mrs. A. A. Clisby and Mrs. John Lewis.

Railroad Earnings in Alabama.

The table of statistics published below, which has been carefully compiled from the reports of the several railroads named to the railroad commission for the year 1905, shows that there are 23,531 employes in Alabama, and that they receive an average daily compensation of $1.73. The railroads therefore pay out daily in Alabama to their employes $40,708.63; monthly, $1,221,258.90; annually, $14,655,106.80. This money of course remains in Alabama and is expended by these employes in the different communities where they reside. It is estimated that the railroads received during that year approximately only $9,205,185.99 from their local traffic, and it will be seen therefore that the railroads paid out to their employes $5,449,920.81 more money than they received from their domestic business. This excess was, of course, paid out of the interstate earnings. It should not be forgotten also that these railroads buy, as fuel for their engines in the Birmingham district large quantities of coal, and also buy steel rails, iron and other equipments, which amounts to many hundreds of thousands of dollars, and to this should be added the cost of depots, etc. The railroads also pay about six hundred thousand dollars annually for state and county taxes, about $160,000.00 of this goes direct to the public school fund, and about $54,000 to the soldier tax, and the remainder, $266,000, into the general fund. They also pay about $13,000 license tax which is used to defray the salaries and expenses of the railroad commission of the state. It should be remembered that all of this money remains in Alabama, and will cover approximately all the earnings of the railroads in Alabama.

These figures and facts should be given careful consideration by all those who are now studying the transportation problem in this state. The table referred to is as follows:

Infant Murdered—Mother Arrested.

Decatur, Ala.—Intense interest has been aroused over the sensational announcement that a male child a few days old has been found with its throat cut from ear to ear. Clara Glenn, a white servant in a family living about three miles west of this place, is said to be the mother, and a well-known man has been named as the child's father. The supposed mother has been charged with the murder. A coroner's jury is investigating.

Gas Pressure Is Strong.

Huntsville, Ala.—The pressure of gas in the latest gas well of the New York-Alabama Oil Company, near Green, has been tested and found to be 150 pounds to the inch. The company has three wells within a square mile in the northern part of Madison county, and is setting up drilling machinery on the site of another.

THE MAN WHO FEELS.

The man who feels is a happier wight
Than the man who is callous and cold,
For if he weeps in the gloom of night,
He laughs in the sunbeam's gold;
And if the tide of his life runs low,
It reaches the summits of cheer;
He knows the heights, as the depths below,
And he smiles through a pitying tear,
And after it all, when all is done,
The world has most of the gladdening sun,
For the twilight lingers when day is done
And the sun's benediction is dear.

The man who feels is happier far—
I say it again and again—
Than ever can be, or ever are,
The pitiless sons of men.
For if he sighs for his own gray woes,
He sighs for another's, too;
If the plant of pain in his bosom grows,
It is covered by sympathy's dew.
And after all, when all is said,
Still pity and love forever are wed;
That the heart unfeeling is chill and dead
Is true, and forever is true.

The man who feels as a dear God's gift
To a sorrowing, travailing world;
By the hands that the burdens of life uplift
Is the flag of our peace unfurled.
We need not the souls that are callous as fate
And selfish, and wedded to greed,
But the pitying tear for our fallen estate
We need—and we ever shall need.
And after it all, when all is past,
'Tis the deed of love that alone may last,
And the rest is chaff in the winnowing blast,
In the garden of life a weed.

—Alfred Waterhouse.

A "PIG-STICKING" ADVENTURE.

By Capt. Harry Grover.

Of all the many different varieties of sport in India none can compare with boar hunting or "pig-sticking," as it is there more generally termed for excitement, and that most alluring of all elements of sport, a certain amount of risk which all who participate know they will have to run.

I have had more than one dangerous adventure with wild elephants, tigers and bears, but I never have been in such real peril as I was on the first occasion that I tried my hand at pig-sticking. Those who have never seen a wild boar when brought to bay wounded cannot possibly form any conception of what a dangerous, vindictive and formidable animal it is.

On one occasion a party of three of us started from Barrackpoor, a large military cantonment near Calcutta, on a pig-sticking expedition. We were all mounted on Arab steeds, which were thoroughly trained to the sport, and which had withstood many a charge from an infuriated boar. This trip had been planned some days previously, and our servants and beaters had been sent on ahead of us. When we reached the rendezvous, a few miles out of Barrackpoor, we found our comrades anxiously awaiting our arrival, with the intelligence of several wild boars having been seen to enter a patch of jungle about a mile distant from where our camp was pitched.

We made all our preparations, looked to the tightening of our saddle girths, and, with our spears in hand we at once set off, followed by our beaters.

They had hardly entered the patch of jungle and commenced to beat when out rushed a huge boar, one of the largest we had ever seen. My horse was young and frantic with excitement, and it was with difficulty that I could hold him. But it was not the first time I had ridden after boars, and at last I managed to bring him into something like control. My two companions, Austin and Staples, were close behind me, and we soon closed on the boar, with such even advantage that it would have been almost impossible to say who led. For 200 or 300 yards we raced together, each with an eye on the boar, but every now and then glancing round at each other, the great object being to secure the "first spear"—that is, to be the first to draw blood from the boar.

It is not always the first rider that secures the first spear, though, of course, the lead gives a great advantage, and for that reason there is always a great struggle for it.

The boar was but a few lengths ahead of us, showing evident signs that the pace was beginning to tell upon him, and just then I drew a little in advance of my companions, and my gallant nag, answering to the spurs, with my spear extended far in front, I tried to stick the boar. But at that very moment he gave a sharp turn, and my horse dashing past I lost my opportunity. Austin, who was close behind, took advantage of the sudden turn, and wheeling his horse round met the boar and succeeded in touching him, calling out, "First spear!"

The boar now made another sharp turn, and it was all that Staples could do to avoid the charge of the maddened brute, which now ran behind a low hedge and hugged it so close as to render it difficult for us to get him out. Determined that he should come out into the open, I came up alongside of him and drove my spear deep into his side as he made a sudden half turn and tried to charge. My horse swerved a little, but he behaved nobly, and withdrawing my spear I was soon ready again for action.

Wheeling round I met Austin, who had just received a charge from the boar, and a serious broadside collision took place between us. Both of us were shaken in our seats, and Austin's horse nearly fell, but we managed to pull ourselves and our nags together and the attack was renewed.

By this time Staples, who had been in the rear, and had not as yet joined the fray, came up, and together we forced the boar down into the dry bed of a nullah, into which it plunged, and up the opposite bank. We followed as fast as the nature of the ground would allow us, and on reaching the bed of the stream and looking up we saw the boar, with curled back, erect bristles, glaring eyes and champing tusks, facing us, evidently having made up his mind not to budge a step further.

It was a very awkward position to assail, but a direct attack was unavoidable. Being the nearest I made a dash at the steep bank, and the boar met me before I could gain a footing on the top. Had not my horse behaved like a veteran we must inevitably have come to grief. As it was, he barely escaped being ripped by the boar in his furious onslaught.

Austin and Staples, whose horses by this time were nearly wild with excitement, rushed up the steep together. The boar was standing with the foam flying from his jaws on a piece of level ground, and after a few short trotting steps, charged Austin, but in doing so passed directly across Staples' path, giving him a splendid chance which was not thrown away. He made a thrust with his spear and struck the boar. At the same moment Austin's spear struck across his horse's chest, and to avoid coming end on over the boar he had to force his nag to jump over it.

This, however, he did not succeed in doing, and the next moment over they went, horse and rider, and to our horror we saw our friend lying on the ground directly in front of the now enraged and bleeding boar which at once made a furious charge at him.

Had I not been in a measure prepared and close by when this occurred there would have been but a very poor chance for Austin, but, fortunately, I was just in time to prevent any such catastrophe. Just as the boar had got to within half a dozen feet from him I drove my spear deep into his side.

This was the gallant boar's last charge. He reeled, sank on his knees, rolled over, and gasping out his last sobs was gathered to his fathers.—New York Weekly.

Advice For Pessimists.

Don't talk about your hard luck.

Refuse to recognize it. Refuse to believe in it. Scorn to whine about it.

Get the whine out of your voice, or it will stop the development and growth of your body. It will narrow and shrink your mind. It will drive away your friends; it will make you unpopular. Quit your whining; brace up; go to work; be something; stand for something; fill your place in the universe. Instead of whining around, exciting only pity and contempt, face about and make something of yourself. Reach up to the stature of a strong, ennobling womanhood. There is nothing the matter with you. Just quit your whining and go to work.

If you continually talk about your bad luck and moan about your misfortune, you create for yourself an atmosphere of misfortune which will certainly overwhelm you unless you stop in time.

The man or woman who persistently fears that such and such a thing is not going to turn out well is enlisting powerful forces against his success.—Boston Traveler.

The Czar as a Man.

After the Czar's morning bath it is his habit to meditate an hour before dressing himself.—London Times Correspondence.

(Viewing himself in the pier glass.) Naked, what am I? A lank, skinny, spider-legged libel on the image of God! Look at the waxwork head—the face with the expression of a melon—the projecting ears — the knoted elbows—the dished breast—the knife edged shins—and then the feet, all beads and joints and bone sprays, an imitation x-ray photograph! There is nothing imperial about this, nothing imposing, impressive, nothing to invoke awe and reverence. It is this that a hundred and forty million Russians kiss the dust before and worship. Manifestly not! No one could worship this spectacle, which is Me. Then who is it, what is it, that they worship? Privately, none knows better than I; it is my clothes. Without my clothes I should be as destitute of authority as any naked person. Nobody could tell me from a parson, a barber, a dude. Then who is the real Emperor of Russia? My clothes. There is no other.—Mark Twain, in the North American Review.

Should Men Stop Work at Forty?

Dr. William Osler's widely discussed assertion that the important work of the world has been done by men under forty years of age, and that mankind could easily spare the achievements of men above that age, is interestingly refuted by a writer in Harper's Weekly. To disprove Dr. Osler's statement, the writer names men in various field of activity whose achievements, indispensable to the world, were performed after they had passed the age at which, according to Dr. Osler, men are "comparatively useless." Of men of action he names, among others, Oliver Cromwell, von Moltke, Columbus; in the field of thought, Plato, Aristotle, Bacon, Kant, and Darwin; among the poets, Sophocles, Aeschylus, Horace, Milton, the Shakespeare of "Hamlet" and "The Tempest," the Goethe of "Faust." In the field of art, Michael Angelo, Titian, and Velasquez were over forty at the time of their greatest creative activity.

WRITERS AND THEIR WIVES.

In Very Few Cases Has There Been Complete Sympathy.

"Writers' wives are unappreciative as a rule of their husband's work," said a publisher. "For instance, Mme. Zola never read a single one of the Rougon-Macquart series. She thought that Zola's books were wicked.

"That, of course, is an extreme case. But Carlyle's wife did not think much of the hectoring, whining Scot she had married. She and Froude used to sit together and discuss Carlyle's faults in a low tone. She admired Carlyle's talent, but she thought it was overrated. The public of to-day appears to agree with her, for Carlyle, for a classic, sells miserably.

"Dickens' wife didn't like Dickens' books. She could see no humor in them. That was one of the reasons why she and Dickens lived apart.

"Byron's wife disapproved of his poetry. She thought that for a lord to write poetry was a waste of time. She would constantly break into Byron's study and ask him to put his silly rhymes aside.

"Once Byron had an admiring friend in the house and he hurried this friend into his sanctum and began to read 'Cain' out loud. While he was reading Lady Byron ran into the room.

"'Oh,' she said. 'Oh, do I disturb you, Byron?'

"'Yes,' replied the poet, and he continued his reading, and his wife withdrew.

"Writers' wives, as a rule, don't like their husbands' work. I think they are jealous of it."

President's Greeting to Old Friend.

When the Washington's birthday exercises at the Philadelphia Academy of Music had closed President Roosevelt was leaving the stage at the side of Provost Harrison, followed by the other distinguished guests with stately mien and solemn air, each profoundly impressed with the dignity of the occasion. The president suddenly espied Prof. Samuel McCune Lindsay of the university, modestly ensconced behind one of the wings. Breaking away from the astonished provost the president rushed up to the professor with the exclamation: "Hello, old boy. By Jove, I'm glad to see you!" and gave him a handgrasp which made him wince with pain. He then returned to the side of the provost and the procession proceeded.

Yield Skin to Save Child.

Sixty-one young men in Kansas City are voluntarily furnishing skin that the life of Clarence Crawford, 3 years old, may be saved. They are members of the freshman class of the University Medical college, and the child is the son of B. H. Crawford, who lives sixty miles from Beaver, in Oklahoma. The child recently fell into a kettle of boiling soap and one arm was badly burned. The boy was brought to Kansas City, where the doctor declared skin-grafting necessary. Already sixteen members of the class have surrendered eighty-six pieces of cuticle, and grafting is now one-third done. Every day a fresh man is placed on the operating table and his body relieved of from two to three pieces of skin.

For Systematic Scientific Research

Prof. Pearson, the English scientist, has been considering the suggestion of Prof. Simon Newcomb looking to the systematization of scientific research by organizing investigators into what might be termed battalions. Dr. Pearson says that what science needs at present is to get rid of most of its data and investigators with brains enough to interpret what is left. "At least 50 per cent of the observations made and the data collected," says Prof. Pearson, "is worthless, and no man, however able, could deduce any result from them at all. In engineer's language, we need to 'scrap-heap' about 50 per cent of the products of nineteenth century science."

Justice to Theater Owners.

Dr. Darlington, commissioner of the New York board of health, makes the interesting suggestion that if the owners of the ten theaters in that city which Chief Croker says ought to be rebuilt were driven to that trifling expense the city would in justice have to reimburse them for the $15,000, or $20,000 each which they have spent since that time last year on improvements and alterations ordered by the board of health for the ostensible purpose of making the houses safe. There are no quasi public buildings in New York upon which so much money has been spent as on the theaters.

He Cheered Me Oft.

"His words have cheered me oft," they said,
As he in peace was lying,
With folded hands upon his bed,
Beyond the stress of dying.
He had no art to gather gold.—
He loved too well his brother—
But, "Much I loved him!"—thus they told
Their thought to one another.

My Father, through this life of mine
Lead through the valley lowly;
Though half unwrit's the thought divine
That thou has whispered wholly,
Yet when I die, and visions soft
Through my long sleep are pressing,
Let fond hearts say, "He cheered me oft."—
I ask no other blessing.

Would Have Divorce Cases Private.

A member of the British parliament has announced that he intends to introduce a bill making radical alteration of the procedure in divorce cases. The chief feature will provide that such proceedings shall no longer be held in public. He holds that the public does not benefit materially by having details of divorce cases published in the newspapers, and that, on the other hand, public morality loses a good deal.

Playhouses of the Past

An interesting picture of the stage of our forefathers was drawn by Sir Henry Irving during an address delivered in Bath, England, at the unveiling of a memorial tablet to James Quin. After his retirement in 1751, Quin lived in Bath for fifteen years. He had been an actor for more than thirty-five years. For more than half that period he had held his own against all competitors until the advent of David Garrick, who reformed the stilted style of declamation then in vogue.

"Theatrical audiences in those days," said Mr. Irving, "must have been rather 'fearful wildfowl,' and often exacting more when they were pleased than when they were angry. There was always a danger that they would tear up the benches, or that some of them would rush upon the stage and deliver a general assault and battery. On one occasion, when Rich was attacked by a drunken nobleman, Quin saved his life by some vigorous swordplay.

"The actor's vocation then was full of stirring variety. Quin was a man of the readiest wit, and he is said to have employed it successfully in telling stories to an audience to prevent them from rioting when he was waiting for some royal patron who had forgotten the time. Walpole tells us that Quin was pressed to play the part of Hamlet in 'Hamlet'—a part he considered beneath him—would make a fine, but, 'I won't catch cold for the Ghost,' says Walpole, 'is a ridiculously dressed, with a morsel before and only a "black and breech behind.'

"The story how Quin kicked James Thomson, whom he found in prison for a debt of £7, is an illustration of the actor's humor. He ordered supper and a good deal of claret—and when the bill was going round he said, with humor, 'It is time we should see accounts.'

"The unfortunate author, already alarmed at this remark, took him for another creditor.

"'Mr. Thomson,' said Quin, 'my pleasure—I have had in reading—works—I cannot estimate at less than £100—and I insist on acquitting the debt.' And he laid down the money and walked out another word."

Whale Fought Ocean Liner

The Pacific Mail Company's liner Acapulco, which arrived early yesterday morning from Panama and way ports, had an exciting experience with a whale off San Blas. The leviathan, floating high out of the water, was enjoying a morning nap and giving its tough hide a sunbath, when the Acapulco came along.

The lookout sighted the whale and called the attention of the man at the wheel to the slumbering mountain of flesh that floated directly in the liner's path. The quartermaster, who was steering, gave the spokes of the wheel a twist and the Acapulco's head sheered off a little. A collision was avoided, but the Acapulco's side grazed the starboard shoulder of the big fish and jarred the whale from slumberland.

The whale was fully awake before the liner had entirely passed. He awoke in a bad temper and made a furious rush at the Acapulco. The whale found the distance dreams a pretty solid sort of undaunted by his failure, head through the steel plates, and freed himself for another charge.

He struck the steamer on the stern, and as he bounced off at the retreating hull with Then one more rush. The whale found his match, for the rapidly revolving propeller lashed a wildering succession of upper his lower jaw. With a spiteful flance, the leviathan dived and appeared and the people of the Acapulco saw him no more. Chief Bailey interviewed the quartermaster who had avoided the whale by a narrow margin, and exchanged heart-to-heart sailor talk, by which the steersman in future to be "Not ling whales lie."—San Francisco

Address to Japanese Dead

At a Shinto service recently performed in honor of the spirits of the dead who fell in the siege of Port Arthur the task of speaking the invocation (saimon) was performed by Gen. Nogi. He read the following: "This day, the 14th of the first month of the thirty-eighth year of Meiji, I, Nogi Kiten, commander of the third army, with these my comrades, observing due ceremony, offer reverence to you, spirits of officers and soldiers of the third army who have died for your country. More than 210 days have passed since the army landed on the Kwantung peninsula, and throughout all that time you bravely and stoutly fought. You gave your lives to the points of the enemy's weapons. Many a one of you perished amid raging waves and ing storms. But your valiant were not in vain.

"If we have seen the enemy's ships completely destroyed in the bors of Port Arthur, if we have his fortresses fall, it has been truth through the might your kind you. We, your comrades should have shared your life, as recipients of a most gracious sage from his majesty the emperor-in-chief.

"Here, entering Port Arthur stand on places overlooking the the rivers, the fortifications the loyal blood has dyed. Noble with due rites of purification fering we invoke your presence among us, we pray you, and our reverence."

Might Have Brought More

The Rev. Caleb Bradley, for many years the pastor of the First Parish Church of Westbrook, Me. (now a part of Portland), was a wit, and the stories that were told of his apt retorts and funny sayings would fill a volume. Parson Bradley, as he was called, was born in Dracut, Mass., in 1772, and went to Maine soon after his graduation from Harvard in 1798, and ever lived on the road from Portland to Stroudwater, at what is now known as Bradley's Corner.

After retiring one Sunday night in his later years a loud knocking was heard at the door. Upon opening it the parson was addressed by two young men, who informed him that they had been gambling that day at a nearby hotel and had won money. They further stated that conscience had troubled them on their way home, and they called him up to ask if he would accept the money, at the same time tending a bag well filled with

The good man took the bag and quired how long they had been ning it, and on receiving the "About two hours," exclaimed blunt way: "Hum! About the length as one of my sermons gambling pays better than preaching." As the young men turned to their guilty consciences the parson added: "But why you play longer?"

Preference of Uncle John

A number of stories are related concerning a quaint old man, "Uncle John" Berry of Holderness. One in particular is connected with a "series" of meetings at the Holderness Meeting House, conducted by a pastor from a neighboring town. The preacher was accompanied by members of his congregation, who assisted in the services. Among these were a Mr. and Mrs. Smith. "Uncle John" took much interest in the meetings, and, having an eye for feminine charms, became especially interested in Mrs. Smith, whose singing seemed to lend a potent charm to the services.

One night the pastor, having no conveyance, rode to Holderness Mr. Smith, the latter's wife at home. On arriving at the house, Smith was met by a neighbor who owed him a small sum, and paying it, said: "Here's fifty for bringing the minister."

"Uncle John" overheard the ation, and was not slow in his astonishment: "Did I get a half-dollar for bringing the he asked.

"Didn't you hear what he replied Smith.

"Well," said the old man, "I'll er gin you fifty cents to feed your wife."—Boston Herald.

Landing of the Pilgrim

The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast,
And the woods against a stormy sky
Their giant branches tossed.
And the heavy night hung dark
The Hills and waters o'er,
When a band of exiles moored their bark
On the wild New England shore.

Not as the conqueror comes,
They the true-hearted came;
Not with the roll of the stirring drums
And the trumpet that sings of fame;
Not as the flying came,
In silence and in fear
They shook the depths of the desert gloom.

Amidst the storm they sang,
And the stars heard, and the sea;
And the sounding aisles of the dim woods rang
To the anthem of the free.
The ocean eagle soared
From his nest by the white wave foam;
And the rocking pines of the forest roared—
This was their welcome home!

What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?
They sought a faith's pure shrine!
Aye, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod;
They have left unstained what there they found,
Freedom to worship God.

refused to glow, or she glowed tardily and purely for her own amusement. Dolly was capricious. Repeatedly she changed the dinner hour, and defeating me at every turn, appointed a dinner hour to suit herself. She despised me for my lack of experience. The more eager I became, the more stolidly indifferent she. Spitefully she burned my fingers. Dolly was never cozy. Her tea kettle never sang like Jewel's tea kettle. She objected to my dining functions. She had no sympathy whatever with the sentiment of birthdays and their attendant festivities. Whenever I snatched from her malicious embrace the charred remains of what promised so well until intrusted to her vindictive care, she gloated over my failure and consequent distress. Dolly and I invariably failed on our bread. If the bread was sour, then spitefully she baked it to perfection. At other times she incinerated it, or she floated it over the sides of the pan—anything to reflect upon my efficiency. Dolly and I fought bitterly for many months and I now and then victorious, but seldom.

Dolly was emphatically opposed to my literary pursuits. If, after giving her a task to perform, I took up my book for a few moments of mental refreshment, she blazed up in the liveliest manner. When she suspected I had my pen in hand, then she did her worst. I recall an experience with her when we cooked prunes. After placing the prunes over the fire in my bright new saucepan I invoked the muse in an adjoining room. Dolly had doubtless noted the room. Dolly had doubtless noted the preoccupied expression of my eyes as I consigned the new saucepan and its contents to her care. No sooner was my back turned than she and the clock and the prunes entered into a conspiracy, the details of which are too harrowing to relate. The prunes expanded, the clock hands raced around the dial, the fire fanned itself into a fury—and smoke, cinders and ruin were the combined result. Daring Dolly to foil me thus, I prepared the second instalment of fruit, and in my sole remaining stewpan placed the consignment to her care. Again, as soon as my back was turned, Dolly steamed up more fiercely than ever, and the fragrance of parched fruit called me from the land of dreams to the land of realities. Such insubordination was not to be tolerated, and the third invoice of prunes was placed in my preserving kettle, the one with the sacred porcelain lining. The details are not pleasant to remember, much less to relate, for again Dolly emphasized her disapproval of my literary proclivities. Dolly mutinied once too often. This was many years ago.

Since Dolly's day domestic science has invaded the culinary realm. The Fire King is a gas range, and he is a development from Dolly's failures. He represents progress, and he aims toward the solution of the servant problem. He challenges the intelligence of the expert. Brain has driven out brawn, and calmly superior to the perplexities of the past, he extends his hand to the domestic scientist with the silent assurance that he will make rough paths smooth. He is in sympathy with the technic of cookery. He understands high sounding and scientific terms. He knows about proteids and carbohydrates, and he knows bacteria and a thousand things unheard of in Jewel's time. He is a masculine invader in the realm of feminine inefficiency. How "ol' black mammy" would scoff!

The kitchen has changed, too. The domain of the Fire King is no thoroughfare. The children find no responsive smile on his face, no glow that reflects in their own faces. He is no inspiration to the story telling, that was a feature of Jewel's reign in the evening when the work of the day was done. Even the bread and the pies and the cookies are no longer made as they were in Jewel's day. When did the Fire King ever achieve a gingerbread man. Whoever called him the altar of home? How "ol' black mammy" would scoff! What would she do without the home sentiment of which her kitchen stove was a regular inspirer! There is but little sentiment in science, and it is from the well of sentiment that the tax on civilization is drawn.—Haryot Holt Dey, in Woman's Home Companion.

THE LOON.

Some of the Peculiarities for Which This Bird Is Noted.

The loon differs from other birds in a number of ways. I have reason to think that many people are unaware of some, at least, of those peculiarities. The loon has a hide as tough as an ox, and its feathers can not be plucked without first scalding the bird as you would a hog. This incident will give some idea of the toughness of the hide. About thirty-five years ago, when I was living in Michigan, a loon was shot at with a shotgun industriously all summer, without apparently doing him any harm. In the fall I killed him with a rifle, just to convince the people that a loon could be shot and killed. He had many times been shot at with a rifle by the same people who had used a shotgun, and they had become convinced that he dove so quickly that he dodged the shot in that way. I had seen them shoot at him a number of times, and I could see the splash of bullet or shot in the water before the loon dove. I ridiculed the idea of the dodging, and that led to my shooting him to support my contention. When I skinned the bird I found and counted over a hundred No. 6 shot, all of them stuck to the inside of the hide, and so doing him no permanent harm. It is remarkable that he was never hit in the eye, nor sustained a broken wing.

Another thing peculiar to the loon is that after the chicks are hatched, if the mother wishes to move far she will make a shallow dive and come up under her babies and swim off with them on her back. The person that succeeds in photographing her under such conditions may well claim the pennant. Only once have I seen a loon shoulder her young, although for over twenty years I lived in the part of Michigan where then there was the best chance imaginable to watch loons. Now the timber has been cut off around most of the lakes and such favorable conditions for observation no longer exist.

Although I have only once seen a loon shoulder her babies, I have seen her swimming with them on her back many times. Once one swam within twenty feet of me and never suspected my presence.

One of their calls when sitting on the water, for volume beats that of any other bird or beast that I know of. I have heard them in the night when they were more than five miles distant, for they only make that kind of call from the water, and there was no lake in that direction short of that distance. To say that the loon is a very interesting bird is as mild as I can express it.—Correspondence in Forest and Stream.

A DEEP WATER MAN.

For This Reason He Didn't "Scare" When the Boat Hit a Sandbar.

Captain Coomers had sailed over all the seven seas and the mighty bay of Penobscot. Therefore he felt only contempt for the little bug-shaped steamer that carried passengers from the mainland to the island resorts, which at that time were just beginning to have a summer population. This was in the days when all good sailing men looked on steam craft as mere landsman's toys. Their contempt was warranted by the habits of the Belle of breaking down in midchannel, of steering off her course in a wind, and of staying at dock discreetly when there was any "considerable breeze of air."

In one passage across the bay she fell foul of a current that pushed her upon a sandbank. The passengers began to run for the boats and hunt in impossible places for life preservers. Capt. Coomers sat on deck, his big frame supported by a camp stool, and his "game leg" stretched on another camp stool. He sat still while the others, crew and passengers, were rushing about in futile activity. He looked at the strip of island, then out at the bay, then at the sky. Then he rested his chin on his chest and studied the deck planking.

A passenger ran up to him and cried: "Oh, captain, we are wrecked!"

"Hum?"

"We are wrecked."

"Be we?"

"Is there any danger?"

"Hum?"

"Are we going to sink?"

"Not fur in this water."

"Are you sure? I'm afraid we—we shall all be drowned!"

"Not if you're more'n four feet high."

The passenger seemed satisfied at last and went away. Capt. Coomers resumed his gaze at the deck. Presently another passenger saw him.

"Oh, captain, I'm so glad you're here!"

"So be I."

"Think there's any danger?"

"I ain't seen any."

"Of course we—we aren't far from shore?"

"No. We're as near as two lovers on a slopin' sofa."

"You take it coolly!"

"Well, you see I've been wrecked off Cape Horn and I was in a boat that was chawed up by a whale. I don't puppus to get my boots wet out o' any sech land vehicle as this here."—Youth's Companion.

Might Have Been Suspected.

An elderly, well dressed citizen halted in front of a shop door in Market street Monday night and waited placidly for a car. A few feet above his head an iron framework creaked and from the framework fluttered a fringe of canvas which announced that magazines, periodicals, cigars and tobacco were sold within. It was an exposed spot. Other people who were also waiting, were huddled around the corner of the building, but the subject of this sketch stood his ground, apparently contented with his surroundings, although the snow was sifting down on him at a furious rate and piling up on his hat and shoulders. "That's what comes of having a good name," said an amused observer, pointing at the solitary figure. "That man doesn't know they've taken in that awning for the winter. He sees that flapping border there and thinks he's protected. All last summer he stationed himself there and kept out of the wet, but he hasn't noticed that they've reefed the canopy and he'll never notice it unless he's told. He's near-sighted. But he has no bad habits and so he excites no suspicion. If I stood under that skeleton of an awning three minutes everybody would pity me and somebody would come up and offer to help me home."—Providence Journal.

BATHS FOR THE INSANE.

WATER TREATMENT AT NEW YORK STATE HOSPITAL SUCCESSFUL.

Enables the Physicians in Charge to Do Away With Sedatives or Mechanical Restraint for the Patients When in Strong Delirium.

By the systematic use of various forms of hot and cold baths, jets and douches and vapor and hot air baths, the Manhattan State Hospital West, on Ward's Island, of which Dr. Emmet C. Dent is superintendent, has been enabled to do away entirely with sedatives of mechanical restraint for the patients, even when violently demented or in strong deliriums. This hospital, the first public institution in the country to adopt hydrotherapy as a recognized part of its course of treatment, has been experimenting and tabulating the results for some time, until Dr. Dent announces that there is absolutely no question as to the marked benefit to patients from this branch of the treatment.

Forms of "water treatment" are in use on Ward's Island, which have been tried nowhere else in this country, notably the "continuous bath," for patients in violent delirium. The patient, placed in a bathtub of water at exactly blood heat, is kept there under observation by experienced nurses and the physicians for hours, —for days, if necessary—until the delirium has abated. In one case it was found necessary to keep the patient immersed in the water for fourteen days. She came out of the dilirium, and under other branches of the treatment recovered from her dementia. Where physicians used to estimate that the death rate from such cases was about 60 per cent, now the physicians at the Manhattan State Hospital expect to save every patient under delirium, unless some other form of insanity or physical disease sets in.

This hydrotherapy is only one detail of a general scheme of treatment worked out by Dr. Dent which is being taken up gradually by other institutions. The patients no longer subject to constraint are kept outdoors in tents and pavilions. They are first examined carefully by Dr. George B. Campbell and the nurses, who then from the data map out a plan of treatment. If the patient is violent it may be the continuous bath of lukewarm water. It may be the Scotch douche, under various pressures, or sitz baths, or needle baths, or sprays, or warm or cold packs, or drip sheet baths, or hot air cabinet treatment, or even a bath of carbon dioxide, singly or in any combination. The patients walk about the grounds, work in well ventilated, light workshops at light occupations, take sewing lessons, practice gymnastics and play games and dance.

A New York Tribune reporter, taken to see "some of the most violent patients," found in a couple of large light pavilion shelters some twenty or thirty women, some abed, others sitting at small tables in the pavilion or in chairs in the bright sunshine outside, talking to the nurses or one another. Little in their appearance indicated derangement.

"We've had them absolutely unconfined this way for a long time now," declared Dr. Campbell, "and have not had one misfortune. Of course, it requires the courage of our convictions, for if some one should run amuck or try to swim the river her friends would say that we should have confined her."

The apparatus for the hydriatic treatment is in several rooms in the receiving pavilion. In the largest one are two bathtubs, so connected with steam pipes and thermometers that the water can be kept at any desired degree of heat with absolute accuracy. Across the room is a large marble platform with two hose nozzles, looking not unlike standpipes attachments. These nozzels are connected with hot and cold water pipes so that any desired degree of heat can be obtained, registered accurately by thermometer attachments, and any degree of pressure may be obtained, registered by scales at the operator's hand. In one corner of the room is a contrivance for shower, spray and needle baths at any temperature. In all, the hospital has eight tubs. Hot air baths and vapor baths are adminstered in cabinets. Sitz baths and hot and cold packs are another important part of the treatment.

Dr. Dent does not claim any credit for the discovery of hydrotherapy, which dates, he says, from the time of Hippocrates, Celsus and Galen. The present methods have been worked out along the lines indicated by Dr. Baruch. Said Dr. Dent.

While I do not pretend to offer any new observations on the application of water as a therapeutic agent, the results I have obtained have been most gratifying and confirm those of many prominent authorities on this subject. I find that when water is properly applied in the form of packs and hot and warm full baths, it acts as a hypnotic and sedative, and is of great value when it is imprudent to administer drugs. The hot air cabinet in relieving pain without the depressive effects common to hypnotics and sedatives. It stimulates metabolism, promotes absorption and in unquestionably the most valuable eliminative agent we possess, and, when properly used possesses a sedative action on the nervous system obtained by no other remedy. Patients differ widely in their behavior under treatment, and for this reason every case requires careful physiologic study to determine the best cause to pursue. By careful technique alone can the best results be obtained. In many instances harm will result when a prescription is indifferently carried out.

OLD CHURCCH AT FORT GIBSON.

Historic Building in Indian Territory That Has Sheltered Well Known Americans.

An effort is now being made to preserve the "old church on the hill" at Fort Gibson, I. T., the oldest building in the Territory. This church was the old garrison church at Fort Gibson during all the early days at the West and was afterward used as a school-house, with Henry M. Stanley, then a young man, as the teacher.

The old building has been occupied continuously since 1832. Gen. Hazen while residing here was married and brought to the fort his bride, Miss McLean of Cincinnati, Ohio, now the wife of Admiral George Dewey. She is said to have been the most stylish woman who ever lived in Fort Gibson, and occupied the large stone building still standing on Garrison Hill. Many people in the old town remember her well.

Fort Gibson, the oldest town in Indian Territory, is rich in historic lore, much of which has been written but most of which is yet unrecorded. Settled shortly after the Louisiana Purchase, there was established a military post in 1819. Many notable and distinguished men have lived there, some now resting in the United States National Cemetery, about a mile from the old fort, where 2,459 soldiers are buried and where may be seen the names of a number of celebrated soldiers, scouts and warriors who figured years ago in border and Indian warfare.

Among the number is the noted Seminole chief Billy Bowlegs, who fought with Osceola at the battle of Wahoo Swamp, where Gen. Dade was killed and the American troops were routed. After the treacherous capture of Osceola Bowlegs joined the American army and was assigned the rank of Captain, a fact recorded on the tombstone at the head of his grave.

Stanley, the African explorer, at one time taught a subscription school at the fort, occupying the old frame building, still standing near the old public square.

Washington Irving, the noted American writer, visited Fort Gibson and wrote his "Tales of a Traveller," in a tent just outside the old parade ground on Garrison Hill.

In 1848 the poet Longfellow, on a tour of observation in the West, visited Fort Gibson by the way of the Arkansas and Grand rivers. Next year appeared the most loved of all his poems, "Evangeline," where scenery in the vicinity of Fort Gibson is graphically and beutifully described.

The "oldest church in the Indian Territory" is of hewn logs which have been covered with boards. Before its spacious fireplace, still in use, many notables have warmed themselves—Gens. Scott, Taylor, Jeff Davis, Robert E. Lee, McClellan and others. Gen. Taylor lived in the old house with his family, including his daughter, Miss Betty, who married Jeff Davis.—Fort Gibson Post.

London Weather Exhibited.

Those who are interested in the vagaries of the British climate—and who is not?—should pay a visit to the library of the Institute of Civil Engineers at Westminster. The Royal Meteorological Society has organized an exhibition of a little of everything in the way of mechanical appliances for obtaining reliable records of not only the pressure, temperature, and rainfall on the surface, but also of deep-sea and earth temperatures, seismic disturbances, observations by self-registering instruments sent up by means of ballons and strange looking kites into the upper air regions, and an endless variety of other things. The most realistic exhibit is in the form of a life-size model of a man who was fearfully injured by a lightning stroke, his clothes being torn into tatters. In addition to the assortment of barometers, thermometers, rain-guages, and other instruments, ancient and modern, there are numbers of photographs of all sorts of lightning flashes, of cloud and other phenomena in the antartic seas, and so on. What the ordinary visitor will fail to find is the curious telescope through which some have supposed, but very erroneously, that the forecasters at the Meteorological Office look out for the weather coming from the moon.—London Tit-Bits.

Mr. Linton's Aphrodite.

America, which exports its native beauties as wives for the European aristocracy, has just imported a Greek Venus. The happy owner, Mr. Linton of New York, regards it as a masterpiece of Praxiteles, and New York society is worshipping at its feet. Envious critics, of course, throw doubts on the antiquity of the statue, and recall the too-famous case of the "tiara of Saitapharnes," which, though really a modern production, was bought by the Louvre as an antique a few years ago. Michael Angelo did not disdain to hoax the connoisseurs of his day by burying a broken statue and allowing the friend who dug it up to suppose that he had found an antique masterpiece, until the sculptor produced the missing limb in his own studio. Perhaps some clever Italian or Greek is hoaxing Mr. Linton, for less honest reasons.—London Chronicle.

GOOD ROADS.

How Good Roads Pay.

IN an article in the Bulletin of the American Geographical Society there is a discussion by A. P. Brigham of "Good Roads in the United States," in which the estimated handicap of the people of Maryland due to bad roads is $3,000,000 a year. On dirt roads the cost of transporting a ton a mile is twenty-five cents, while on railways it is three-fourths of a cent or less. By water the rate varies from one-fourth to one-twelfth of a cent. The ocean rate is one-fifth of the canal route, one-fifteenth of the railway rate and one-five-hundredth of the country road rate.

Railway rates improve, but dirt road rates never do, says the Baltimore Sun. In 1865, for example, the cost per ton mile on the New York Central Railway was 2.4 cents, while in 1893 the cost was only seven-tenths of a cent, showing a large deduction; but the preliminary haul to the railway station over a dirt road costs as much as ever. By making a good road for the farmer the State may reduce the cost per ton mile of hauling freight from twenty-five cents to eight cents, thus saving the farmer seventeen cents per mile.

In New Jersey it is found that on improved roads a team hauls four or five tons, against one ton on an unimproved road. At $3 a day for man and team this means a saving of from $9 to $12 for a ten-mile haul. Good roads justify long distance hauling by team, which is worth while in the case of perishable produce and furniture likely to be injured by the delays and rough handling of the railways.

In Belgium wagons carry freight sixty to seventy miles. In this country the roads are generally such as to restrict the market for many articles. It is said to be as cheap to take freight by rail from California to the Atlantic as to convey farm produce over dirt roads to Raleigh, N. C., from farms only fifteen miles away. Naturally, farms made inaccessible by bad roads are worth less than those which enjoy good transportation facilities. Or, to put it differently, good roads enhance the value of farms, adding materially to the price for which they will sell.

Good roads, in effect, put money into the farmer's pocket, whether he retains his farm or sells it. What he pays in a road tax—if the road is improved by a trained engineer—is returned to him a dozen times over in the increased selling value of his property, to say nothing of the decreased cost of getting the hauling done. The road tax lifts other taxes.

Various gains accrue. The isolation of farm life and its dreariness vanish when communication is easy. If the farmer, his wife, sons and daughters can finish their day's work betimes and visit neighbors three miles away in the evening, or flit easily to town, they think better of rural life and are more disposed to hold on to "the old place." Schools, mails, shopping, social enjoyment—all are brought within easier reach by the improved road. But by "improved road" is meant a road made under the supervision or an engineer, not the product of undeveloped ideas.

Working for Wide Tires.

The Bureau of Road Inquiry of the United States Government has been making a study of the width of tires prescribed by local and national authorities in various parts of the world. In France every freighting and market cart, instead of injuring the highway, improves it. Many of the tires are ten inches wide. In the four-wheeled vehicles in that country the rear axle is fourteen inches longer than the fore, and as a result the rear wheels run in a line about an inch outside the level rolled by the front wheel. After a few loaded wagons have passed over a road the highway looks as if a steam roller had been at work. A national law in Germany prescribes that wagons heavily loaded must have tires not less than four inches wide. In Austria the minimum for similar vehicles is six and one-half inches; in Switzerland, six inches.

In a number of States in this country laws have been passed granting rebate of highway taxes to citizens who use on lumber wagons tires not less than three inches wide. On toll roads in Kentucky and several other States farmers hauling loads in wide-tired wagons are entitled to lower rates than those paid by the owners of narrow-tired vehicles.

At an experiment station it was demonstrated that it requires forty per cent. more power to draw a load on a wagon drawn with one-and-one-half-inch tires than on one with a three-inch tire. With a Baldwin dynamometer careful tests were made with loaded wagons drawn over blue grass sward. In a wagon weighing 1000 pounds it was found that a load of 3428 pounds could be drawn on wide tires with the same force required to move 2000 pounds on narrow tires. Moreover, the wide tires did not injure the turf, while the narrow ones cut through it. In some parts of the country pioneers in the use of wide tires have had to stand a good deal of ridicule. The manifest benefit to roads, however, soon changes public sentiment. The president of a leading wagon manufacturing company states that the demand for wide tires is increasing every year. Another company in the same line of business conducted a series of tests, using a Fairbanks dynamometer carefully calibrated, and was convinced that on very hard roads the preference, so far as draft is concerned, is for narrow tires. In the effect upon the roads, however, wide tires have the advantage.

COUNTY RECORDS.

Judge Reynolds has been "cleaning house" in the Record Room, and has vastly improved the looks of it, and the various books are so arranged now that any desired information can be obtained with comparative ease. Some of the old and important records are in bad condition, notably the "Field Notes." There is also some complaint of errors in this book. We were in the Record Room a few days since when an attorney from Prattville came in for some information which is supposed to be supplied by the "Tract Book," but the entries have not been made, and judging from the books one would think half of Chilton county was public lands yet. Our Board of County Commissioners should take these matters in hand and have the records brought up to date, and then keep them that way. The records of our county pertaining to lands, etc., can't be too well looked after.

OUR COUNTY AFFAIRS.

It seems as if Chilton county should get a move on her and provide rooms for the various county officials. For instance, Tax Assessor Mims has to hire an office in town away from the court house, there being no room for him in the building. Then our county officers' accounts with the county should be examined by an expert, especially those that have been let out of office, as a simple matter of justice to them; if everything is found correct say so, thus giving them an honorable discharge, as it were; or vice versa. There seems to be a general impression that the State Examiners in their periodical visits do this work, but they don't. Their sole duty is to see that the State gets what is coming to her; that's all. Their duty ends there. Read the article headed "Illegal Payments" and see how Marengo county's officials come out.

ILLEGAL FEES.

Below is an extract from the report of State Examiner Sedberry on the officials of Marengo county, as to their accounts with THE county. NOT the one a daughter on May the 1st. though it names ex-sheriff Glass, applies to the sheriff of every county in the state that has made similar charges for such work.

A very full article on the examiner's report is in the Advertiser of May 3d.

"I examined the accounts of ex-Sheriff Glass from November 3, 1898, to September 1 1900, the date of his retirement from office. I find that all fees and forfeitures collected by him have been properly paid to the County Treasurer.

"I further find that ex-sheriff Glass owes the county the sum of $298 for money wrongfully received by him as fees, said items being included in bills allowed by the Court of County Commissioners for waiting on the Circuit Court, County Court Probate Court, Commissioners' Court, habeas corpus and preliminary hearings.

"The law does not provide authorize or charge against the county for any of the above services. I therefore charge them back to Mr. Glass who I am sure ought to be required to reimburse the county for the amount so received by him.

"I respectfully refer your honor to 30th Southern Reporter pp. 453, Torbert vs. Hale County, which I think settles this question. Detailed statement of the amount due by Mr. Glass will be found in exhibit 'H' hereto appended."

Jackson, Walker and other counties have had their county accounts examined with manifest benefit to the tax payer.

COUNTY COURT.

The regular session of the county court was held on Monday, Judge L. H. Reynolds presiding. The following cases were disposed of: Lonnie Kidd (col.) charge, "temporary use of property," found guilty and fined $20.00 Glenny Harris (col.) charge, "resisting an officer," waived to grand jury. Jesse Avery, charge, "abusive language," etc., waived. Jesse Benson, two cases, "concealed weapons" and "abusive language," both waived. Geo. Phillips, charge, "embezzlement," continued to Thursday. Pink Carter, charge, "selling or removing mortgaged property," dismissed for want of prosecution.

THE MEETING AT GRANDPA'S.

Dear Editor:

Please allow me a little space in your valuable columns. Mrs. Lizzie Johnson, of Coosa county, visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Baker, near Clanton last Sunday. This visit caused a general gathering of relatives, children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. There were in all 63 present, which is about one-third of the family. Who can beat this for a large family? At 12 o'clock all sat down to a bountifully furnished table of good things to eat, among which was a large dish of river fish, and turtle pie, provided by J. J. Gailman as a result of his fishing trip to the Coosa river. In the afternoon, all engaged in a family singing, using the old "Christian Harmony." Wishing success and prosperity to this large family, THE UNION and its numerous readers. Respectfully,

A GRANDSON-IN-LAW.

BEAT NINE ITEMS.

We've been having some very wet weather; therefore the farmers are badly behind in their work. G. D. Collins made a business trip to Clanton Friday. W. H. Wilson attended the State S. S. convention at Birmingham last week as a delegate from Cedar Grove. Messrs. Lee and Felix Wilson, of Double Springs, are visiting their brother, W. H. Wilson. They say they like this county fine and will probably spend a couple of months down here. Rev. Joe Gibson and J. W. Hayes went to Coleanor Saturday, returning Monday. Although the weather was bad, there was a large crowd at the District S. S. convention at New Salem Sunday. As ye writer is somewhat "in the grass" and news is rather scarce, I'll bid you "au revoir."

NIM-ROD

THORSBY LETTER.

The Golbin family, who recently arrived from Mt. Horeb, Wis., is living in the Hedberg home. We are glad to welcome them to Thorsby. The State Sunday School Convention held at Birmingham last week is reported to have been the best ever held. Over 600 delegates were enrolled and 52 counties were represented. During the meetings $2,700 was collected for State work. Chilton County offered to raise $25 of this amount. When our Sunday Schools contribute to State work let us hope that the amount will double if not treble $25. In spite of the bad weather on Sunday the Beat Sunday School Convention at New Salem church was very well attended. The next Beat Convention will be held on the next fifth Sunday at Thorsby. Miss Hilma Malmgren, a nurse at the St. Vincent hospital in Birmingham, was a welcome visitor here last week. Miss Dora Thorson, who is employed as stenographer and notary public in Calera, is home on a short vacation. Dr. F. R. Lubright, of Calera, was a welcome visitor here Saturday. Miss Jessie Horn, who has Wambem will regret to learn that he been in Birmingham for some time has returned home. Friends of Lewis died the Sunday after returning to the north. The family has the deepest sympathy of the entire community. Mr. Henning Strot and Mr. Oscar Bullander, of Rockford, Ill., who have been visiting here with Mr. Johnson, have returned to the north. While here Mr. Strot purchased the Lundene farm. Rev. Moses, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., is spending several weeks in Thorsby. Mrs. S. E. Norton is spending a short visit with Mrs. McConaughey, of Montevallo. The Paulson home is almost completed and will soon be occupied. Call at A. M. Johnson's to see fine strawberries. Miss Anna Howard entertained several of her lady friends at her home on the 3rd inst. Mr. Olaf Schive has taken over the A. Malmgren jewelry and watch making business. Mr. Malmgren will go up north for two or three months and visit his old friends, but he still has considerable real estate in Thorsby and will very likely return in the fall.

"TWO OF US."

STANTON.

We had a nice time here on the 21st of April. Mr. Joe Melton and Miss Eula Fitts were married by Bro. John Johnson. The happy pair have gone to Dallas Co. to live. Thomas Mitchel, Trell Moore, Clyde Harris and Wm. Weaver were visitors of R. L. Barrett Sunday. Albert Weaver and wife, who visited J. P. Barrett last week, are back and report all well up there. R. L. Barrett and son, John, went to Selma to see John's wife, who is in the infirmary there, and report her doing well. There was a large crowd at Alpine on Sunday and plenty to eat. I think Observer is mistaken about stock law. I'm a renter and I don't have to split rails, but if I lived over in Dallas county under stock law I'd have to pay a dollar a head per month for a pasture. I was in Mississippi about a year ago and traveled some 500 miles through stock law country, and you have to pay for pasture there. Those that want stock law should remember the trouble that the hog law made around Thorsby. Hurrah for G. W. Jones and with best wishes to THE UNION.

"WASH BOY."

LOMAX.

Please allow me space to warm up Observer a little. He has a ditch to his 3-foot fence, so I wouldn't like my stock to be tempted. I don't wonder at people charging you 10 cents per 100 for rail timber. When you try to make us think stock law would benefit us. I'd charge you 20 cents, and then wonder if I hadn't ought to ask you more. Why did you buy land without any timber with the idea that you could make our people think stock law was good for them? You had better buy you a lot of timber, now while you can get it. I've seen a good many renters in Elmore Co. and none of them had any pasture; they just roped their stock out. Have you any idea how much water a cow will drink in 24 hours? I don't think you do, or you wouldn't say let's have stock law. We'd have to rope them twice a day to take them to water, as over two-thirds of us have any running water in dry weather. There don't seem to be many that want stock law judging from the way the letters read. As to the two neighbors in half mile of me who come from Chambers county, they went back there once and came again, and that ought to prove to Chilton county she is better off without stock law. Observer speaks of 12 from stock law counties; they must have come from the garden spot of Chambers, for I've seen several from that county that don't give stock law much credit. Some say they've seen pastures where the stock had eaten all the leaves of the bushes as far as they could reach. I've met three men that have made a few trips from Alabama to Georgia. Two of them say they saw pastures where every green leaf was eaten. The other one hadn't much to say either way. He didn't care. He had plenty of land. Mr. Observer, don't you think you are better off now than when you was in Chambers? If you are you should give Chilton the credit for not having stock law. If you haven't prospered do you think you are competent to advise us? I like to see sharp men, but when such things as stock law come up, Observer and I should both keep quiet, while the old white headed men explain to us why we don't need stock law. I can point out four men that came from Chambers county. One went back, two of them rent farms near me, and the fourth one went to a cotton mill. We don't bite at every new thing that comes along in the shape of stock law. When you buy land get some timber with it, even if it is old field pines.

Respectfully,

G. W. JONES.

RANDOLPH.

Prospect for grass is fine. Some of our early cotton planters have had to plant over. The recent showers are making fine gardens. Mrs. J. L. Thomas, of Jemison, on her return from Active, spent Thursday night with relatives here. John Ware, who is overseer of Maj. Howison's "Duff Farm," was with us Sunday. Evangelist B. H. Barton, of Philadelphia, Pa., spent Sunday night in town. T. L. Elam and wife, of Maplesville, were in town Thursday. Robert Kincade, of Mulberry, was a welcome visitor Thursday. James Wright and Mrs. Laura Franklin, of Pleasant Grove, were among our visitors Friday. While we are not in the stock law discussion, we are pleased with the spirit displayed by "Observer." Miss Emma Hubbard, of Hubbard, was in town Friday. Robert Smitherman, of Gordo, was with us Monday. He is well pleased with Pickens. John S. Waldrup was a welcome caller last week. J. P. Atchison, the popular merchant of Macedonia, and F. J. Fitts were welcome visitors last week. THE UNION with its numerous letters is always a welcome visitor. Success to it and its readers.

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

BEAT FOUR.

A few words in reply to "Observer." He said he was keeping his cows up in a little patch. I guess he's having stock law all by himself, that is the way I like to see men do. When they want stock law just put up their stock and not say anything about stock law. Observer would have to pay for pines to make rails to fence pastures for his stock, the same as he does to fence against other people's stock. The farm would be as expensive to the renter as it is now, as he would have to fence pastures for his stock and therefore he would have to build about as much fence as he does now. I know five renters who live within a mile of me, and all oppose stock law; also six others within a mile of me that own farms and they are opposed to stock law. One of them said that the poorest stock and the scarcest milk and butter that he ever heard of was where they had stock law, and he moved here to get out of it. I claim stock law would be a downfall and disgrace to the human being, and also to the brute creation, because it would be a disgrace not to let stock eat the grass God made for them. As J. S. Jones says, "Observer has got his shovel in where there's no dirt." Hurrah for Mr. Jones. He is the kind I like to hear from on stock law.

"SCHOOL BOY."

ROCKY MOUNT.

The Chilton Co. Singing Convention met here April 30th in an all-day singing. The body was called to order at 10 a. m. by Pres. R. D. Durham. That beautiful hymn, "Blessed be the Name," was sung, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. M. Glasscock. The class was led during the morning by Prof. R. D. Durham, James Franklin, J. L. Gore, J. B. Northcutt and C. L. Glasscock. Mrs. J. L. Gore presided at the organ. At 12 o'clock a recess of an hour and a half was taken for dinner, which was heartily enjoyed by the 700 people present. The afternoon services were led by Professors R. D. Durham, A. H. Glasscock, J. B. Northcutt and J. L. Gore; Mrs. J. L. Gore and Miss Lizzie Lowery presided at the organ. Prof. Durham rendered two beautiful solos in his usual finished way, which were appreciated by all his hearers. The convention set the time and place for the Examining Committee consisting of Professors Durham, Gore, Veazey and Littlejohn, to meet and examine all who wish to teach vocal music, not holding a certificate of proficiency from some Institute—10 a. m. Saturday, May 27, at Thorsby, Ala. All members who can conveniently attend are requested to do so. The committee on resolutions composed of Messrs. E. G. Cofer, W. Gore and James Franklin, reported as follows: Resolved, That we, the members composing the Chilton Co. Singing Convention, assembled in all-day singing at Rocky Mount this day, hereby desire to express our thanks and appreciation to the good people of this place for the kindness and hospitality extended to us while in their midst. We shall always hold them in kindly remembrance. Be it further resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to the good people of Mulberry church and vicinity for the cordial invitation given us to meet with them at this time, and regret that circumstances were such that we could not avail ourselves of the opportunity this time, but trust to have that pleasure some time in the future. A collection of $1.06 was taken up. The convention then adjourned in order.

SECRETARY.

COOPER.

Everything quiet here, farmers are busy putting in their crops, and from the way they talk they won't have to buy much "hog and hominy" in 1906. About every man in this community belongs to the S. C. A. There are one or two who have never been anywhere and only crave to get rich quick, so they are excusable, I suppose. Say, what's become of that executive committee? I've not heard of anything they've done. Have they decided to wait until the meeting on May 6th? I suppose they'll all be there; most of them are hustlers. Come out, boys, on the 1st Saturday in May and you'll hear something that will do you good. I see there is some stir about stock law. Well, I can't discuss that question in a short article in a newspaper, but will say that I've had some experience with the thing and I think it is detrimental to the welfare of any community. It lowers the valuation of property; it causes our tenant farmers to leave us, and works hardship on all of us. I don't think the liberty loving people of this county will ever tolerate such a nefarious law as this to be put on an intelligent people. One more question, teachers, district trustees and school patrons, have you seen the Rules and Regulations adopted by the County Board of Education? If not, you should get one and read it and see how you like it. I think it is one of the worst cases of usurpation of power that I've ever known five men to delegate to themselves since the creation of man, and I'm surprised at some men having anything to do with such. Wishing you success, I am a

MACEDONIA.

B. H. Barton, of Pennsylvania, filled his appointment at our school house on April 29 and 30. The attendance was good. He is an earnest, forcible speaker and his audience seemed well pleased with his efforts. His last discourse was on the "Oath-bound Covenant." Respectfully,

W. R.

BESSIE.

Plenty of rain here. Several Mars Hill people went to Rocky Mount singing Sunday. E. G. Cofer has built him a new lot fence. Sunday school at the Freeman school house is doing nicely. A. J. Scott and family visited his brother, Fate, in Bibb last week. I wish to say to the people that I believe that stock law is just what we need. Success to THE UNION.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

R. F. Murphy was a welcome caller Saturday.

Dudley Collins and son were in Clanton Thursday.

R. G. Hall was in town Thursday.

A. Littleton was a visitor Thursday.

J. C. Dubose, a prominent farmer of Beat 2, was in Clanton one day last week.

R. F. D. No. 3, from Jemison, is ordered established. It has 85 houses and 385 population.

G. H. Massey and wife were in Clanton Thursday.

W. G. Culp was in town Thursday.

Tom Smith was a pleasant visitor Saturday.

W. P. Headley and wife were in Clanton Saturday.

J. M. Robinson, one of the solid men of Beat 10, was a pleasant visitor Monday.

E. J. Mims was a welcome caller Monday.

Z. S. Avery and daughter, Mrs. Viola Glasscock, and sons, J. W. and J. H., were in Clanton Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Avery are mightily pleased over the arrival of a son last Friday night. Sam says he has quit "courting" and is going to work for the baby "now and forever."

G. W. Pate and Lewis Littleton were in Clanton Monday.

Collector Hubbard and son, Munro, were in Clanton Monday.

G. W. Watson was in town Tuesday.

Tom Collins, of Calera, was a visitor Tuesday.

A. Malmgren, of Thorsby, was in Clanton Tuesday. He has sold out his business in that town and is going to take a well earned vacation and visit his friends in the great northwest.

Judge Reynolds went to Montgomery Tuesday to have his eyes treated.

C. L. Langston, John Brantley, E. N. Gothard, Doc Smith, E. G. Cofer and I. E. Edwards were all in town Saturday, and their testimony turned Reeves Gibson loose, "so now go home and don't do so any more."

Died, at the residence of her son, T. C. Marcus, near Lomax, on Saturday morning, Mrs. Elizabeth Marcus, aged 53 years. Interment took place in Clanton cemetery Saturday evening.

U. S. Dist. Attorney J. Sternfeld spent Tuesday in Chilton county. He is getting quite close to something that looks like "peonage."

Judge Reynolds performed the marriage ceremony that united J. R. Popwell and Miss Rhinie Collins one day last week before a crowd of interested spectators, among whom was the judge's wife, so the judge just shook hands with the young couple and wished them well. "So say we all of us."

J. F. Goodgame's term as marshal has expired and he has retired to private life. He made an excellent record in his short service, but the Government only allows a limited number of permanent deputy marshals.

MARRIAGE LICENSES.

EXCURSION TO PENSACOLA.

On Saturday a number of people went from Clanton to Pensacola on the L. and N. excursion, prominent among whom were Messrs. A. L. Foshee, C. C. Smith, W. D. Z. Foshee, John Littlejohn, L. C. Smith and Houston Massey. The historian of these particular few said they had a great time. They arrived in Pensacola about 5 a. m. Sunday and after breakfast visited the wharf, navy yard, Fort Barrancas, saw the floating dock that was taken from Spain in the late war, and then boarded the steamer Enterprise and made the tour of Uncle Sam's fleet. They went on board the Maine and inspected that vessel, finding out that she had 777 men and 48 guns on her. The party got back to Clanton Monday morning, tired but happy.

HOMER, LA.

Editor Union:

We had a big rain with a clash of wind on April 24. It leveled fences and tore Pink Owens' house and lot buildings into small pieces. No person was seriously hurt, however. I live here in the northwest part of Louisiana in the stock law, so voters, if you want to see poor cows and calves, and hear them hum, just let the stock law come. If you want to see poor hogs and hear them squeal, just put them up in some old field. If you want to see a man look sad, and to mad feel, let the roads get bad and they drive through the field. If you want lots of trouble, and very little fun, just vote for stock law and let it come. Success to THE UNION and its many readers.

The Way We Do Things.

Rev. F. B. Meyer says: "Knitting needles are cheap and common enough, but on them may be wrought the fairest designs in the richest wools. So the incidents of daily life may be commonplace in the extreme, but on them as the material foundation we may build the unseen but everlasting fabric of a noble and beautiful character. It does not so much matter what we do, but the way in which we do it matters [illegible]

MINUTES OF S. S. CONVENTION.

Of Beat 10 at Chestnut Creek, April 30th.

The convention was opened at 9 by devotional exercises led by Messrs. J. M. Curlee and H. W. Caffee. P. C. Dennis was elected chairman and Judson Strock secretary for the day. First subject on the program, "What Has the S. S. Done for Our County?" was ably discussed by Dr. Caffey, N. J. Calloway introduced the next subject with a good talk, "How Shall We Enlist the People in the S. S. Work?" which was discussed by Brethren Huckabee, Caffey, Henderson and S. M. Deason. The afternoon session was called to order at 1:45 and after devotional exercises a splendid paper was rendered by Miss Mellissa Howell. Messrs. Strock, Dennis, Caffey, Calloway and Jones made short talks. The last talk was made by Pastor Deason on "The S. S. as an Educational Force," in which he showed the S. S. as the great institution by which the people would be educated morally and religiously. The Beat was permanently organized by electing N. J. Calloway President and Wm. Wilson Secretary and Treasurer. There were present 36 delegates, representing 12 S. S., viz: Chestnut Creek, Cross Roads, Maple Springs, Verbena M. E., Verbena Baptist, Salem, Poplar Springs, Providence, Jemison Baptist, Jemison M. E., Marbury and Canaan. Although the day was rainy, the attendance was good. The people of the community entertained the delegates, and all seemed to enjoy the occasion. The interest shown in S. S. work was encouraging.

JUDSON STROCK,
Sec. Pro Tem.

COUNTY ALLIANCE MEETING.

On Friday, April 28, was a good gathering of delegates from all parts of the county. A great deal of business was transacted, the most important of which was the unanimous adoption of the report from the warehouse committee, which called for the erection, equipping and operating of a warehouse (capacity at least 2,000 bales of cotton); cotton ginnery (capacity at least 50 bales per day); cotton oil mill; and fertilizer mixer, all of which are to be thoroughly up to date in all respects. This same committee, which consists of W. H. Conway, Moses Robinson and A. G. Dake, were put in charge of all arrangements in regard to this enterprise, and A. G. Dake, who is County Business Agent for the Alliance, is authorized to open subscription books for the stock, and they will be ready by Saturday, May 6th, at the meeting of the S. C. A. at Clanton.

DISTRICT MEETING

To Be Held at Colling' Chapel, Friday and Saturday Before the Third Sunday in May:

Each church in the district is required to have representatives. Everybody is invited to attend. tf

CENTER HILL.

Here I am again. "Subscriber" said everything is doing well. I don't think so, because it rains all the time, and the grass is taking the day. I think "Observer" has got the wrong kind of cows. I'll sell him a cow that won't give "blue john milk," and he'll not have to go to the expense of keeping her up, either. S. W. is intending to make soap. I guess from the way he's getting in jugs the past week, so now look out for the soap wagon. I wish Mr. W. Y. Nix would state the price of his fine hogs that he advertises in THE UNION. One and all that want work well done, come to the new shop. Mrs. A. J. Lowery is quite ill. Dick Price has four boarders now. I'm glad to see Reese Gibson out again. Keep the "Golden Rule" and you'll always have friends.

"LITTLE BILL."

LOMAX.

Farmers are about done planting. Lee Vickers was here Saturday. A new store in Lomax is kept by J. P. Robinson. Rev. Lowery will preach here next Sunday at 11 a. m. Singing will begin at 9 a. m., led by R. F. Murphy. At 7 p. m. on Saturday there will be a public discussion here of the stock law question. Both sides of the question will be presented and everybody is invited to attend. I think J. S. Jones surely was joking, as he said that in Autauga county last year they had law suits about three days in each week. I think Autauga has too good a class of people to be engaged in law suits half of their time. Let us not joke, but handle this question from a business and economical standpoint.

BEAT FOUR.

I want to say a few words to "Observer." He wouldn't have any game and but little ammunition if he had stock law. I've been in stock law counties, and never heard a man say it was good policy, although I talked with many. While Observer has no rail timber there are 50 others that have plenty. There are hundreds of acres west of here that aren't good for anything except for stock to feed on, and "to hold the world together." Must we keep our stock off this woods and let it grow up in grass, and we poor people suffer for meat, milk and butter? I say, no, and all others in this community will say no. I myself was raised here, and learned to split rails and build fences, and had plenty to live on, and it would go hard for me in my old days to live by bread alone, as I would if we had stock law. I might have a little sorghum. Yes, the renter would have a better chance to starve. Would it be economy for the poor people of this county to sell off their cows, pigs, sheep, etc., for the benefit of a few large land owners? Would it be religion to give the widows and orphans of this county a stock law visit? If that is what you call Christianity, we don't want it. Hurrah for G. W. and J. S. Jones, Avery, School Boy and others. Success to THE UNION, its many readers and the opponents of stock law.

UNCLE LEWIS.

TOM WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

"The Magazine That Has An Idea Back Of It."

Have you heard that Hon. Thos. E. Watson, of Georgia, has begun the publication of a magazine? You know who Mr. Watson is? He's the man who wrote "The Story of France," "Life of Napoleon," and "The Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson." He was the People's Party candidate for President last year.

First number of Tom Watson's Magazine was published Feb. 25. It is $1.00 per year. You will miss the most interesting 128-page magazine in America if you fail to subscribe. Now we will send you the magazine and THE UNION, your best county paper, for $1.50 per year for both. Don't delay with your subscriptions, but send them in at once. tf

In this cause it is made to appear to the Register, by the affidavit on file of J. Osmond Middleton, of counsel for Complainant, that the Defendant is a non-resident of the State of Alabama, and that her residence is, to affiant, unknown, and further that in the belief of said affiant, the Defendant, C. A. Zimmerman, is over the age of twenty-one years. It is therefore ordered by the Register, that publication be made in THE UNION, a newspaper published in Clanton, Ala., once a week for four consecutive weeks, requiring her, the said C. A. Zimmerman, to answer, plead or demur to the Bill of Complaint in the above cause on or before the 12th day of May, 1905, and failing so to do within thirty days thereafter a Decree Pro Confesso may be taken against her in said cause.

Witness my hand, this 11th day of April, 1905.

THE CHICKADEES.

A fluffy little chickadee,
When winds began to blow,
Crept up beside a forest tree
And watched the flakes of snow.

"My brother," said poor chickadee,
"This wind is very cold
Why don't we go to sunny lands,
Like good Sir Robin bold?

"The snow is covering all the worms,
The flies are gone away,
I haven't caught a single bug—
Not one—for days to-day."

"Fie on you!" chirped good Brother Dee,
"Don't creep in there to whine,
For chickadees weren't made for that,
I'll show you how to dine.

"When frost kills worms and bugs are gone,
Sir Robin has to go,
Because, you see, good brother mine,
His food was made so.

"But we have feet and heads of pluck,
When cold and winter weather
Cuts off your whole supply of meat,
Forage for seeds together.

"We'll hunt for woods and berries red,
And such delicious dinner,
For trees that bloom in summer days
Leave seeds for birds in winter."

"So plucky encourage brother dear,
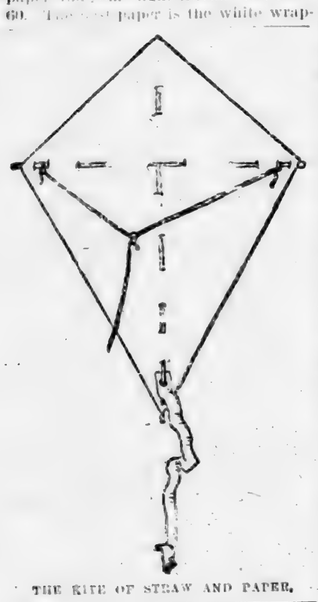
For chickadees don't never Do what old song the whole year through,
No matter what the weather."
—Emma C. Reeve, in Youth's Companion.

FLYING CITY KITES.

Kites are so seldom seen in town that they excite comment whenever they appear. It takes quite a lot of room to fly a kite, and it is not altogether a safe thing to fly one from the roof. Here is a small kite which may be easily made and flown from a window. The material is found in every house, and it doesn't take much effort to make one.

Get two long straws from the house broom, a piece of thin, unwrinkled paper and some light thread—No. 50 or 60. The best paper is the white wrapping paper used in grocery shops, and the average grocery clerk is kind enough to give any one a fresh, smooth piece when he is asked. On the paper draw a line twelve inches long. Four inches from one end draw another line across it, which may be seven inches long. Connect the ends of these lines and you will have a paper marked out to look like the kite in the picture. Cut off all the paper not needed. On the two lines first drawn cut little holes about two inches apart, and through them stick the broom straws.

The tail is made of the same kind of paper torn as shown and should be about five feet long. The ends of the cross straw should now be tied together, fastening them about two inches apart. Tie a thread to this string and the kite is ready to fly.



THE KITE OF STRAW AND PAPER.

There is generally a breeze blowing the gale a house, in one window and out another. Go to the window where the breeze blows outward and sail your kite. If it goes round and round in a circle it needs more tail. If it appears to be too heavy, take off a little of the tail and then try it.—New York Mail.

KEEPING A GARDEN.

Florrie was a little girl four years old. She had heard her cousin Ethel tell that last spring she had planted seeds in her little garden and cared for her baby plants.

Florrie was very anxious to have her own little garden. Not wishing to wait until the spring, one day in February, finding herself alone in the sitting room, with her small toy shovel she dug up the earth in the big wooden box all around the large palm plant.

Calling to her grandma to bring the nasturtium seeds, she said: "Oh, grandma, dear, my little garden is ready. I have taken out all the sticks and stones, and made a nice, soft bed for my baby seeds."

With her fat, chubby fingers Florrie made a narrow furrow all around the big palm. Carefully putting one baby seed beside the other, she covered the furrow with soft, loose earth, and patted it gently with her little hand.

Every few days she gave her baby seeds water with a tiny watering can, for, she said, she knew they must be thirsty.

After waiting over two weeks, Florrie began to lose her patience. One night she whispered softly in her prayers: "Oh, dear God, do help my baby seeds to grow."

Next morning two tiny plants were just peeping out of a crack in the earth. They looked so sweet with their two small leaves still tightly folded. Florrie was very much worried over the big load of earth they had on their backs, and would gladly have taken it off, but grandma explained that it would kill them to do so.

In a few days rows of little yellowish green heads were peeping out. Soon the tightly closed leaves unfolded; then, as they grew larger, they all turned and seemed to look out of the window. Florrie thought they were very inquisitive little baby plants, until grandma explained they were only looking at the bright, warm sunshine.

Florrie called herself "the little gardener." She took good care of her baby plants, giving them water every few days.

Noticing that several did not grow as fast as others, she said: "Grandma, dear, I think this little plant is sick, and to cure it we must give it a few drops of castor oil, like Nellie gives my baby sister."

Standing on her tip-toes, Florrie was just able to reach up to the big wooden box, to kiss her little plants good-morning and good-night.—New York Globe and Commercial Advertiser.

LULIE'S FRIGHT.

Lulie sat under the big, square table in the kitchen, drawing pictures. She did not need any paper and pencil, for she had a nice piece of white chalk, and the floor was painted dark brown.

A long time, perhaps a good half-hour, the tiny artist worked away, sketching houses, cats, boats and trees, and girls with their sunshades held straight over their heads. At last she rubbed them out with Dolly Dimples' old gingham dress, and drew a big circle. In it she made a pair of great, staring eyes, a short, fat nose, and a wide mouth, with three teeth showing. It looked as if a Jack-o'-lantern had been sitting for its portrait.

For two or three minutes Lulie looked soberly at her work; then she scowled at it. Then, suddenly dropping her chalk, she came out in a hurry from under the table, her own eyes very big and round, and ran and hid her face in her mother's lap.

"Why, Lulie! What's the matter, dear?"

Lulie did not answer.

"She saw a mouse," said Frank, who was making a "figure-four" trap with some sticks and a board.

Lulie shook her head.

"Lulie isn't afraid of mice," said her mother.

"Little Miss Muffit sat on a tuffit,
Eating curds and whey;
There came a great spider
And sat down beside her,
And frightened Miss Muffit away."

Sang Charlie, teasingly, looking up from his algebra lesson.

Lulie shook her curls harder.

"A bear or a wolf or a hyena?" asked Frank.

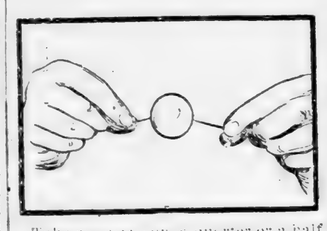
"Tell us what frightened you, Lulie. Don't be foolish, dear." Mother was as puzzled as the boys.

Lulie raised her head and pointed to the picture under the table.

This happened a good many years ago, and Lulie paints beautiful pictures in a large, fine studio of her own, but her brothers have never forgotten how she frightened herself with the drawing that she made under the kitchen table.—Mary Potter Angell, in Youth's Companion.

A NEW COIN TRICK.

Here is a very simple little trick, which looks not at all easy and quite as if the performer must be very skilful indeed.



Take a silver coin, a quarter or a half dollar, and pick it up by placing the point of two pins, one on either side of the coin's edge. You may hold the coin securely in this position if you press firmly with both pins.

Now, blow smartly against the upper edge of the coin, and it will fly around and around, revolving with great rapidity between the pins.—New York Evening Mail.

A Thought.

Genial manners are good, and power of accommodation to any circumstances, but the high prize of life, the crowning fortune of a man is to be born with a bias to some pursuit which finds him in employment and happiness—whether it be to make basket or broadswords or canals or statues or songs.—Emerson's "Considerations by the Way."

Suggestion in Advertising.

By Fred W. Hunter.

IT seems to be a rule that no matter what kind of advertising is put out a certain amount of business will be the result. The question still remains what kind of advertising brings the most business?

Some successful business firms will tell you that they have been advertising their trademark for years and that an enormous business has been built up by this means. Others will say that description sells goods and then back up their statements with their sales book. It is a fact that if an ad is written with a good description—a description that makes you imagine you can taste, smell and see the article described, it will sell goods.

Suggestion plays a more important part in our lives than most of us realize. We see somebody wearing a certain kind of hat and we want one like it, perhaps we buy one like it, the hat was sold by suggestion. We see something in a store window. A favorable impression is made, we desire it and buy it simply because it was suggested to us. Had we walked down the other side of the street, we would never have thought of the article and perhaps never bought it.

We read of something in the advertising section of a newspaper or magazine, we make up our minds that we want it—suggestion again at work. Nearly everything we do in this world, has its origin in what someone else suggested. Environment has probably as great an influence on the human family as heredity and the ads that we see about us help very strongly to make our environment.

Suggestion plays upon our imagination first, the idea is carried out later. We see an advertisement picturing a suit of clothes and we imagine how we would look in them. We draw a comparison (perhaps unconsciously) between our clothes and the ones advertised, there is where the suggestive power of the ad is tested. It may be that the suit in the ad is imagined and by comparison found wanting. The result will be that no sale will be made, perhaps a good impression has been made, but a suit is not needed at the present time. If this is the case, the advertisement will probably be remembered later on. Possibly the advertisement made the reader aware that he needed new clothes. If he had not compared his suit with the one in the ad, he might have waited several months before having made a purchase, but by having compared them, he sees how much he needs one and an immediate sale is the result.

Descriptive advertising increases demand. Imagine two canned meat advertisements, let one be descriptive and the other contain only the name and trade mark? The one that tells of a prime roast from a big healthy steer, put in a hot oven and cooked until a dark rich juice is ready to ooze from it—until it is so tender, that you forget you are chewing it and think only of how good it is; or an ad with a picture of a tin can and a trademark?

Suggestions can be given in a number of ways, in advertisements, words may be used or pictures, but the combination of both is usually more effective. Too many advertisers do not consider the appropriateness of the picture with enough interest. In selecting a picture for an ad they are often inclined to stretch their imagination just enough so that the force of the suggestion is lost. The picture must tell its story in order to sell goods. If the idea was always kept in mind that a picture is used because it describes the article better than words could, and then the strongest word description possible used to reinforce the picture, many ads would be more effective. It would mean that suggestions to use the article would given in two ways at once.—Printer's Ink.

Russian Tyranny To-day.

By Prince Kropotkin.

FROM 1894 to 1901 not one single political affair was brought before a court of justice or an examining magistrate. All inquests were dealt with by police officers or functionaries of the Ministry of the Interior. As to the numbers of such cases, they are simply extravagant. Thus in 1903 no fewer than 1,988 political cases, concerning 5,590 persons, were opened, in addition to all those which were pending. In the same year 1,522 inquests, involving 6,450 persons, were terminated. Out of this number 1,583 persons were liberated, 45 were sent before court-martial, and no fewer than 4,867 persons were submitted to various penalties, including imprisonment, inflicted by the administration without the interference of any magistrate. Out of these no fewer than 1,502 were sent into exile, for terms up to ten years, to various remote provinces of Russia and Siberia! Nothing on this scale was done even under Alexander III., the corresponding figure for the last year of his reign being only 55 (in 1894).

The Judicial law of 1864 contained certain guarantees against the arbitrary action of the police. But already in 1870 and 1875 the preliminary inquest was taken out of the hands of independent examining magistrates and was handed to the ordinary police and the state police officers. No fewer than 700 by-laws have been issued since 1864 for tearing the Judicial law to pieces—limiting the rights of the courts, abolishing trial by jury in numerous cases, and so on.

At the same time the exceptional laws promulgated during the last two reigns have given to every police officer in every province of the empire the right to arrest every Russian subject without warrant, and to keep him imprisoned as a suspect for seven days—and much longer under various other pretexes—without incurring any responsibility. More than that. It was publicly vouched at one of the lawyers' meetings that when arrests are made en masse simple policemen receive in advance printed and signed warrants of arrest and searching, on which they have only to inscribe the names of the persons whom they choose to arrest! Let me add that all these resolutions and commands have been printed in full in both the provincial and the Moscow papers, and that the figures are those of official reports.

The Astor March To Billions.

By Burton J. Hendrick.

THE Astor properties now increase as never before. Land values (New York City), in the last five years have jumped 50 and 100 per cent. The city's population grows at the rate of 100,000 a year.

In many sections New York has been largely reconstructed; headquarters of retail trade and business have developed; public improvements initiated since then—tunnels, bridges, subways, railroad terminals—aggregate in cost not far from $300,000,000. There has been a general movement of corporations toward New York; practically all the newly organized combinations, for example, have located there.

When John Jacob died, in 1890, his estate, inherited by William Waldorf, was estimated at $150,000,000. If it were worth that then, it is worth $300,000,000 now. The estate of William Astor, who died in 1892, inherited by the present John Jacob, was generally placed at about $65,000,000. If that were an accurate figure, it must now aggregate at least $160,000,000. The combined Astor fortune thus increases with accelerated momentum. In fifteen or twenty years, at the present rate of progress, it will have reached the billion mark. And then it will go on even faster, until the ordinary mind is appalled at the portentous figures.

We have seen that the $2,000,000 invested by John Jacob has multiplied at least two hundred times in one hundred years. (It has reached, at a conservative estimate, $450,000,000). If the same rate be maintained for another century, the Astor fortune will attain the unimaginable total of eighty billions.

We stand aghast at such a possibility; but not more so than would have John Jacob's contemporaries had they foreseen the present reality. In 1830 John Jacob Astor was the only man in New York who was worth a million dollars.—McClure's Magazine.

Open Air Treatment.

Reasons For Its Good Results in Cases of Consumption.

By Dr. H. W. G. Mackenzie.

THE advantages of the open air treatment for consumptives may be thus briefly summarized: The patient exposed continuously to fresh air gains in appetite, assimilates his food better, sleeps more soundly and awakens more refreshed. Free exposure to air is the best antipyretic. Sweating at night, formerly so common a symptom, usually ceases. Colds are practically unknown among patients leading an open air life. Secondary infection, on account of the comparative freedom of the air from micro organisms, is much less likely to occur. Tolerance of outside air is very quickly established, and no one who has tried the open air life will willingly go back to the former conditions of stuffiness. I have never seen any one made worse by exposure to fresh air. Even during a thick London fog patients get on better lying in bed on a balcony or in rooms with windows wide open and a good fire burning than when attempts are made to shut out the fog by keeping the windows shut.

A Street Scene.

The teamster was not beating his horses, but he was using pretty vigorous language.

"This cruelty to animals," declared the woman with three birds on her hat, "is positively dreadful."

"Oh, it's perfectly outrageous," agreed the woman in the Persian lamb coat.

And she vented her indignation by giving a street urchin, who had jostled her, a crack that sent him whimpering on his way.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A young couple at Newport find it impossible to live on an income of $360,000 a year. The fact that poverty is relative has just been illustrated by the beef trust, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE PULPIT.

A BRILLIANT SUNDAY SERMON BY THE REV. ALFRED H. A. MORSE.

Subject: Secret of Happiness.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—In the Strong Place Baptist Church the pastor, the Rev. Alfred H. A. Morse, spoke Sunday on "The Secret of Happiness." He said:

There are two hidden hands, controlled by the same intelligence, which are constantly working upon the human heart. And these are pain and pleasure. Man was made to be happy. If sometimes he must eat the bread of sorrow it is because, as Mr. Beecher said, "Sorrow is medicine." Joy is more divine than sorrow, and does not belong only to these passing days, but shall remain with us when all tears are dried and sorrow is swept forever from the universe.

Now, joy may be divided into three classes. There is the joy of appetite, a merely animal condition. It comes from the fitting of a goodly organism into circumstances which are suited to supply its need. This is the joy that makes the child skip and play and fill the home with laughter. It is the joy of the singing bird. It is simply pleasure.

But we are not always children. We grow and come into the place of work and responsibility. And here also is joy, and this we may call happiness. An earnest man finds joy in his employment. The lawyer and doctor and teacher enjoy their professions. The minister enjoys to preach. The merchant enjoys his business, and the mechanic his shop in spite of all its toil. This is joy, but it is the joy of the bee that gathers the honey and stores it away against the needs of a hungry winter.

There is the joy of living, and there is the joy of working. These are all that many a man attains. But it takes a higher joy than these to fill the soul of man, as the sunlight fills the sky, or the ocean fills the deep. There is a joy that is known as "blessedness," which arches these as the heavens span the sea. It is the joy of love, the joy of faith, the joy of a good conscience, the joy of doing right for the sake of right, the joy of sacrifice and of service. These are so far above the others that they belong to another kingdom whose law is obedience, whose joy is righteousness, whose fellowship is with God, and whose entrance is by means of a birth from above. And into this kingdom there are certain well defined steps.

"Happy," said Jesus, "are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." And poverty of spirit is nakedness of soul before God. He is happy who throws aside his own rags of righteousness and going to God says, "Clothe me, for I am naked; feed me, for I am hungry; guide me, for I am ignorant; put Thine arms under me, for I am weak." As in the mountain passes of the West the traveler holds up his hands before the bandit, so in the presence of God's righteousness the soul must throw up its hands and surrender to God. Blessed are the poor in spirit, the consciously bankrupt in the presence of God. So long as the younger son remained in the far off land, so long as he was satisfied with the husks from the troughs of the swine, so long as he wanted nothing, the father might mourn, but there was nothing for him to do. But when that son threw himself upon his father's love and said, "I have sinned, and you see my want," then the father could clothe and feed and kiss; place sandals upon his feet and give him the place of the son. Does a prodigal soul wish for happiness? I know of no chance for him till he fling away his sin and standing in his naked need acknowledges his poverty of soul. The happiest moment in the prodigal's experience was when he buried his face in his father's shoulder and said, "I have sinned." The happiest man at the temple gate was he who smote his breast and without so much as lifting his eyes, said, "God be merciful to me the sinner."

Happy are they who mourn for sin. It is not enough to be ashamed of it, but there must be an actual sorrow therefor. This does not mean to mourn for its consequences, nor for its publicity, nor for the misery it entails. Sin is more than a blunder which one may regret. It is more than a mistake which one would try to repair. It is open and flagrant and defiant rebellion. When a man mourns this, then God flings above him His smile as the rainbow spanned the flood, and he "shall be comforted."

Happy are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. But who are the meek? They who obey the law. Moses has passed into history as the meekest of men. But Moses bent the neck of his manhood to law, and maybe that is the reason that to this day our best institutions are all to be traced to the legislation in the wilderness. Only once did Moses lose his meekness, when with an angry frown he smote the rock. That shattered his meekness into a thousand pieces, and he lost the promised land. He did not inherit the earth. Jesus was the meekest man, and He has flung out His challenge for the world to come to Him. He was meek, for He was obedient, even to the place of death.

Happy are the hungry. Hunger and thirst are spurs which are driven into men to drive ahead. When men are hungry they struggle, and there is hope for a nation when times are hard. But when men and nations are filled, they lie down to sleep and rise up to play. When a man is idle his arm grows weak with disuse. Hunger and thirst are spurs to activity. But the noblest hunger is the hunger for righteousness, for that is the meaning of "righteousness." To seek God and His righteousness is to seek for God and His rightness. A man whose soul is famished with this consuming desire may well be happy, "for he shall be filled."

Happy are the merciful. But mercy does not always mean leniency. When a man is convicted of some gross crime it is no mercy to let him go to do the same crime again. Mercy sometimes exacts an awful penalty, for mercy is a prerogative of righteousness, and mercy belongs to God. The man standing beside God, poor in spirit, mourning his sin, hungry for righteousness, is merciful, and mercy comes also to him. "He shall receive mercy."

Happy are the pure in heart. But what does this mean? Who of us is pure? It means to be single in purpose. The diamond must be of "first water" if it is to flash true. The man must be single in purpose if he is to see God. The double-minded man can never see the vision of God, whose countenance is as the sun shining in his strength; for his vision is broken and disturbed, like the image of the sea driven by the wind, tossed. Ah! I love the sea. I have watched it on a windy day, and seen it weep and moan and sob, and work out its anger in an awful way. I have seen the waves rise half-crested, now backward, now forward, and its face was white with rage, but its heart was black as death. I have seen it reel and toss, till at last it seemed as though its heart would break, and it burst into a myriad briny tears on the shore and pour from its bosom the seaweed and drift and filth it has gathered in its wrath. That wave never saw itself. But I've looked again. That sea was a mirror, as clear as eyes could be, and the pearly pebbles and the white sand of the heart I could see through the crystal-hearted waters. Ay, one day I looked into the face of Jesus and said, happy, blessed are the pure in heart, "for they shall see God."

The man who aims to live a life to please God, he is pure in heart. He may have temptation, he may fall, but he never goes very far from God. I am not a Christian, but I am a student of Christianity, and I have never yet seen the man who strove to live a clean life who was not a happy man.

Happy are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God. God is a peacemaker, and He has reconciled all things unto Himself. And now the man who makes peace shall be called His son. He has come through the school, and has known poverty and mourning and meekness of heart, and now he is taken into the family of God as a son, was taken into the family of Paul's daughter.

There is one other "blessedness" spoken by Jesus. It is found in the comparative form. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." If makes me happiness to give than to get. When self is the centre-there is no happiness. But when self is forgotten there is happiness at its height. When a man knows he has nerves he can't be happy. Mr. Rockefeller thinks happiness can be ruined by a bad stomach. The happy man is one not knowing that he has a stomach cares for the other man.

This is the call to self-sacrifice. How utterly intolerable this world would be if every one lived for himself. But this cannot be, and the altruism is the bottom of family and social life. But there are different kinds of sacrifice. There is the sacrifice of self, of the lower to the higher, of passion to principle. There is the sacrifice of self for others, and this the highest sacrifice, that is, of self for God. Do we talk of joy in such things? Most people think of it as a disagreeable sort of necessity, but we see that this necessity has a useful end. But to rejoice in it? To take up our sacrifice with a song that seems out of the question. That is the dream of the poet.

Giving is blessed, because it is like God. He has need of nothing, just to give. The glory of the sun is a happy God, but He gave His Son. He might have stripped heaven of its angels and it would not have impoverished Him. The only gift that could feel was the gift of His Son. And that was what made Him happy. God Himself could not be happy if He had withholden this greatest gift. That was the law which Jesus declared. It makes more for happiness to give than to get. The whole life of Jesus was giving, but the happiest moment was that last, when He said, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit," and He had given His life for a ransom.

In these simple words, then, I have the whole philosophy of salvation, happiness and of heaven. He that will mourn for his sin, he shall be comforted and an infinite peace shall wipe his tears. If a man hunger for righteousness, he shall be filled. If he will serve God with a single heart, he shall see Him. If He do the work of God and live at peace, he shall be called the child of God, and if he seek chances to pour out his life in love he shall find heaven about him on every side. And this is the secret of happiness.

A Life of Self-Abnegation.

The Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong says of this picture of the blessedness of self-sacrifice. He says: "The life of self-abnegation does not attract you like a cathedral window seen from without, which is dull and meaningless. But when the sun and the light of Heaven shine through it, glorifies it with the beauty of form and color. Consecration to God for service may seem severe enough when seen from without, but enter into that experience, and the light of the divine love, shining through it, shall glorify your life with beauty and blessedness which are Heaven's own."

The Way We Do Things.

Rev. F. B. Meyer says: "Knitting needles are cheap and common enough, but on them may be wrought the most exquisite designs in the richest wools. So the incidents of daily life may be commonplace in the extreme, but are often the material foundation we must build the unseen but everlasting fabric of a noble and beautiful character. It does not so much matter what we do, but the way in which we do it matters greatly."

Four Good Rules.

General Gordon, the hero of Khartum, and likewise of Khartum, lived his life upon four rules: Forgetfulness of self, absolute sincerity, indifference to the world's judgments, absorption in the will of God. These four rules may serve as guide-posts on the path to righteousness, but the greatest of these is to render to the will of God.—F. B. Meyer, Baptist.

ATHLETES realize the importance of keeping in good bodily trim.

The digestion must be good, the circulation perfect, sleep regular and enough of it.

If the slightest catarrhal condition of lungs or stomach is allowed to remain, neither digestion nor sleep will be strength-sustaining.

Those who lead very active lives, like athletes, with good muscular development, find the spring months especially trying.

Athletes everywhere praise Peruna because they, of all men, appreciate the value of a tonic that dispels physical depression.

The exertion of some men may allow them to endure the depressing feelings incident to spring weather, but the athlete must never ail; he himself, to get "under the weather."

He must keep in the "pink of condition" all the time.

In order to do this he must avail himself of a spring tonic upon which he can rely.

Therefore athletes are especially friendly toward Peruna.

Peruna never fails them.

Household Matters

To Store Blankets.

One of the best places to store blankets which are not being used is under a mattress which is continually slept upon, as here they are kept comparatively well aired, and need little extra exposure to the fire before using.

Things Worth Knowing.

That a piece of charcoal thrown into the pot in which onions, cabbage, etc., are boiled will absorb the unpleasant odor.

That salt is not to be added to oatmeal until it has boiled about fifteen minutes.

That a lump of butter dropped into boiling molasses or maple candy will prevent it from running over.

That a piece of lace or thin muslin, starched and put over the holes or worn places in lace curtains will show very little and improve the looks of the curtains.

That a handful of salt, thrown into the tepid water with which straw matting is wiped up, will make it look extra fresh and clean.

First Aids to Housecleaning.

To know how to clean wood work without scrubbing, how to freshen carpets without taking up, how to do over blankets without ruining them, how to render a house hygienically clean without terrible smelling antiseptics is to approach housecleaning season without fear and without reproach.

First take down all the curtains and portieres and take up all the floor coverings that are to be put away. Have them thoroughly cleaned, done up, marked and stored away on shelf or in a chest for the summer. The more things you can pack away early in the season the less work you will have in warm weather. Your home will look cooler and will be healthier.

Do up your curtains as soon as you decide to housecleaning. Have them well shaken, and then if very dusty rinsed before regularly washing. Put them into lukewarm water and let them soak for twenty minutes or half an hour. During this time have heated a boilerful of water, to each gallon of which a tablespoonful of borax and half a bar of white soap, shaved fine. Squeeze the curtains out of the cold water. Lay them in a tub and pour on the boiling suds. Within another half hour they will be white and lovely. Rinse in two waters, and then add a little bluing to the third. If the curtains are cream colored, a little coffee in the last water will keep the creamy tint. When borax is used there is absolutely no need of rubbing. To rub curtains on a board is to destroy them utterly. To attach them to frames is ofttimes equally disastrous. The best way is to squeeze them gently and pin on a sheet laid on a large rug. If you starch your curtains, make the starch thin.

Have your portieres and rugs also well shaken, then beaten and fold away in borax powder to save them from the moths.—Mary Annable Fanton.

RECIPES

Curried Fowl—Cut a fowl in pieces; shred an onion small and fry it brown in butter. Dredge thickly with curry powder and fine salt and put all into a stewpan with one pint of good stock. Stew slowly till all is cooked and serve with a dish of well boiled rice.

Mock Crab—Half a pound of mellow cheese, salad oil, vinegar, made mustard, pepper and salt, quarter pound of canned shrimps. Take the cheese and pound it well in a mortar with made mustard, salad oil, vinegar, cayenne pepper and salt to taste. This should be mixed to the consistency of thick cream. Add to this the shrimps. Serve in crab shell or any ornamental fancy dish and garnish with sliced lemon.

Baked Marmalade Pudding—Three ounces of flour, three ounces of butter, two ounces of sugar, two eggs, two teaspoonfuls of marmalade and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat well together the eggs and the sugar, add the flour, melt the butter and pour it in; then add the marmalade and the baking powder. Pour into a pie dish and bake for twenty minutes in a brisk oven. Warm two tablespoonfuls of marmalade and pour over the pudding on removing it from the oven.

Apricot Dumplings—Make a good rich baking powder dough; roll out, cut into rounds with a large cookie cutter; have ready some stewed apricots; drain juice from same; place two halves within each round of dough; fold, press edges together and bake in moderately quick oven. For sauce, add water to juice to make required quantity of sauce; add generous lump of butter; take flour in proportion to amount of sauce, with sufficient sugar to make flour mix smoothly; boil and add a half cup of chopped apricots.

Pocotaligo Fish—First take all skin and bones from some boiled fish, dredge thickly with flour and over all put sufficient milk to cover. Season with cayenne and salt and a little chopped parsley. Let this heat gently while some eggs are being poached. Turn the fish on a dish and arrange the poached eggs on it. Dissolve two ounces of butter in a small saucepan, add a heaped teaspoonful of chopped parsley, a little cayenne and salt. Pour this sauce slowly over the eggs and serve hot. A garnish of crescents of fine bread is an addition to this dish.

Against Rate Reduction.

Atlanta, Ga.—The recent proposition of J. Pope Brown, Chairman of the Georgia Railroad Commission, to reduce the passenger rate in Georgia from three to two cents per mile was protested against by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Order of Railway Conductors, and unions of the blacksmiths, machinists and telegraphers, boilermakers, railway train men, carpenters and joiners, clerks and car men. These organizations employed an attorney especially to represent them, who urged that such a reduction would work against the prosperity of the State and lead to a reduction in the number of railroad employes as well as of their wages. The Travelers' Protective Association also protested that a reduction as proposed would result in fewer trains and poorer service.

A TRAINED NURSE

After Years of Experience, Advises Women in Regard to Their Health.

Mrs. Martha Pohlman of 55 Chester Avenue, Newark, N. J., who is a graduate Nurse from the Blockley Training School, at Philadelphia, and for six years Chief Clinic Nurse at the Philadelphia Hospital, writes the letter printed below. She has the advantage of personal experience, besides her professional education, and what she has to say may be absolutely relied upon.

Many other women are afflicted as she was. They can regain health in the same way. It is prudent to heed such advice from such a source.

Mrs. Pohlman writes:

"I am firmly persuaded, after eight years of experience with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, that it is the safest and best medicine for any suffering woman to use.

"Immediately after my marriage I found that my health began to fail me. I became weak and pale, with severe bearing-down pains, fearful backaches and frequent dizzy spells. The doctors prescribed for me, yet I did not improve. I would bloat after eating and frequently become nauseated. I had an acrid discharge and pains down through my limbs so I could hardly walk. It was as bad a case of female trouble as I have ever known. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, however, cured me within four months. Since that time I have had occasion to recommend it to a number of patients suffering from all forms of female difficulties, and I find that while it is considered unprofessional to recommend a patent medicine, I can honestly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for I have found that it cures female ills, where all other medicine fails. It is a grand medicine for sick women."

Money cannot buy such testimony as this—merit alone can produce such results, and the ablest specialists now agree that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the most universally successful remedy for all female diseases known to medicine.

When women are troubled with irregular, suppressed or painful menstruation, weakness, leucorrhœa, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, backache, bloating (or flatulence), general debility, indigestion, and nervous prostration, or are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, "all-gone" and "want-to-be-left-alone" feelings, blues and hopelessness, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles.

No other female medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female troubles.

The needless suffering of women from diseases peculiar to their sex is terrible to see. The money which they pay to doctors who do not help them is an enormous waste. The pain is cured and the money is saved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Experience has proved this.

It is well for women who are ill to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. In her great experience, which covers many years, she has probably had to deal with dozens of cases just like yours. Her advice is free and confidential.

TORNADO SWEEPS LAREDO

Texas Cities Badly Damaged by Storm, Killing Score.

SEMINARY BUILDING WRECKED

Roof of Mexican National Hospital Blown Off—Walls of Public Classes Razed—Trees, Fences, Telegraph Poles, Chimneys, Walls and Debris of All Kinds Strew the Streets.

Laredo, Tex., and Nuevo Laredo, Mex.—Twenty-six persons were killed and scores injured in Laredo and New Laredo by a tornado which tore through here late at night, crossing the Rio Grande. The property damage was heavy. The dead are chiefly Mexicans.

Four of those killed were members of one family, and were crushed to death by the falling of the heavy walls of an adobe house which they occupied. Others met their fate in a similar manner.

Narrow Escape of Teachers.

The damage wrought at Laredo Seminary was extensive. Not one of the group of buildings escaped damage. The escape from death of the teachers at the institution was narrow, as the walls of some of the buildings they occupied were demolished. Mrs. Easley, one of the teachers, was rescued by several students, who lowered her by a rope from a second story. She was severely bruised.

The roof of the Mexican National Hospital was blown off.

A trip through the town failed to show a block which did not suffer. Trees, fences, telegraph and telephone poles, roofs, chimneys and walls and debris of all kinds strew the streets.

The authorities commenced at once clearing away the wreckage, and the city soon began to assume its customary appearance. Linemen endeavored to straighten out the tangled wires.

Death and Damage in Mexico.

Conditions in New Laredo, across the Rio Grande, were similar to those on this side. It was not definitely known how many were dead or injured there, but a city official said that he knew of five dead. This would bring the number of dead in both cities up to about a score.

The storm appeared from the southwest, in the neighborhood of Lampasas, Mexico, several miles from Laredo, and it was reported that great havoc was wrought at Lampasas, although it was not thought that any loss of life resulted.

When the storm struck Laredo, the huts occupied by the poorer classes were razed, and as the wind increased in force the more substantial buildings were unroofed and many were demolished.

Lightning flashed vividly and continuously adding to the terror of the people. The storm lasted about an hour.

The Mexican National Railroad has temporarily abandoned its service, on account of lack of telegraph wires for dispatching trains. Physicians were busy attending to the wounded. Dr. H. S. Hamilton, of the United States Marine Hospital Service, placed 150 tents, with bedding, at the disposal of the homeless.

Laredo a County Seat.

Laredo is the county seat of Webb County, Tex., 155 miles southwest of San Antonio, on the Rio Grande, opposite Nuevo Laredo, Mex., with which it is connected by bridges. It is on the International and Great Northern, the Mexican National and other railroads. Among the public buildings are market, a convent, Mercy Hospital, a fine convent, academy and Laredo Methodist Episcopal Seminary. Laredo is in a region of agricultural and stock raising districts, which also has valuable mineral deposits, especially of coal. It is an important commercial centre, with a large international and local trade, exporting hides, wool, livestock, coal, etc., and has extensive concentrating and sampling works, car and machine shops, brick works, a tannery, foundry, furniture factory, etc. It was settled by the Spaniards and laid out in 1767. It was first incorporated about 1848 by a special charter. The population, according to the census of 1900, was 13,429.

SPECIAL TRAIN WRECKED

R. C. Ogden's Annual Excursion of Educators Ends Sadly.

Collision With Switch Engine in Yards at Greenville, S. C., Causes Accident.

Greenville, S. C.—The special train bearing the Ogden party on its Southern trip in the interests of education ran into a switch engine early in the morning as it was entering the yards of the Southern Railway here. The engine of the Ogden train and several cars were wrecked. The baggage and dining cars were telescoped and caught fire. The two dining cars were destroyed.

A flagman and three employes of the dining cars were killed, and several of the Ogden party were injured. The dead are: Charles M. Coope, flagman; J. J. Little, W. W. Cummings and J. F. Haynes, negro employes of the dining cars.

The train left Columbia at 3.30 o'clock in the morning, and few of the party had arisen when the accident happened. Had it occurred at the breakfast hour many might have been killed.

Professor Henry W. Farnam, of Yale University, was perhaps most seriously injured. His head was bruised and arm broken. Mrs. Farnam was hurt on the shoulder and arm. Dr. St. Clair McKelway, of the Brooklyn Eagle, who was in the forward dining car, was pinioned under timbers, and was dragged out unconscious when the flames were reaching him. He was soon revived and was unhurt except for a wrenched back. R. M. Ogden, son and secretary to R. C. Ogden, had his wrist broken. Dr. Dreher, of Roanoke College, was bruised. Mrs. Thorpe, daughter of H. W. Longfellow, was also bruised. All of these passengers were in the forward dining car.

John F. McCoy, tourist agent, was cut in the head. W. C. Kershaw, an electrician of Jersey City, received scalp wounds; C. B. Wilcox, dining car conductor, cuts over right eye, and D. R. Rohns, dining car conductor, scalp wounds.

Dr. and Mrs. Farnam were taken to a hospital.

Among the passengers on the luckless train were: Charles B. Aycock, former Governor of North Carolina; Dr. A. S. Draper, New York State Commissioner of Education; Dwight Kellogg, the Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, Seth Low, former Mayor of New York; Robert Treat Paine, George Foster Peabody and Bishop McVickar, of Rhode Island, who suffered from shock.

Mr. Ogden, who was deeply grieved and shocked, ordered that the best possible funeral be given the dead, and that every attention be shown the injured. The people of Greenville invited many of the passengers to their homes pending the departure of the special train for New York City.

Practically all of the baggage, said to be valued at $12,000, was destroyed. It was said that a misunderstanding of orders led to the accident. The northbound passenger train to New York City had orders to take the siding at Paris, a way station four miles north of Greenville. The freight, which was being made up here, was on the main line. At the Coroner's inquest the train dispatcher testified that orders to the effect that the Ogden special would arrive at 7.15 o'clock were filed in the yardmaster's office, and later that another order was filed that the special would arrive at 7.55 o'clock a. m. The yardmaster testified that he received no orders whatever to that effect.

The Ogden party decided to abandon its trip, and arrangements were made by the Southern Railway to start a special train from Greenville for New York City at once. The itinerary which was abandoned included stops at Asheville, N. C., and Richmond and Hampton, Va.

Robert C. Ogden is the resident member of the John Wanamaker firm in New York City. Consistent with a custom he has followed for several years, he had made a large party of educators his guests on a special train, that took them to the Eighth Annual Conference for Education in the South, at Columbia, S. C. The start was made from New York City, and at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Richmond the train stopped to take on additional members of the party.

A STARTLING RULING.

Costs Nothing to Kill a Student, Says Judge.

Bloomington, Ill.—A unique point in a damage suit has been brought out by a decision of Judge Wright, in the Champaign County Court. A railroad dining car was derailed last fall, and Ralph O. Roberts, a student of the University of Illinois, was killed. He was a prominent athlete. The accident attracted considerable attention. Roberts' administrators bringing suit for $10,000.

The defendant's attorney moved that the suit be dismissed on the ground that no evidence had been introduced to show that any person was depending upon Roberts for support. It was, moreover, urged that Roberts, being a college student, was really an expense to his parents. The Judge decided the point well taken and dismissed the case. An appeal will be taken.

Germany Stands Pat.

Count von Tattenbach-Ashold, the German envoy at Tangier, made an unconciliatory statement on Germany's attitude toward Morocco.

Thrown From Vehicle.

Guin, Ala.—J. H. Riley, an old and respected citizen of this town, was very painfully injured by a accident here while attempting to get into a vehicle with B. L. Cantrell.

The horse became frightened at Mr. Riley and ran away, running the vehicle against a shade tree, throwing both to the ground.

Mr. Riley was pretty badly bruised about the face, one cut above the right eye, and tongue cut.

MILWAUKEE BANKER SHORT

Frank G. Bigelow, President of First National, Confessed Defaulter.

LOSES $1,500,000 SPECULATING

Arrested at His Home on Charge of Embezzlement and Later Released on Twenty-five Thousand Dollars' Bail—Henry G. Goll, Assistant Cashier, His Tool.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Frank G. Bigelow, President of the First National Bank, and last year President of the American Bankers' Association, is a confessed defaulter to the extent of about $1,500,000.

He was arrested charged with the embezzlement of over $100,000 of the bank's funds and released in $25,000 bail to appear before the next Federal Grand Jury. A warrant was also to have been issued for Henry G. Goll, one of the assistant cashiers.

The First National Bank will weather the storm. Leading business men signed and issued a statement announcing that they would subscribe a total of $1,655,000 to make good the shortage.

In anticipation of a run, Chicago came to the aid of local institutions with $2,000,000 in currency, one of which was in the First National Bank before the news of the defalcation became known.

Speculated in Wheat.

It appears that Mr. Bigelow has been speculating in wheat for weeks. He had made some investments that had swept away his private fortune, and had turned to the bank's funds in the hope of recuperating his losses by deals in wheat. His son, Gordon Bigelow, was a member of Tracy & Co., brokers on the Chicago Board, and it is said that his father's investments were largely made through him.

When the bank's funds were to be used Mr. Bigelow, according to the directors, effected a combination with some bookkeepers and the assistant cashier, Henry G. Goll. He took the bank's surplus and charged up the money taken to Chicago correspondent banks, but the other night, while working on the books, a bookkepeer not in the deal, discovered an incorrect entry. He notified Charles F. Pfister, of the Pfister & Vogel Company, one of the directors of the bank, and a meeting of the directors was called, when steps were taken to prevent a collapse.

Bigelow was asked to explain, and made a full confession. Chicago banks were notified, and the bank officials provided means for meeting the run which was certain. Before the public knew of the shortage $1,000,000 reached here; then, when the run was in full swing, heavily guarded automobiles brought from the railway stations another million sent by Chicago to prevent a panic.

It looked as though the alarm would spread to other banks, but so carefully had the First National prepared for the event, that the fears were largely allayed. There was something of a jam at the doors, but the police kept the crowd orderly.

Glass cutters chipped a hole in a big plate glass front window of the bank, and deposits were received in full view of the crowd on the streets.

The full amount appropriated by Mr. Bigelow was $1,500,000, but he has made restitution in the shape of real estate and securities sufficient to reduce the amount to $1,300,000. The Board of Directors decided to meet the issue in a straightforward manner, and formulated a pledge, which was immediately signed by members of the board, whose aggregate wealth will probably approximate $25,000,000, to more than make good the shortage.

The capital stock of the bank is $1,500,000, and the undivided surplus amounts to $1,200,000. The personal guarantee of the directors more than covers the defalcations and with the surplus and undivided profits which the bank carries over and above its capital, it is announced that the institution is more solid than it was before the defalcation became known. Charles F. Pfister heads the guarantee list with $600,000.

TRAIN BURIED IN TUNNEL.

Four Killed in Wreck on the Union Pacific West of Cheyenne, Wyo.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—The engineer and fireman, a brakeman and an unknown tramp were killed in a wreck at Edson Tunnel, on the Union Pacific, about 100 miles west of Cheyenne, when the west approach of the tunnel caved in and buried a portion of the train under thousands of tons of earth and rock. The rest of the train left the track, completely choking the long tunnel.

Relief trains, with wrecking outfits, steam shovels and hundreds of laborers, were hurried to the scene from Rawlins and Laramie.

EARTHQUAKE IN ENGLAND.

People Badly Scared, But Little Damage so Far Reported.

London, England.—An earthquake, lasting several seconds and occasioning much alarm, was felt about 2 o'clock in the morning throughout Derbyshire and Yorkshire and in adjacent districts.

There was trifling damage to walls and roofs in some places, and movable articles were severely shaken, but nothing serious is yet reported.

Hail Two Inches in Diameter.

Bessemer, Ala.—Bessemer and vicinity was visited by a severe hail storm, the hail being very heavy in many places, injuring gardens and knocking off fruit. The hail stones were large, several measured being two inches in diameter, and from the height of the cloud the stones falling with such force as to break windows and cause horses to run away.

TEXAS LEGISLATOR SHOT

John M. Pinckney and Two Others Killed in Street Riot.

Prohibitionists and Their Opposers Clash After Recent Elections at Hempstead, Texas.

Hempstead, Texas.—At a mass meeting called to petition the Governor to send Rangers to enforce the local option law, J. N. Brown, a leading lawyer and stanch anti-Prohibitionist, began shooting. Many other persons followed suit, and three men were killed, one man was fatally injured and two others were severely wounded. The dead are: J. N. Brown, Congressman John M. Pinckney and Tom Pinckney, brother of the Congressman.

John Mills, a leading Prohibitionist, was also shot. "Doc" Tompkins, private secretary to Congressman Pinckney, and Rolling Brown, son of J. N. Brown, were severely wounded.

There were many armed men in the streets at night, but it was not believed there would be any more trouble.

The Governor sent Rangers and a special train from Houston with surgeons to attended the wounded. There has been bitter feeling here for several years over the Prohibition question, and the recent election, when the "antis" failed to gain the victory they had expected, added to it. The whole country has been divided into factions as a result.

Houston, Texas.—The Adjutant-General left Austin shortly before midnight for Hempstead on a special train with half a dozen Rangers. At Manor the local military company was picked up. Troops arrived at Hempstead early in the morning. The town was quiet, but the feeling was tense.

Mr. Pinckney's Career.

Representative John McPherson Pinckney (Democrat) was born in Grimes County, Texas, on May 4, 1845, and educated in the public schools.

He served for four years in the Civil War with the Fourth Texas Regiment, Hood's Texas Brigade.

For ten years he was District Attorney for the Twenty-third Judicial District of Texas, and three years as County Judge of Waller County.

In November, 1903, he was elected to Congress to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of T. H. Ball.

SERVANTS SHOT IN KITCHEN.

Miss Tillie May Forney Finds the Woman Dead, Man Dying.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Miss Tillie May Forney, daughter of the late Colonel John W. Forney, publisher and editor, discovered her two servants, one dead, the other fatally wounded, in the kitchen of the Forney mansion the other night. The butler, Samuel Barnes, or Smith, colored, thirty years old, sat at a table, his head leaning on his hand. Margaret Toner, white, fifty years old, cook in the family for twenty years, was lying on a settee. Both were shot in the head, and a revolver with two exploded cartrides in it lay on the floor.

An empty whisky flask in the negro's pocket and a pitcher and glasses in which there had been beer indicate that the servants had been drinking heavily. The butler died three hours after being found.

Miss Forney was the only other person in the house, and neither she nor the neighbors heard the shots. The police could not explain the tragedy.

CIGARETTE SMOKERS FINED.

Many Arrests Reported in Indiana—One Victim Will Appeal.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Local officers throughout the State, acting under instructions from police boards, began the enforcement of the anti-cigarette law, and a large number of arrests were reported—not of dealers, but of persons found smoking cigarettes or having cigarette paper in their possession. In every case the person arrested was fined where trial was held.

John E. Lewis, a well-known citizen, was fined $25 and will appeal the case.

SERIOUS FIRE ON CAPE COD.

Five Hundred Acres Burned Over—Change of Wind Saves Hamlet.

Hyannis, Mass.—More than 500 acres of forest, meadow and pasture land were burned over by a fire that broke out at noon in the brush near the West Barnstable road, two miles west of this village. No buildings were destroyed, although at one time many were threatened. At Happy Hollow, a settlement of colored people, household effects had been hastily removed to a place of safety, when a shift in the wind saved the hamlet.

RUSSIAN OFFICER SHY $30,000.

Gambles Away Funds For War Supplies and Flees Country.

St. Pefersburg, Russia.—An officer named Kasperoff, belonging to the Commissariat Department of the War Office, and who had large sums at his disposal to purchase supplies for the Army, has defaulted to the amount of $30,000 and fled abroad. He had lost money in gambling.

Woodruff Again Marries.

Former Lieutenant-Governor Woodruff, of New York State, married Miss Isabel Morrison at the bride's home in New York City.

Thrown From Vehicle.

Guin, Ala.—J. H. Riley, an old and respected citizen of this town, was very painfully injured by a accident here while attempting to get into a vehicle with B. L. Cantrell.

The horse became frightened at Mr. Riley and ran away, running the vehicle against a shade tree, throwing both to the ground.

Mr. Riley was pretty badly bruised about the face, one cut above the right eye, and tongue cut.

Railroad Earnings in Alabama.

The table of statistics published below, which has been carefully compiled from the reports of the several railroads named to the railroad commission for the year 1903, shows that there are 23,531 employes in Alabama and that they receive an average daily compensation of $1.73. The railroads therefore pay out daily in Alabama to their employes $40,708.63; monthly, $1,221,258.90; annually, $14,655,106.80. This money of course remains in Alabama, and is expended by these employes in the different communities where they reside. It is estimated that the railroad received during that year approximately only $9,205,185.99 from their local traffic, and it will be seen therefore that the railroads paid out to their employes $5,449,920.81 more money than they received from their domestic business. This excess was, of course, paid out of the interstate earnings. It should not be forgotten, also that those railroads buy as fuel for their engines in the Birmingham district large quantities of coal, and also buy steel rails, iron and other equipments, which amounts to many hundreds of thousands of dollars, and to this should be added the cost of depots, etc. The railroads also pay about $600,000 annually for state and county taxes. About $160,000 of this goes direct to the school fund and about $54,000 to the soldier tax, and the remainder, $266,000, into the general fund. They also pay about $13,000 license tax, which is used to defray the salaries and expenses of the railroad commission of the state. It should be remembered that all of this money remains in Alabama, and will cover approximately all the earnings of the railroads in Alabama.

These figures and facts should be given careful consideration by all those who are now studying the transportation problem in this state. The table referred to is as follows:

Lumber Plant Destroyed.

Beaumont, Tex.—The plant of the Lemonville Lumber Company at Lemonville, Tex., fifteen miles northeast of this city, was struck by lightning, resulting in the total destruction of the plant by fire. Loss, $50,000, partially covered by insurance.

Quarter of a Million Lost.

White Springs, Fla.—The saw mill of R. J. and B. F. Camp, one of the largest concerns of the kind in Florida, was burned here with the dry kiln, veneering mill, commissary and 2,000,000 feet of lumber. The fire spread to neighboring houses and several of them were destroyed. The loss will reach at least $250,000.

Car Inspector Hurt.

Childersburg, Ala.—T. A. Prickett, car inspector for the Central of Georgia railway, suffered a very painful accident here. He fell under the wheels of a moving train, the rear wheels of the caboose passing over his foot and mashing it very badly. Mr. Prickett states that when he got off the train here his foot caught on a stick, causing him to fall under the car. The company's physician, Dr. W. H. Hutchinson, was sent for and dressed the foot. Mr. Prickett was sent to his home at Phoenix City.

New Building for Gadsden.

Gadsden, Ala.—The Smith-Echols-Burnett Hardware Company closed a contract Saturday for the erection of a three-story brick store with a basement for the use of their wholesale and retail hardware business. The building will front 125 feet on Court street and run back 75 feet on Locust street, being on the corner of Court and Locust street. It will cost $15,000.

VOL. III. CLANTON, ALA., MAY 11, 1905. NO. 7

GENERAL STATE NEWS.

Current News Garnered as It Falls From the Plant of Report.

Federal Prisoners Escape.

Huntsville, Ala.—Three federal prisoners, John Rodgers, John Long and W. L. Lowman, all charged with illicit distilling, escaped from the Madison county jail some time Saturday. The men found their way through the bars and, with rope made ropes of their bed clothing, lowered themselves to the street, three stories below.

Negro Will Pugh, to Hang.

Wetumpka, Ala.—Will Pugh, the negro charged with the killing of his wife under circumstances which were unusually brutal, and convicted by the trial jury of murder in the first degree, has been sentenced to the gallows, the execution being set for June 16.

Postmaster Adjudged Insane.

Montgomery, Ala.—A special from Troy says that J. T. Logue, the postmaster at Shady Grove, who was a few days ago checked up several hundred dollars short by postoffice inspectors, was today adjudged insane. Logue will be sent to the state asylum for the insane.

New Railroad Opened.

Montgomery, Ala.—Saturday the Bay Minette and Fort Morgan line, to be operated by the Louisville and Nashville, was turned over by the contractors and is now a feeder to the Mobile and Montgomery branch. It is thirty-three miles long and runs from the coast where much new territory is being taken up by northern and eastern people to the thriving little Baldwin county settlement on the main line. It has several stations and has a prospect for large trade.

Decatur, Ala.—Three negroes, guilty of sudden and savage murders, stood up before Judge D. W. Speake of the circuit court of Morgan county Saturday and were sentenced to hang on the same day, June 16.

John Collier and Harvey Smith will satisfy the law for the butchery of a refined and gentle young woman, who never did them or any human being a wrong in her life. Will Jackson will expiate with his life the murder of Policeman Everett Steele.

Boggs Bound Over.

Opelika, Ala.—Deputy Marshal Gibson brought J. M. Boggs of Randolph county before Commissioner Samford on a charge of illicit distilling. Boggs operated one of the large stills recently captured and destroyed in Randolph county, but he escaped arrest at the time. He was bound over to the United States court in Montgomery in the sum of $500.

Another Strike On.

Birmingham, Ala.—Because of a refusal on the part of the master electrical workers to accede to demands for higher wages and shorter hours the members of Birmingham Union, United Electrical Workers, went out on Strike Friday morning.

The workers asked for $4 per day and eight hours to constitute a day. This demand was refused, whereupon a compromise was offered with eight hours to constitute a day and the wage to be $3.20. The master electrical workers declined to give the wage offered instead of $3.25 for eight and one-half hours a day. The strike effected every shop in town and not less than fifty men are interested.

Town Full of Buyers.

Cullman, Ala.—The town has been flooded with strawberry buyers from Northern and Southern markets the past week, some coming from as far north as Detroit, Mich., while others are here from Montgomery, Mobile and Birmingham. It is said by several of the buyers that the Cullman berry is a universal favorite on the market and that there is a growing demand for the Cullman production. Should the sun shine nice and warm for three or four days more car shipments will begin and dealers will then flock from every direction.

Accident Causes Death.

Centerville, Ala.—A distressing accident occurred about four miles from Centerville Thursday. John E. Jones a prominent farmer of this county, was going to his field riding a mule. The mule became frightened and in some way Mr. Jones became entangled in the plow gear and was dragged across a new ground and terribly hurt. He lingered until about 7 o'clock in the evening, when death relieved him of his sufferings. He was considered one of the best citizens of this section, and leaves a wife and several children. He was a gallant soldier in the late war.

Returned for Babe.

Wetumpka, Ala.—Near Nixberg, in Coosa county, on May 2 a white child, apparently two or three days old, was found in the woods near a graveyard. A strange negro with an empty sack was seen coming from the direction of the place where the child lay. The negro was from Mt. Olive, twelve or fifteen miles above Nixberg, and claimed to be looking for seed corn. A white person, finding the child and suspecting the negro had placed it there, hid behind some shrubbery and watched proceedings. The negro with the sack and another negro returned to the spot, took the infant and carried it to a negro house. Warrants are out for the negroes.

New Cotton Oil Company.

Montgomery, Ala.—The Dixie Cotton Oil Company has been reorganized, and it was launched Thursday by the filing of the papers of incorporation of the new company in the office of the judge of probate in Montgomery county. The capital stock of the new company is $50,000, and I. L. DeJarnette is named as agent. The incorporators are: W. P. DeJarnette, L. L. DeJarnette, Isaac Winter, Jacques Loeb C. G. Zirkle, W. H. Moore and Zirkle & Moore.

Railway Accident.

Mobile, Ala.—Thursday as northbound Louisville and Nashville passenger train No. 6 was coming up Water street the engine struck an open switch. The engine headed on a spur track towards the river and hit a flat car, knocking it from its trucks. Passengers in the train were shaken up but no one injured.

Killed by Train.

Cordova, Ala.—J. W. G. Bell, a well-known citizen of Birmingham; also known throughout the county, was killed Thursday afternoon at this place by being struck by a fast train of the Frisco system.

Trains to Autaugaville.

Montgomery, Ala.—The Alabama Central Railroad Company, a new corporation, began operating trains Friday over is eight miles of tracks between Booth station and Autaugaville, an important interior town of Autauga county. The line strikes the main system of the Mobile and Ohio railroad at Booth, tweny miles west of Montgomery.

Autaugaville has been heretofore remote from a railroad. The building of the line has covered two years. It runs through a rich cotton section and also virgin hardwood forests. J. W. Dimmick, of Montgomery, is president of the company.

Boy Killed by Accident.

Gadsden, Ala.—The news has reached here of the accidental death of a 12-year-old son of Charlie Wakefield, a farmer who is living on the farm of E. A. Gilliland, in Little Wills valley, some fifteen miles north of Gadsden, last Saturday afternoon at 2:30.

Mr. Wakefield and his son were on the banks of Wills creek fishing, and had with them a vicious dog. About 2 o'clock an Alabama Great Southern train came along and stopped at Reesaile to do some switching. As the train came along the Wakefield dog ran alongside of it barking, and when the train stopped Earl Shields, of Collinsville, a young man about 21 years old, stepped from the caboose and remarked to a train man that he believed he would kill the dog, at the same time drawing his gun and firing one shot from his 38. The bullet missed the dog and sped on for 150 yards striking young Wakefield, who was standing on the bank of the creek, in the head, just to the rear of his left ear, causing death in a few hours.

Mr. Shields was ignorant of the boy being near.

Cities Want to Merge.

Anniston, Ala.—The initial step toward the union of Anniston and Oxford as one city was made Thursday at a meeting of the Commercial Club when a committee was appointed to discuss the matter with Oxford citizens. Should the two become one the population would be 25,000; a city fourth in size in the state. It is well known that no union can be made without an act of the legislature ordering an election on the question, but the initial step has been taken so that when the legislature meets all that will be necessary is to have a bill passed ordering this election and the holding of the election.

Designs Accepted.

Huntsville, Ala.—The design of Hummel & Sons, of this city, has been accepted by the Huntsville chapter, Daughters of the Confederacy, for the proposed Confederate monument. The monument will be placed in the county court yard, and will consist of a tall shaft, upon which the figure of a Confederate soldier on sentry duty will stand, the whole to be of granite. The cost will be between $2,500 and $3,000. The unveiling is expected to occur about October, and that ceremony will be a feature of the Confederate reunion if it is held in Huntsville.

Pelham Monument Shipped.

Jacksonville, Ala.—Mrs. George H. Rowan, president of John Forney Chapter U. D. C., of this place, has received a letter informing her that the figure for the John Pelham monument to be erected in Jacksonville has been shipped from Italy, and that the contractors expect to have the monument ready for unveiling at some date in June next.

Car Burglarized.

Birmingham, Ala.—A freight car of the Central of Georgia railroad was burglarized Thursday night and several articles of merchandise carried away. The seal of the car was broken by burglars and goods valued at about $50. The burglaries have been few for the past two weeks, and the officers of the railroad companies were congratulating themselves on the fact that they had about put a stop to this work. Although a strict watch is kept in the railroad yards, still the task of apprehending these burglars seems to be a difficult one.

Kills Two and Himself.

Clayton, N. M.—Filipe Alore, a wealthy ranchman, shot and killed Mr. and Mrs. Francisco Montorio at Bingham, thirty-five miles south of Clayton, and killed himself. Montorio was a member of one of the oldest families in the country, and Mrs. Montorio was noted for her beauty. Alore is said to have been deeply infatuated with her, and jealousy is supposed to have prompted the murder.

Lincoln's Relative Dead.

Richmond, Va.—Abram B. Lincoln died at the old Lincoln homestead at Lacey Springs, in the Valley of Virginia, Friday, aged 82. His father, a cousin of President Lincoln, moved to this state from Kentucky a hundred years ago.

Fell 115 Feet.

Opelika, Ala.—A remarkable escape from death Thursday was that of a negro workman who fell from the top of the electric light smokestack, 115 feet. He struck the ground on his side and was uninjured other than badly jolted. He was painting the stack and lost his hold.

Girard, Ala.—William Vaughan, colored, will be hanged at Seale, the county seat of Russell county, Monday, May 18, for the murder of his wife's grandmother. After killing her he set fire to the house and left her body in the flames. This will be the first legal execution in Russell county in about six years.

AN AWFUL TORNADO

The Storm Goes Over Indian Territory, Arkansas and Tenn. Many Injured.

TWO ARE KILLED IN ST. LOUIS

Owl, I. T., Suffers Enormous Damage, Fifty Dwellings Entirely Blown Away—Ten Persons Injured.

Fort Worth, Tex.—A tornado struck Owl, I. T., Friday evening and damaged the business part of the town to the extent of over $50,000. Two persons were killed and ten injured, four fatally. On account of the wires being down it was impossible to secure the names of those injured, but it is known that a man and a little girl were killed. The storm struck the town from the southwest as a passenger train on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas was coming into the depot. Nearly every business house in the town was destroyed, and about fifty dwellings were carried away. Trees were blown in from a distance and distributed promiscuously through the town. The storm covered a path about 700 feet wide, and destroyed everything in its wake. The Missouri Kansas and Texas road had a work train at Coal Gate, and immediately after the storm had passed it started for the scene with all the physicians that could be secured.

No damage was done to railroad property. The people of the town were frantic, and great crowds of women separated from their children ran out onto the prairie adjoining the city in search of them.

The only school house in the city was demolished, and it was in this building that the principal injuries took place. The building was filled with children who had taken refuge from the storm, and nearly all of them were injured. All telephone and telegraph wires in the path of the storm were damaged, and the true condition of those injured will not be known before morning.

At Edmond, Okla., the wind destroyed several small buildings, demolishing the plate glass front of Deford's store, and ruined shade and fruit trees by the thousands.

At Mulhall, Okla., the hail damaged all growing crops and fruit and destroyed some property.

Locally the only damage was from a severe dust storm, which was followed by the heaviest rain of the season.

Arkansas and Tennessee Suffer.

Memphis, Tenn.—Specials from many towns of Arkansas and west Tennessee tell of heavy damage wrought by a terrific wind and rainstorm early Friday.

At Pine Bluff culverts and bridges were washed away, trees torn down, wire communication impaired, and railway traffic delayed. Seven miles from Pine Bluff on the St. Louis and Iron Mountain railway a culvert caved in with a freight train, and eleven cars were wrecked. Washouts on this road and on the Cotton Belt are reported both north and south of Pine Bluff.

Hot Springs suffered from the wind and rain, which at that point was attended by a severe electrical storm. Frail structures were damaged and trees blown down.

At several towns in west Tennessee considerable damage was wrought. No loss of life is reported.

Two Killed in St. Louis.

St. Louis, Mo.—The severe thunderstorm and windstorm that swept over St. Louis and vicinity late Thursday night resulted in the death of two persons and injuries to eight, and considerable damage to property. The dead:

George Benton, aged 7, drowned.

Charles Kroeger, farmer, Edwardsville, struck by lightning.

Injured:

James T. Roberts, attorney, leg broken and bruised.

J. H. Grimm, attorney, leg broken.

Mrs. Elmer L. Smith, ankle fractured.

George Luehrman, Union, struck by lightning.

William Nichol, Belleville, engineer, stunned by lightning.

Mrs. Mary O'Connell and daughter stunned by lightning.

Along the East St. Louis levee, a mile of telegraph posts carrying 148 wires were blown down, some heavy poles being broken into three pieces.

William Nichol, a hoisting engineer near Bellville, was struck by lightning as he was hoisting six miners from a shaft. He was not overcome, however, and succeeded in bringing the miners safely to the second story and the occupants were taken out in boats.

Fainted in Court.

Washington, D. C.—Arraigned as Alice Nelsen, the woman claimed to be the Baroness de Vorts Salame of Austria, fainted in the police court after pleading not guilty to the charge of grand larceny and waiving examination.

The woman entered the court room leaning on the arm of the matron of the house of detention. She sat pallid and trembling as the information was read, charging her with taking about $300 worth of clothing from Mrs. William Slater, of this city. After the proceedings had been closed, the prisoner collapsed completely. Upon being revived, she was taken back to the house of detention.

Later the woman was held to await the action of the grand jury and bond was fixed at $1,000, in default of which she was committed to jail.

Naval Changes.

Washington, D. C.—Announcement has been made by Commander N. H. Usher, detail officer of the bureau of navigation, of the following important changes:

Captain Thomas Perry, commandant of the navy yard at Pensacola, to be president of the examining board at Washington; Captain Robert M. Berry, commandant of the navy yard at Charleston, to succeed Captain Perry at Pensacola; Captain William H. Beehler, York Shipbuilding Company's yards at Camden, N. J., to succeed Captain George P. Solvocoress, who is to be made commandant of the midshipmen at the Naval Academy. Captain E. S. Prime, commandant of the naval station at Port Royal, is to assume charge of the station at Charleston in addition to his present duty.

Louisville, Ky.—Passenger train No. 7, on the Louisville and Nashville railroad, which left Cincinnati at 11:20 a. m., for New Orleans, was derailed on a sharp curve near Sulphur Kentucky, Saturday. The engineer was killed and one passenger, Miss Mabel Clark, and four postal clerks injured, but not seriously.

Engineer Buxe jumped and his engine fell on him. The fireman remained on the engine and was not injured. Miss Clark was on her way to Bardstown, Ky., where she was to have been married Saturday night. The mail, baggage and express cars and two day coaches left the track, but the sleepers remained on the track. The traffic was delayed several hours. One of the sleepers was the New York-Nashville car and the other a through sleeper from Cincinnati for the south. Beyond a slight shaking up the other passengers were unhurt.

Preacher Charged With Uroxcide.

Louisville, Ky.—Rev. U. G. Sutherlin, formerly pastor of the Park Christian church at New Albany, Ind., was arrested at Silver Grove, Ind., on a warrant charging him with the murder of his wife. Last October the body of Mrs. Sutherlin was found hanging from a transom in her home, and it was supposed to be a case of suicide. Mrs. Sutherlin's father, however, made information before a grand jury recently charging Rev. Mr. Sutherlin with her murder and the arrest followed.

Mr. and Mrs. Sutherlin had not lived together for some time prior to the time her body was found.

Books Show Big Shortage.

Guthrie, Okla.—A federal warrant charging Thomas A. Neal, clerk of the court of the First Judicial district with embezzlement has been sworn out by C. R. Sherwood, special agent of the department of justice. It is alleged that Neal's books show a shortage of $20,000. He is at Chandler, Okla.

A Broken Chord

All idly to and fro
Her window curtain sweeps,
In the lamplight's rosy glow
She sleeps, my lady sleeps!
And I catch the glint of gold
From her tresses uncontrolled
Through the curtain's filmy fold,
And the heart within me leaps
As she sleeps! My lady sleeps!

Ah, then does she dream of me?
Mine the dearest name she keeps
In her rosy treasury?
She sleeps! My lady sleeps!
Soft! Her blossom lips now part!
Has she secret to impart?
And I wait with trembling heart!
Nay, a sound my soul abhors!
For she snores! My lady snores!

The LONG WHITE SEAM

BY JULIA TRUTT BISHOP

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Bess, the pretty one, just home from college, lounged back in an arm chair, her white hands clasped behind her head and her amused eyes on her elder sister. Rachel, the plain one, sat in the midst of drifts of white, busily sewing. And there was that in the sewing, or in the cloth, or in what it all meant, that had turned Rachel's plainness into something nearly akin to beauty.

"Rachel!" called a voice up the stairway. "Oh, Rachel! Come down a moment and help me with this sideboard. I can't move it alone."

The girl emerged, smiling, from among the snowy drifts, and ran down stairs, light of foot and of heart. She came back presently, washed her hands and set to work again.

"Sister!" shouted a boyish voice from the gallery. "Send me another spool of that coarse thread. I've got the kite out ever so far, and my cord's out."

She arose again and went out; and Bess heard her talking merrily as she tied the thread to the cord. Danny held. When she returned and sat down at the machine, there was not a ripple of impatience on her contented face.

"How can you stand it?" asked Bess, still more amused. "I have kept time. In the last half hour you have been called away from your work eight times; and yet you come back looking so seraphic that it makes one want to shake you."

"I don't get much time to sew," Rachel answered, blushing a little. "But, then, I haven't many things to make, and it won't take so long. And they'll all miss me a good deal. I must do what I can for them, while I am here."

"It's the most ridiculous thing," said Bess, thoughtfully, "that you should be thinking of marrying! Somehow, nobody would ever have thought it of you. Why, you have never even had a lover that I can remember; and I always had the house full of them, from the time I was a little thing with my hair in a pig-tail. And here am I, not thinking of being engaged yet—and there is sly, demure you, going to marry the finest man in all the country round. I'd just like to know how you did it, Miss Rachel Brand."

Rachel blushed more and more.

"I hardly know how it was," she said shyly. "Brother John brought him over for a week, and they went hunting a good deal—and I was busy, of course, for mother was not very well that week and Susan went home to her sister's funeral—so I had the cooking to do—and Brother John is so thoughtless—he would persist in bringing him into the kitchen. You don't know how mortified I was——"

"How can you stand it?" asked Bess.

Bess broke into a laugh.

"Oh, you deceitful minx!" she cried. "You and Brother John made it up between you, I know—luring him out there where he could see our careful Martha with her sleeves rolled up, conducting herself as a busy housewife should. And this to a man who has been living in a boarding house! No wonder he fell a prey to your artful devices! Well, when he comes this evening, I shall make myself duly scarce. After falling in love with the Model Woman, as set forth in my sister Rachel, he would not even deign to look at a useless creature like me, who couldn't even boil water decently."

And Bess took herself off, notwithstanding Rachel's laughing protests, and wrote letters until she wearied of them, and left the wind to blow them where it would.

The wind blew one of them down into the orchard at the side of the house, where Rachel sat with a dainty little piece of handwork, while the low afternoon sun sent pale green rays through the apple boughs. Rachel caught it as it flew past her, not knowing what it was, until her eyes had swept along several lines.

"——amused at Rachel, who was always cut out for an old maid, we decided so long ago. She sits up there, all day long—except when they call her for something, which is about every two minutes, for Rachel is a helpful somebody, and not at all like her good-for-nothing sister—she sits there, I say, sewing, sewing, on her trousseau—sewing the long white seam,' as Jean Ingelow says—and with the most calmly, placidly happy expression on her face, as though the earth and love and everything like that had been made just for her. It makes me——"

"Do you still want us to be married?" she whispered.

Rachel's eyes were wet with a shining happy moisture, when Danny came running, sending a jubilant shout before him:

"Sister! Yonder he comes! An' I bet he's brought me a new baseball!"

"Mr. Arnold, this is Bess," she said, a little later, blushing and smiling, until even one who did not love her very much would have seen that she was no longer plain.

"I think I shall go over to Arkwright on a visit to Ethel Joyner," said Bess a week later. Somehow, her vacation was beginning to pall upon her and she was restless.

"I think I would not go," said Rachel, quietly. She was still sewing, but rather slowly; as though there were no need for haste. As Bess looked at her with quick inquiry she said: "Mother is anxious for you to help her a little—or at least, to want to help her—and—well, I wouldn't go." And then Rachel hummed a low tune, to show how much she was at ease.

Other days went by, and Rachel pushed the machine back against the wall. "There is no haste," she said. "I am a little tired of sewing so long. I think I will rest for a few days." And she rested, not being strong enough to go on a picnic with her lover and the family, and feeling too tired for the walk to church. Bess grew more irritable, and began letters and threw them into the fire, and started books, and forgot how far she had read.

"I think I shall go to the city and find employment," she suggested; and Rachel turned upon her with a pale face.

"Bess, you shall not go!" she cried, with a little desolate wail in her voice. "Just stay here—it will all come right. I—I need you to stand by me. You see—I—I am not quite sure whether I will marry Fred—after all. I am not positive that I love him—and one ought to be very sure, don't you think so?" And with lips white and trembling, she looked into Bessie's eyes.

The next day Bess went out for a walk, and before the walk was finished she was on her way to see Ethel, leaving a saucy, merry little note behind her. "I'm not a very useful creature," she said to herself, "but at least I can do this one generous thing—while there is time."

Rachel was very pale when she met her lover.

"Bess has gone away," she said quietly, with her eyes on his face. "She grew a little restless, I suppose—and she has gone over to Arkwright to see a friend of hers——"

"Yes?" said Mr. Arnold, with friendly inquiry. "She'll come back to our wedding, of course?"

Rachel's face grew rosy red under a sudden rush of color.

"Do you—do you still—want us to be married?" she whispered; and his look of utter amazement was sufficient answer.

"You haven't been like yourself since Bess came home," he said wrathfully. "Somehow she didn't take a fancy to me—though I tried with all my might to win her over. Never mind—it's all right now."

Half an hour later he tried to call her down from that upper room, where the machine was making a steady whir, as of a whole colony of exceedingly busy bees.

"Come down to the orchard—it's lovely under the trees. What are you doing there, anyhow, Rachel?"

"Sewing the long white seam," she murmured, as she rose to answer his call; and Bessie's legacy of peace was on her face as she went.

FORTUNE WORRIES POOR WOMAN

Was Bequeathed a Neat Sum and Can't Get Used to It.

"The wealthy do have their worries," said Mrs. Cynthia Nicholson, who is worth $50,000, looking up today from the steaming washtub over which she had toiled for many years to support her family, and which she finds it difficult to leave in spite of her snug little fortune. "I have a whole lot of money now," she continued. "I have put it in bank, but goodness, burglars rob banks, and so do bank officers! I want somebody to watch the bank officers and somebody to watch the watchers."

Judge Henry S. Stevenson yesterday afternoon sought out Mrs. Nicholson, who is a widow, in her rooms on the third floor, rear, of a tenement house in Harriet street, says a Bridgeport (Conn.) special to the New York Herald, and told her that her uncle, William Germond of Middletown, had died, leaving an estate of which her share will be between $40,000 and $50,000, and handed her a certified check for $1,000 as the first installment of her fortune.

"I toiled for forty years," said this energetic widow, who is now 59 years old, "without being able to save a single penny for a rainy day, and I never can get used to having money. It troubles me. It makes me suspicious and I keep thinking everyone is trying to swindle me out of it. I would like to build myself a comfortable home, but I am afraid of the real estate agents and builders, and I know I could never trust a lawyer.

"Of course I am glad I haven't to work any more, and the children will be able to live well on the money when I am gone, but I was happy enough before I became wealthy. Now I am worried half to death."

Profit in Making Rag Dolls.

Two women, one having business ability, and the other artistic talent, started out some little time ago to earn their living. They chose the manufacture of rag dolls. They took a room on a business street, and began to supply the dolls by the wholesale, to firms who would sell them at retail.

The artistic woman painted the faces, and the companion did the more practical part of forming the bodies and making the costumes of the dolls. The business grew. The price of the dolls rose in proportion to the elaborate makeup of the doll, till some of them brought $8 to $10.

The young women no longer could do all the work themselves. They began to give out the little garments, caps and socks to be made by the dozen. This business has progressed until now two floors in a building on a public street are utilized. Quite a staff of helpers is employed. The success of the firm has come from the practical way in which the members went to work, their reliability and the excellence of the article supplied.

To a Girl.

I know what is the object
Of that little sigh,
And why the secret languor
That lurks within your eye.
You smile? You'll learn some morning,
Sweet maid, why this is so;
Perchance you now suspect it,
I know.

I know what things you dream of,
And what you see in sleep;
Writ on the brow the secrets
I read, that you would keep!
You smile? You'll learn some morning,
Sweet maid, why this is so;
Perchance you now suspect it,
I know.

I know your laughter's reason,
And why you weep apart;
I penetrate the mystery
Of your woman's heart!
You smile? You'll learn some morning,
Sweet maid, why this is so;
What feeling you know naught of
I wist all feeling, know!

How Many Did You Get?

The total output of the New York oyster industry during the past year was 6,082,960 bushels, according to the annual report of Superintendent Wood, of the Shell Fish Bureau of the State Forest, Fish and Game Department. Their value is estimated at $7,603,700. During the year, 2,129 acres of land under water were leased for this industry, making a total of 30,000 acres within the State on which oysters are cultivated.—Recreation.

SANG IN OPEN STREETS.

Vienna Stage Celebrities Test Public's Judgment of Music.

A merry quartette of performers made an interesting experiment in the streets of Vienna, says the New Orleans Times-Democrat, in order to see with their own eyes how the general public would appreciate the highest artistic talent if it were exhibited in the open street, unannounced and unadorned.

Miss Gerda Walde, prima donna of the Vienna stage; Louis Treumann, the popular comedian of the Carl theater; Edward Eysler, the composer, and Alfred Deutsch-German, the playwright, arrayed in the garb of ordinary street musicians, made a tour through the principal streets of the city. The composer, Eysler, performed the duties of organ-grinder, while the others sung a repertoire which included such well-known songs as "Geh, Mach Dein Fenster Auf" (Go, Open Your Window"), "Kussen Ist Keine Sund" ("Kissing Is No Sin") and "Jetzt Spielt's Uns an Tanz" (Now They Play and Dance for Us").

The incognito of the celebrated band remained undiscovered and the day's "takings" aggregated a paltry 68 kreutzers (about 1 shilling 2 pence), which they laughingly divided among themselves. Their previous doubts as to the ability of the public to judge of the value of art unassisted by theatrical effect have now given way to settled conviction. But, nevertheless, it would have been interesting to find out what the day's takings would have amounted to had the quartette openly announced themselves as the leading lights of the Austrian musical world. Doubtless the man in the street, even in Vienna, does not look for talent in the streets.

Scotland Leads as Land of Twins.

Scotland is the land of twins and triplets, holding a long lead over her sister countries in this matter. In twelve months no fewer than 1,625 mothers gave birth to twins, and twenty-five presented triplets. Scotland is among the few countries in Europe where the proportion of male babies is greater than of females. Striking an average, it is found that there are about 104 males to every 100 females, but the surplus of grown-up girls is nevertheless large, as so many men travel south, and apparently neglect to take the precaution to obtain return tickets to the land of cakes. There is yet another interesting fact about Scotland. It is the land of hale old age. Recent returns died between the ages of 90 and 100. —Answers.

Father Was Laid Up.

Arthur Hill and Joseph Schrode of "The Wizard of Oz" company chanced to drop in at a small shooting gallery in Providence last week, where they spent an hour peppering the bull's-eye and winning innumerable cigars. The place was presided over by a pretty girl and a decrepit old man whom she called "Father." As Arthur Hill does not indulge in the pernicious smoking habit, he handed back all the cigars he won for his unerring aim and said to the girl, "Give them to the old man."

The next day Hill and Schrode were strolling past the same place, and they noticed that the girl was on duty alone, but the old man was missing.

"I guess father smoked them," remarked Hill, laconically.

How Salmon Are Hatched.

The Oregon State fisheries exhibit, which will be located in the north end of the forestry building at the Lewis and Clark exposition, Portland, Ore., will be one of fascinating interest to Eastern people visiting the fair. The exhibit will show the methods used in hatching salmon, the chief fishing resource of Oregon, and there will be many specimens of the "lordly chinook," the king of fresh water fishes. Some of the largest fish of the spring catch, weighing eighty-five or ninety pounds, and measuring five and one-half to six feet long, will be preserved in formaldehyde in inverted glass jars made especially for the purpose. The exhibit will be the finest of its kind ever displayed at an exposition.—Recreation.

An Irresistible Conclusion.

He was a critic, so he said;
He wrote his way to fame.
If nonsense chanced to fill his head,
He wrote it just the same.
His essays were made up of queer
Opinionated kinks,
And people trembled at the sneer
Of Jingle Burnem Jinks.

He showed where Shakespeare sometimes failed,
Although his work was fair.
At Swift he arrogantly railed;
He patronized Voltaire.
The life work of the world's great men
He'd crush in forty winks
And very few escaped the pen
Of Jingle Burnem Jinks.

But those who followed him at length
Grew very sad indeed.
They cried, "Pray show us, in your strength
What is there left to read!
Upon what author may we lean
As one who really thinks?"
He answered with an air serene,
"Why, Jingle Burnem Jinks."

Sister Found Out.

In direct disobedience of orders, tempted by the frozen surface of the pond, Tommy tried to skate upon it, but the treacherous ice gave way and he fell in. Returning home shivering from his icy bath, he met his sister. She sympathized with him in his misfortune, brought him dry clothing, and concealed his disobedience from his parents. Next day she came from the pond in a similar plight. In utter amazement Tommy surveyed her dripping form, exclaiming: "I told you the ice wouldn't bear skating on, Jennie. Why did you try it?" "I wanted to see for myself whether it would or not," was his sister's tearful reply—New York Times.

From Simplicity to Pomp

President Roosevelt was inaugurated with great "pomp and circumstance." There was a spectacular procession with banners and brass bands. There were hundreds of thousands of people to witness the procession and when the president took the oath of office he looked upon the upturned faces of a multitude. The newspapers printed page after page of descriptive articles, later on the weekly papers showed it in pictures and then the magazines had their say.

In what strange contrast all this is with the inauguration of Thomas Jefferson, just one hundred years ago. The National Intelligencer, the leading newspaper of Washington at that time, gave the following report of Mr. Jefferson's inauguration:

"On Monday, after Thomas Jefferson had taken the oath of office as president of the United States, the oath of office was likewise administered to George Clinton as vice-president of the United States. After the delivery of the speech the president was waited on by a large assemblage of members of the legislature, citizens and strangers of distinction, and a procession was formed at the navy yard, composed of the several mechanics engaged, which marched to military music, displaying with considerable taste the various insignia of the professions."

Dr. Osler's Quick Diagnosis

Dr. Williams Osler of Baltimore, the famous medical specialist of Johns Hopkins, who set the country by the ears because of his assertions concerning the uselessness of men after they reach the age of 60, has the reputation among his brethren for getting the biggest fees for the least work of any man in the profession.

A story which is current among Washington physicians is about a rich old man whose wife has been ailing for months. All the local doctors had tried their hands without much result. The old lady had passed the allotted term of life, 70 years, and was suffering from the general breaking up of her vital organs.

The old man, genuinely fond of his wife, thought the doctors did not know what the trouble was, and when some one suggested the renowned diagnostician of Baltimore he jumped at the chance. He telegraphed to Dr. Osler, but that learned gentleman was very busy and could not come. The distracted man wired again, telling Dr. Osler to leave his work and come no matter what the cost. When Giants Roamed Earth

The past was more prolific in the production of giants than the present. In 1820 one of these giants, who was exhibited at Rouen, was ten feet high, and the giant Galabra, brought from Arabia to Rome in the time of Claudius Caesar, was the same height. Fanum, who lived in the time of Eugene II, was eleven and one-half feet in height.

The Chevalier Scrog in his journey to the Peak Teneriffe found in one of the caverns of that mountain the head of a giant who had sixty teeth and who was not less than fifteen feet high. The giant Faragus, slain by Orlando, the nephew of Charlemagne, according to reports, was twenty-eight feet high. Charity Machine a Wonder

"A charity machine," said the sailor, "stands in front of the house of Edison Murphy of Croydon. Any tramp that comes along can get a cent out of the machine.

"The tramps don't believe their eyes at first. They stand and look at the charity machine in a knowing way. They say to themselves that they ain't green, and it's no use trying to do them.

Wiles of the "Knocker"

There's the Fellow in the Corner at the first night of the play,
Though the piece is a sensation that electrifies Broadway,
Though it gives the critics thrills and makes the glad box office dance
When the house is sold from aisles to eaves full six weeks in advance,

Elsie decided that she must go home and hunt for the palace some other day. She turned about to see which way to start, but everywhere it looked the same. A shudder run over her childish frame, her heart gave a little jump, and a lump came in her throat. She did not know what it meant, she had never felt that way before. She hurried in the direction which appeared the most open. What was that after her? She must run. The forest was full of evil spirits who were pursuing her. She could not go back. She ran breathlessly forward over hillock and rock. She grew more frightened with each step, yet could not look back to see her pursuer. Something seemed to fix her gaze rigidly ahead.

A crashing of the underbrush behind her threw her into a frenzy of terror and she screamed aloud: "Mamma! Mamma!" Then fell forward on a mound of earth and leaves. The next instant she felt something warm and soft on her hand. Shivering with fright she looked up to find two big, soft eyes looking into hers. With a scream of delight she laid her head on a shaggy coat as she said: "Rover, Rover, where did you come from?" In another moment Mr. Lane came up to soothe his terrified little dreamer.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

A WEE BIT OF JEALOUSY.

I've got a bran' new baby sister. I'm Marjorie, and she isn't. I'm six whole years and had some nice birthdays, and she hasn't. She's awful cute—about as tall as my doll—and you never saw such darling toes, and she has weeny teeny hands with five fingers, just as many as the big folks. I don't know how the doctor carried her in so quiet. In the morning she wasn't there, and when I was taking my bread and milk, she was. I love bread and milk—and with sugar it's delicious. She and me both like milk, only I take mine in a bowl, and she doesn't. What good cows to give us all that milk? Doctor must have bottles full in his buggy, in one of his pockets, maybe. Guess that's how he bringed her to us, all covered up in a soft box so's it wouldn't knock her head. There's no hair on top. She has awful queer ways. If you hold her, she wiggles all around to let you know you're not holding her comfortable, and if you put her down, she cries such a funny, tiny cry. First I thought it was a new kitten, but mother says they all cry like that 'cause the doctor's horse goes too fast and it hurts 'em.

Of course, I'm glad doctor gave us such a nice baby and I love her most all the time, but then nobody calls me "sweetheart" any more, and I can't sleep so well when she fusses, and when I begin to play house in my room—it used to be the same as mothers, but now it's next door—that horrid old nurse says: "Sh!" and points her finger at me. If I cry, mother tells me to keep quiet, or I'll wake baby. I don't know what to do by myself; wish I was somebody else. Before we had baby, mother used to go out with me and read nice books, and, O, heaps of things! Nobody hardly says anything to me now. I thing when babies come into houses, little sisters ought to have new toys or a nurse all to theirselves; then we could never get so lonesome. Wonder how long it'll take for my sister to grow up. She hasn't a single tooth yet, and she's four weeks old. Guess I had some when I was as big as that. Anyway, I can bite fine, and I'm six. O dear, I do wish she would hurry and get old, so's we could have fun together!

P'haps I'm naughty not to want her to squall all she likes, and supposin' she got ammonia or scarlick fever like my rag doll, wouldn't I be awful sorry, though?

I'm going to kindergarten next week. If I like it I'll ask if baby can come, too. I'm strong enough to hold her, but I expect she'd wiggle or somethin' and I might want to drop her and run away. O, I guess I won't ask. I know a little girl who goes to kindergarten. She's about as big as me. They do lovely things there—walk around and sing and make paper boats, and the teacher tells the children about golden-rod that grows on stems. Wouldn't I be glad if it was next week now! I'm tired of being terrible lonesome, and when doctor comes here again to feel baby all over, I'm just going to tell him not to bring one single sister or brother for three whole months—so there! That's a long time and p'haps mother'll love me soon and call me her darling like she used to—A. J. Levi in Indianapolis News.

Timely Fashion Hints

New York City.—There is a peculiar charm and daintiness about the waist utilized for the finer cotton and linen materials which are in no sense washa- that allows of wearing with a chemisette that is apparent at a glance and that is largely accountable for its marked popularity. No model of the model of heavy Irish lace has a skirt trimmed with three rows of cords covered with emerald green velvet, heading the lace flounce. On the bodice the velvet faces little revers that frame a chemisette of tucked white mull, and the cording is used again to trim the big sleeves.

Blouse or Shirt Waist.

No matter how many fancy shirt waists a woman may have, she always finds a place for an additional plain one, and this model is so exceptionally attractive as to be sure of being included in the list. As illustrated, the material is white dotted Madras, but the waist is one well adapted to almost all waistings, and can be made up effectively in any of the cotton and linen materials of the present season, in the wash flannels that are so popular for cooler days, and in the simpler silk waistings.

The model is an eminently simple one, and can be made either with or without the applied yoke at the back. The back is plain, simply drawn down in gathers at the waist line, but the fronts are laid in three narrow pleats at the top of each four at the waist line, but if preferred they can be left free at the waist line and adjusted to suit the individual. The sleeves are the favorite ones of the season that are in shirt waist style, but full at the shoulders, and finished with straight cuffs.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is four yards twenty-one, three and five-eighth yards twenty-seven, or two and one-eighth yards forty-four inches wide.

A LATE DESIGN BY MAY MANTON.

spring is better liked and none is better suited to the fashionable soft materials. The one illustrated is most graceful and attractive, and is adapted to many combinations. As shown, the material is chiffon veiling, hydrangea blue in color, combined with cream lace over chiffon, but it would be equally effective made of any other soft wool, or from the many fashionable thin silks, either with lace or contrasting silk for the chemisette and cuffs. Also it can be ble, embroidery or lace, as preferred, being used for chemisette and cuffs.

The lining is smoothly fitted and closes at the centre front. The chemisette is arranged over it, and can be rendered transparent by cutting away beneath when that effect is desired. The waist itself is full, shirred to give the band effect. The sleeves are peculiarly graceful and shirred to form three puffs, but can be varied by being left without the shirrings, forming single puffs. At the waist is a shaped belt.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is five and three-fourth yards twenty-one, five yards twenty-seven, or three and one-fourth yards forty-four inches wide, with one and three-eighth yards of all-over lace, and five-eighth yard of silk for belt.

Silk Softness.

Never were Liberty weaves more fascinating. Even the erstwhile ordinary summer silks have become exquisitely soft and satiny. The crepe weaves are of extraordinary richness.

A Charming Parasol.

A charming pink parasol had a foundation of flowered Pompadour silk, the lower part being composed of white chiffon and lace with little disks of the Pompadour silk applied.

Adjusting Veils.

It is hard to tell how veils are to be adjusted over so much hair and such impossible hats, but we are informed that veils to match the general color scheme are among the essentials of good dressing.

A Simple Gown.

A very simple gown of mignonette green louisine, a very soft and clinging fabric, had a skirt shirred in a deep dip yoke, the shirring heavily corded.

FARM AND GARDEN

SOAKING SEEDS.

After having experimented with different kinds of seeds for several years I find it a decided advantage, especially with seeds that are slow to germinate. Both vegetable and flower seeds give a much larger per cent of plants. But if the soaking is not properly done the seeds are apt to rot. Sweet peas, when soaked before planting, will come up in two weeks or ten days. Celery and onion seed are two kinds that the writer never was successful with until after this rule was adopted. Some kinds must be soaked longer than others. Sweet peas take a longer time than garden peas to sprout and pop corn longer than sweet corn. Such seeds as tomato, radish, cucumber, melon, etc., which require only a few days to germinate after being put into the ground should not be soaked at all. To soak seeds for planting proceed as follows: Put each separate kind of seed into a clean vessel and more than cover the seeds with clear water from which the chill has been removed. Let stand over night. Have as many squares of muslin as there are varieties of seed; wring the cloths out of hot water, double once, stretch over the top of a pail and turn in the seed, water and all; the water will drain through and leave the seed in the cloth. Now, tie up, giving ample room for the seeds to swell. A pint of peas or corn in each cloth is about right. One-fourth pint of small seeds is all that should be in one cloth. Label each kind after tying up; place them in a warm spot, but not close to a fire. A warm board on the south side of a building is an excellent place. In a few hours, the cloth around the seeds will appear rather dry, when each must be dipped into lukewarm water and replaced. Be careful that they are not kept too wet. Examine often and when small, white specks appear the seeds are beginning to sprout. Put into the ground at once.—Anna Gallihor in The Epitomist.

QUIT ACTING THE SHOAT.

In the last few years I have often noticed that hog cholera goes in spots, it will strike a neighborhood, and sometimes, as many as twenty different families will have to buy hogs for meat. While it has been several times in our immediate neighborhood, there has been one who has escaped, and I came to the conclusion it was because he had not "acted the shoat" and tried to own all the hogs in the country. I talked with this neighbor a few days ago, and see he has not only learned his lesson by experience, but has practiced it to profit. The method is easy, and I thinkk if followed will help to clear many farms of this dreaded disease, besides bringing a nice bank account. In the first place he has the best of stock, no scrub sows, generally about six, three sows to drop pigs at about the same time, which he cares for the whole of his time. I have known him to have hogs out of these pigs in six months which would average two hundred and seventy pounds, then he would sell about this time. The other three sows would drop him not less than twenty-five, which he cares for in the same way, and in four years he has never lost a hog. So it is better to have good healthy hogs and not so many than to have one hundred, or in other words be overstocked and lose half. He begins to fatten them right away, in fact his fattening pen is from birth until sold, regular feeding all they will eat, with slop and milk and plenty of fresh clean water. He does not feed mess or cooked ration. In former years he was known better than the average farmer, his hogs as good as the best.—M. H. P. in Indiana Farmer.

PREPARING FOR CORN.

I begin the preparation for next year's corn crop by selecting my seed the previous fall and store it away where it will keep dry and will not injure from hard freezing. I select a field for corn that was sown to clover and orchard grass two years prior to the previous summer. In fact, this field was planned for corn in 1905 when the clover and grass was sown. I began early to draw the stable manure to this field. It was broadcasted to be turned under. I find that this is the best plan I have ever tried to take care of the manure. It is laying out on the sod preparing to grow a good crop of corn instead of being piled up under the drip of the stable wasting as is the case on some farms. As soon as the weather permits I begin to plow under the manure and sod. Early plowing will kill many insects that would injure the crop if left until spring protected from injury in their earthen homes. It will also save moisture from the melting of snows and from early rains that will be needed by the crop before the growing season is past. Then the freezing and thawing of the land will aid in preparing a good seed bed. When spring comes an Acme harrow and a clodmasher should be used to prepare the land for corn. The Acme if run over the land several times will cut the sod up thoroughly without bringing it to the surface. The sod will be left under ground in order to rot and furnish plant food for the growing crop in the latter part of the season. I have succeeded in the past in getting almost a perfect stand of corn which is necessary in order to grow a good crop and in spite of dry seasons my corn has made a reasonably good yield. Furnishing plant food, getting a good stand and saving moisture are three very important points in growing good crops.—A. J. Legg The Epitomist.

PLANTING THE GARDEN.

For years we have urged that farmers do not pay enough attention to the garden. No tract of land is more important, and none should yield greater value. Order your seeds early, and get the very best of everything. Plant in suitable time and in the best possible manner. Don't be satisfied with a single crop. The garden should be a source of constant supply the summer through. Plant so the crops will come off in rotation. We shall talk more of this later. But now is the time to secure your seeds and have them ready. Peas, beans, radish, lettuce, turnips—these and many more should be planted early and late and between times so as to have fresh and crisp vegetables coming on all the time. The garden that produces a few early vegetables, and grows rank weeds all the balance of the season, is not an up-to-date garden.—Up-to-Date Farming.

SOME GARDEN HINTS.

The gardens should have a good location. See that the soil is deep, rich and thoroughly mellow. Use no manure but what is thoroughly rotted. Chip manure well rotted is of the very best. Hardwood ashes is a good dressing for lettuce, onions and most other vegetables. Soil can not be too deep for beets nor too rich for pie plant.

DON'T NEGLECT BERRIES

Don't neglect the berries and small fruits. Of course, the strawberry beds are well mulched. Don't be in a hurry to remove the mulch, and when you do remove it only clean it away from the plants. If the old canes have not been removed from the blackberries and raspberries, now is a good time to do that. Now is also a good time to trim the grape vines. Do this thoroughly, for only new vines bear grapes. Cut back close.

POULTRY NOTES.

Our fowls would suffer were they presented with the same unvarying mess day after day.

In feeding fowls the best rule to go by is a balanced ration. This means that the hen should be fed just what is needed.

A variety in food must be given our feathered friends if we would have them fill our expectations. Variety is one great charm of life.

Get a table of foods and study the proportions and then balance them up a little. Clover, bran, green bone and meat are good to balance against corn.

An egg is composed of a certain per cent of albumen, of mineral matter, water and other materials. In order that an egg be formed these necessary constituents must be supplied.

It is doubtful if any person can state the actual average cost of an egg, but it is an easy matter to learn if he production of eggs is equivalent to the value of food given.

To balance corn something that contains more mineral and nitrogenous matter must be fed. Hens, especially in summer, need but little carbonaceous matter compared with what they need in winter.

If poultry raisers will study the general question of the classes of food elements they can frequently substitute one for the other, according as they have this or that article at hand and according to the price of the various articles in their nearest markets.

Bank Notes Stand Much Handling.

That Uncle Sam's notes stand a great deal of rough and careless handling is a fact that impresses itself upon any one who has ever chanced to note the manner in which the average cashier pulls and jerks the bills before he pushes them through the window to the waiting patron.

A single Treasury note measures 3½ inches in width by 7¼ in length. It will sustain, without breaking, lengthwise, a weight of 41 pounds, crosswise, a weight of 91 pounds. The notes run four to a sheet—a sheet being 8¼ inches wide by 13½ inches long. One of these sheets lengthwise will suspend 108 pounds, and crosswise 177 pounds.

It will be observed that a single note is capable of sustaining, crosswise, a weight of 91 pounds, which is twice the amount by 9 pounds of the weight the note can sustain lengthwise; while in the case of the sheet, the crosswise sheet lacks 89 pounds of double sustaining power of the lengthwise sheet.—Phfladelphia Record.

Potato bugs are doing much damage. We have gotten rid of them entirely by this plan: Get 10 cents worth of paris green and put in a can, cover the top with a thin cloth and go over the plants while the dew is on them and dust each one with the paris green. This at once puts the finishing touch to the potato bugs. Try it

STOCK LAW.

While I am strictly opposed to "stock law" if it will be detrimental to the future welfare and improvement of our county, I want to state a few facts.

In the first place the original law of the states was "stock law," or, in other words, an imaginary line around a crop was sufficient protection against the invasion of stock of any kind, as far as law was concerned. Our forefathers had an idea as to what would be best, but some sections decided that it was too much of a wilderness and had the law amended so as to require a real stock proof fence. Many of these sections have since gotten out of the wilderness and the original "stock law" is now in effect. It is easier for a section to build up or improve in most any line under "stock law" than it is without it.

The hogs killed for meat in Chilton county will not pay the interest on money invested to fence against them. Or, there is not enough hog meat killed in Chilton county in ten years to pay the cost of fencing against them for one year. One good pig one year old, raised in pen or pasture, is worth from two to four at the same age of the average range pig, and the cost of raising would be no more.

The manure from a cow is worth her feed. This fact has been thoroughly demonstrated and is admitted by every progressive, up-to-date farmer, but if the cattle are allowed to run at large very little is saved and the cow, in hunting grass, consumes about as much as she gets in the exercising. The same amount of feed would do twice as much good if she were confined. The samershrdlupu were confined. When they are kept off range a cow can be tied out until 10 o'clock a. m. and get more good than if she were running at large in a no "stock law" section all day.

I have spent many years in "stock law" sections and never did I hear a kick against it in any way. My one cow gave milk enough to supply our family with an abundance of milk, and butter, and enough was sold to more than pay for her keeping, and it was a cheap cow, too. And see here, I would have staid in one of those "stock law" sections, but land all around was worth five to ten times what it is worth here, and already owning land here I couldn't make a swap.

Often while living in a "stock law" section I was presented with 50 pounds of pure home-made lard, a ham, a shoulder, or a side of meat. Who in Chilton county (unless it is some one in favor of the law here) would feel able to give away such presents to an acquaintance of only a few months, or year, or two at outside? No one that I know.

In those "stock law" sections, in this and adjoining states, you can often see at hog killing time two or four mule wagons piled up with from ten to twenty dressed hogs. Who ever saw such a sight in Chilton or in any other no "stock law" section?

It may be true that at first the passing of a "stock law" would inflict some temporary hardships to a few but it would be to a very few, and it would not last long. The general welfare of the county would so improve that those that suffered temporarily would be well repaid. There are always some hardships or inconveniences connected with a change of business. They are, however, soon overcome and forgotten, and later are looked back upon as a blessing.

The only real, genuine, honest kick I can find against "stock law" is from boundaries or newly established "stock law" sections, and from people who do not know. And no proof is ever brought up except on these conditions.

Broad-minded and up-to-date, progressive farmers would prefer coming to Chilton county if we could offer them protection from stock. Give Chilton county a "stock law" and hundreds of acres of land will go into cultivation every year that would be let alone without a "stock law." Some have said that it wound run our renters off. I can't say that it will not, but I do know that renters pay from $4.00 to $8.00 per acre rent in the "stock law" sections I have lived in, when $2.00 per acre seems good rent here. I would rather rent my land out without fencing at $4.00 per acre than to rent it for $2.00 and have to fence it, too. That does not seem to indicate a scarcity of renters, and therefore must be good for the renters. Would the land owner be in favor of a move to run his renters off? If the widows and orphans are expected to exist solely from the income of a few scrub cows and razor-back hogs, then for them it would probably be better we'd let the "stock law" alone; but I am not in favor of keeping the county poor and behind just because a few poor people prefer that existence. Those widows and orphans (and there is no one who has more tender feelings and well wishes for them than I) will be better able to make a good living under this general improvement of the country.

We cannot raise improved stock of any kind here without keeping them up. There are hundreds of good men in favor of "stock law" who ought to come out and say so. Don't let the other side have all the say. I find that while more are writing against the passing of a "stock law," it is easier to find men in favor of it than against it.

MARS HILL.

Editor Union.

I've been thinking for some time I'd write a short letter to your valuable paper, so here I come. Our community has been getting on fine with their work, but the rain has stopped everything and the grass is sure growing fast. Bro. Aaron Oates' baby was buried here Sunday. Rev. J. H. Thomas preached a grand sermon here Sunday. Mrs. Dashie Leach, of Fletcher, has been visiting her father, E. L. Scott, this week. Hurrah for "Observer" on the stock law. I'm with him, not because I'm too lazy to split rails, for I've got a good fence, but I've some neighbors that are too lazy to keep their fences up, and when mine or other people's stock get in their fields they come out crippled. Such people are against stock law because they would have to build them a fence to keep their stock in their own field. They like it if others build them a pasture. To prove this, Tom Watson, in our neighborhood, has a large old field and swamp pasture, and several got permission and pastured on it last year, and they want to do the same this year, but the fence is washed down, and rather than help fix the fence they are trying to get another pasture already fixed, free of charge. These are land owners, not renters. All our cows are stock law cows, because they'd rather feed in a field than in the woods. Just let them go, and if there is an old field in reach, there's where they go to graze. With stock law we would have more and better stock of all kinds. It takes four pine woods rooters to make as much meat as one kept up in the lot or pen. I know it, for I've tried it. Observer, you needn't get that cow from "Little Bill" unless you've got a good pasture, or you'll get "blue John milk" sure. That's all he got before they started a coaling there, and took off the timber, and now the grass grows there, and to his surprise the cows got to giving good milk, and he thinks the range is getting better everywhere. Well, I could say a good deal more on this subject, and may come again. Success to THE UNION and its readers.

UNION GROVE.

Editor UNION.

Health of this community is good. There are some long faces on account of so much rain, and General Green is common, and the prospects this Monday are that he won't be disturbed soon. Miss L. Littleton has returned from a visit to her sister, Mrs Ernest Marcus. Harve Connell and family visited John Lindsey's this week. Will Connell and family were visitors of T. T. Coost this week. Mr. and Mrs. Littleton visited J. T. Davis last Sunday. Wm. Robinson and wife were visitors at John Benson's Sunday. T. F. Cost and family went to the new church at the Blow graveyard Sunday and report a large attendance of well-behaved people, and a good sermon by the pastor, Rev. Art Foshee. That word behave appeals to me with great force. R. T. Jones paid "Robinson town" a flying visit Saturday night. The people in this part don't want any stock law, and I aim to see to it. If a task is once begun, never leave it till it's done; be the labor great or small, do it well or not at all. Success to THE UNION and its many readers.

RANDOLPH.

So much rain is making the fields look green. Revival services are being held at the Methodist church, conducted by the pastor, Mr. J. C. Harrison. Mrs. Gary Cox, while gathering strawberries Saturday, was bitten by a snake of the rattlesnake pilot variety. The Southern railway here is preparing to extend its side track for some distance south of town. The plank walk-way leading to the meeting houses is being overhauled and improved. R. M. Hubbard and sister, Miss Emma, were among our visitors last week. S. E. Waldrup, one of the populists of Chilton, was a pleasant visitor last week. Mack Crumpton, who has been with M. L. Cleveland for several months, left for Birmingham last week to take a business course in college. J. C. C. Wooley, of Lawley, was in town last week. Will Martin and family have moved into the Mahan house. Mr. and Mrs. E. Z. Nix were among our visitors Saturday. J. L. Smith and B. V. Washburn were pleasant callers Saturday. John T. Weeks went to Selma Sunday. In considering the men who have been leaders of the people in placing Chilton county where she is now, in the front rank, we say honor to whom honor is due. So, among those leaders no one is more entitled to honor as the people's leader than Judge Honeycutt, elected twice to the office of tax collector by the people independent of any faction or political tricks. Then at the call of his people twice elected Judge of Probate. He has enjoyed the confidence of the people all over the county, and does yet. He is a man of the people. Chilton has never had a better tax collector or Probate Judge than P. M. Honeycutt.

THORSBY LETTER.

The Golbin family that came to locate here a week ago has again returned to their former home in Mt. Horeb, Wis. During the severe electrical storm early Sunday morning the lightning struck the water tank of Mr. Sarber, letting all the water out. Rev. Gibson spoke at the college hall both Sunday morning and evening. Owing to the inclemency of the weather the attendance was not very large. Arrangements for a grand Fourth of July celebration to be held at Thorsby are already in progress. The editor of THE UNION was in our town last Friday. Mr. Forsman is having lumber hauled to his place for the purpose of erecting a cotton gin. Mr. A. Malmgren will hold an auction of his household goods on Saturday, the 13th inst. The Lundene family left for their northern home on the 9th. News is scarce this week; everybody working. Strawberries are plentiful and cheap.

"TWO OF US."

LOMAX.

Editor UNION.

In reply to G. W. Jones on the stock law question, I'll say that I admire the spirit manifested by him in handling the question. I believe he's contending for what he thinks is right, and is honestly mistaken, and that when he sees the advantages in stock law, he'll be a strong advocate of it. I wish to say the "old white-headed men" explained to me about twenty years ago why we needed stock law, and I've found the explanation true by ten years' experience under it, so you see, Mr. Jones wants the old men to go back and undo what they did years ago. Mr. Jones, can't you see that you're about twenty years behind on the stock law question? "School Boy" says stock law would be a downfall and disgrace etc. Now, School Boy, don't you know that the majority of the counties of Alabama have stock law, and that nearly ever state in the United States has stock law, and if it was as you say, that an intelligent people would repeal such a law? Don't be so narrow-minded as to bring such worthless argument as this. Go to school and learn and act accordingly. "Plain Citizen" says stock law reduces the valuation of land and causes tenants to leave us and work hardships on all, and that an intelligent people won't have it. My dear sir, isn't the most valuable property in the stock law counties? If all the renters would leave us, where would they go, as stock law is in force almost everywhere? By experience I know it does away with hardships and gives protection to crops and satisfaction to the majority of the people. Intelligent people accept the law as soon as they find out what it is. Uncle Lewis thinks he'd have to "live by bread alone." Now, Uncle, don't you know that all the meat that is shipped in here comes from a stock law country, and all the mules and fine cattle and hogs? How much meat has ever been shipped from this county to where they have stock law? The discussion on the stock law question here last Saturday night was interesting. The judges gave it to the stock law side. After the decision a vote on the question was called for. Eighteen votes were cast—16 in favor of and 2 against stock law—and one of those two lived away back in the northeast corner of Beat 9. I lack several hundred years of being as old as Methuselah, but now can see stock law in sight, even at our doors. We'll meet again this coming Saturday night and discuss this question: "Resolved, That the scenes of nature are more attractive to the eye than the art of man." L. B. Pounds will speak on the subject of "Progress and Poverty." All are invited. Get ready for stock law.

"Observer."

COOPERS.

Editor UNION.

A few words to Mr. Observer, who says he loves to shoot game when ammunition is plenty. I don't think he's got any ammunition nor game and the lock is gone off, if he's got a gun. Don't he feed those cows on pine stumps, black jack bush or pine knots? If he hasn't the timber to make rails that is not the people's fault; it is his. But I see his point; he don't care for anyone but himself. Any man that will pay 10 cents for old field pines to make rails, you must be a sorry trader. He ought to get some wire and fence his "acre patch," and his stock will stay there till they starve, and it won't take long, either. He says the renter will be better off. If that's so, let's not own any land and all be renters. He can tell the people that stuff, but can't make them believe it. I don't think he believes it himself. Now, Observer, do you know what it will cost to make a fence on the line between stock law and no stock law? Or have you ever thought about it? No, you just want stock law because you haven't any timber. Have you got any water? Have your neighbors got plenty of water during the summer? I wasn't joking about the law suits in Autauga county. It is the stark, naked truth, and if you'll come down here and go with me I'll prove it to you. So you think Autauga county is too good a class to be in law suits three days in the week, but there are people in Autauga same as in Chilton county, always sticking their shovel in where there is no dirt. I've a neighbor, Mr. Jesse Cox, who left his home in Chambers county and come out of stock law. I've heard him speak of the cattle eating the big bushes in dry pastures, and I can cite you to several men that will say the same. Bro. Cox says if he has got to live in stock law he'll go back to Chambers, where he can get running water. Ben Jones, his son-in-law, has visited Chambers county and states that he saw the cows riding bushes, and also where people had cut down dog-wood trees for the cows to eat the leaves off. If that is what you call economy, let's not have that sort of economy. Success to THE UNION and its readers.

J. S. JONES.

Clanton, Ala., May 6, 1905.

The S. C. A. of Chilton county was called to order by County President W. H. Conway at 11 a. m., who made some statements and suggestions. After which the roll of districts was called and delegates from the several districts were as follows:

No. 10, Popwells, J. D. Sims and J. Popwell; No. 14, Evergreen, S. S. Scott; No. 15, Verbena, F. A. Gulledge; No. 17, Bethel, J. N. Dennis; No. 19 Corinth, A. L. Robinson, A. Baker and B. P. Kendrick; No. 28, Highland, M. F. Lett and Frank Culpepper; No. 33, Providence, Moses Robinson and J. W. Paine; No. 38 Pine Oak, H. W. Varden; No. 39, Unity, T. P. Smith and N. J. Ward; No. 44, Union Point, J. S. Dennis and N. Minor; No. 40, Lomax, L. B. Pounds; No. 46; Collins Chapel, A. Littleton and B. N. Martin; No. 51, Union, J. W. Sorrell, T. J. Dormeny; No. 53, Moores, R. L. Prim; No. 55, Center Hill, L. A. McGraw, W. H. Killingsworth; No. 65, Clanton, Tipton Mullins, W. M. Adams and Judson Strock.

Motion prevailed that the report of warehouse committee of Chilton County Farmers' Alliance be read by the secretary of said committee.

The report was read by Alex G. Doke, and after much discussion and after being amended, was approved by the association.

The report proposes for the people of Chilton county to erect a first-class ginnery, oil mill, fertilizer mixers and cotton warehouse, same to be erected by a stock company composed of farmers and business men. The capital stock to be 1,000 shares at $25.00 each.

Vice-President F. A. Gulledge acted as president and appointed a committee of four, composed of Tipton Mullins, J. W. Sorrells, S. S. Scott and J. D. Sims, to act with the warehouse committee of Farmers' Alliance.

The following resolution, offered by J. W. Sorrell, was adopted:

Whereas, We believe supply and demand should govern the price of cotton, and, whereas, we believe by using more cotton in the South it will increase the demand; therefore, be it resolved, that it is the sense of this body that we use ducking or cotton bagging to put up our cotton this fall; also that we use no fertilizer except it be put up in cotton sacks.

Resolved, further, That the S. C. A. of Chilton county pass resolutions asking the proper authorities in the state to look after the matter at once. All parties having claims against the association are requested to present the same to the president, and after they have been approved by the association they will be paid by the treasurer.

All districts are requested to meet on May 20th at 7 p. m.

The next county meeting will be on June 3rd, 1905. Let everybody come.

Everything is doing nicely here. We're having rain, and can't do much in the field. M. F. Reliford and his father and R. B. Price, had good luck fishing May 6. I. H. Reliford and family have been visiting T. P. Crowson's family. We expect to have a big cream supper on May 20. Best wishes to THE UNION.

BETWEEN BEATS 1 AND 2.

Editor UNION.

You know I was in Clanton last Monday, and I guess I fell in with "Observer." I was in company with Judge Reynolds, he having very kindly invited me to dinner, and this man was talking to the judge about stock law, and said we must have it, but the judge seemed more anxious for dinner at that time of the day than for stock law, and I'm sure I was. I'm not sure it was the real Observer; might have been his father or grandfather, but he sure wanted stock law. Now, honorable editor, "Pat's Prayer" might have saved that man before May 1st, but if you won't let me pray for him, let me sing him a song, and if you won't let me pray or sing, we'll pass the hat around and take up the ballots, and see how they count for Waldrop and Jones and I will sure count as much as "Observer" with his churn of corn cob blue john milk, and "Dad's Plow Boy," of Scotland, to help him. Observer, let me beg you in the name of reason and common sense to let the banner of stock law trail in the dust, and with the union of timber and muscle put up good fences. Let us press onward and upward to liberty and freedom. Let that poor skeleton blue john cow out on the range that God has provided for her and her kind; let her eat her fill and then go to the stream and drink to her satisfaction, and then she will retire to the beautiful shade that nature has provided, and when she comes home at night that milk will be all right. Mr. Editor, give me a little corner of your paper for this, and when I come down I'll speak kindly to the judge.

Mr. Editor.

It seems from reading the letters that "Observer" is highly in favor of stock law. Hurrah for Observer. I'm in favor of stock law, too. Scotland and Providence played ball last Saturday, score 15 to 7 in favor of Scotland. Rev. J. H. Thomas preached a noble sermon at Mars Hill last Sunday, and a large number of people were out to hear him. Success to THE UNION and its numerous readers.

Crops are doing nicely, the corn has shed the frost bitten blades. Next week seems to be the dreaded week every one is going to chop cotton. A musical entertainment was given by Messrs. Morgan Scott, Tonie Cofer and Columbus Scott at O. P. Scott's on the fifth Saturday. All enjoyed themselves. R. J. Langston, the "Christian Harmony Singer," from Pletchers, is visiting relatives here, and we are all glad to have him with us. Mrs. Mattie Johnson, of Jemison, was with us Saturday and Sunday. A musical entertainment was given at C. L. Langston's Saturday night, which was a great success. Hurrah for our string band. E. G. Cofer is talking about enlarging his store to keep pace with his business. Come on, boys, with a little change and let's back up our good old UNION.

All districts are hereby called to meet at their school house or other convenient place on the 20th day of May, 1905, at 7 p. m. for the purpose of electing one or more delegates to the county meetings of the S. C. A. for the balance of the year 1905. Also to have acreage committee canvass each district and ascertain:

1st. The exact cotton acreage of 1904 and 1905.

2. Amount of fertilizers used for cotton 1904 and 1905.

3. Condition of crops June 1st, 1905.

Also make full report of condition of organization in your district.

SALEM-PROVIDENCE.

Spring is here, and so is the rain. Mrs. D. S. Robinson, who has been sick for some time, is slowly convalescing. Mrs. L. A. Callaway and Miss Laura Robinson visited Clanton last week. Mr. D. S. Robinson and daughter, Jessie, visited Clanton a few days ago. Salem and Providence Sunday schools met in joint session at Providence last Sunday and despite the bad weather a most enjoyable day was spent in Sunday school work and singing. D. S. Robinson has had his mill dam replaced and is again ready to grind corn for his customers. Mr. L. A. Callaway attended the State Sunday School Association in Birmingham recently. Miss Essie Aldridge, of Clanton, was a visitor here Sunday. All are looking forward to the singing at Salem fourth Sunday in May, but our pastor has announced that those who come with whiskey may get more than they are looking for.

Mrs. Ellen T. Richards, of Massachusetts, was addressing a woman's conference in New York City recently. These are some of her words: "I really don't wonder at the young men of today not marrying. If it be true that $3000 a year is the least a young lawyer or professor or even a clerk feels he can marry one, then all I've got to say is it's a disgrace to our young women. It is entirely possible for two to live on $1500 a year—I don't know that I would trust the modern young woman with less." In New York City there are 50,000 marriages a year, continues the New York World. Ireland and Scotland combined have fewer weddings; Switzerland only half as many. The marriage rate in Manhattan Borough is 13.30 per thousand, and the ratio is increasing faster than is the population. By the statistics, the Massachusetts prophetess falls in the presence of New York facts. Our young men do not postpone marriage fatally long on the question of income, and we have many a young woman who does not demand an income of $1500 per year.

Editor UNION.

Here I am again. Prof. C. J. Eiland of Coopers, visited F. W. Johnson's family Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Popwell visited their daughter, Mrs. Williams, of Billingsley, last week. Well, I'd like to say to "Observer" that if he would move out in the country where there is some fine timber, he'd shut up about stock law; but I think he is just too lazy to split rails if he had ever so much timber. A JUDGE'S WIFE

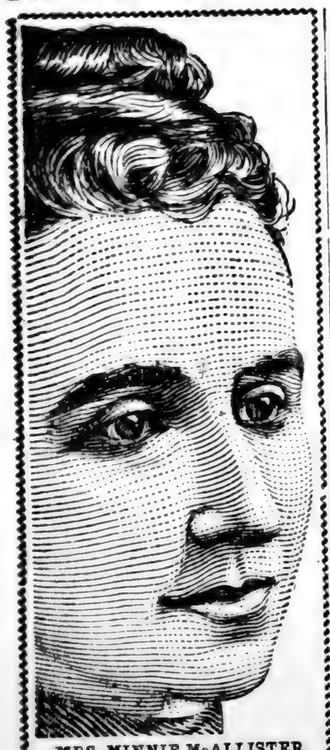
PAIN IN THE BACK AND SIDE



MRS. MINNIE McALLISTER.

Quickly Cured by a Short Course of Pe-ru-na.

MRS. MINNIE E. McALLISTER, from 1217 West 33d street, Minneapolis, Minn., wife of Judge McAllister, writes as follows:

"I suffered for years with a pain in the small of my back and right side. It interfered often with my domestic and social duties and I never supposed that I would be cured, as the doctor's medicine did not seem to help me any.

"Fortunately a member of our Order advised me to try Peruna and gave it such high praise that I decided to try it. Although I started in with little faith, I felt so much better in a week that I felt encouraged.

"I took it faithfully for seven weeks and am happy indeed to be able to say that I am entirely cured.

"Words fail to express my gratitude. Perfect health once more is the best thing I could wish for, and thanks to Peruna, I enjoy that now."

Pain in the back, or on the right side.

How often a physician hears this complaint!

Over and over we hear women say: "I have a pain in the small of my back. I have a pain in my right side, just below the ribs."

These symptoms indicate pelvic or abdominal catarrh.

They indicate that the bowels are not acting properly—that the liver is out of order—that the pelvic organs are congested.

Pelvic catarrh that is the name for it.

Peruna cures pelvic catarrh, when all of these symptoms disappear.

The catarrh may be all in the abdominal organs, when it would be properly called abdominal catarrh.

At any rate, it is one of those cases of internal catarrh which can be reached only by a course of treatment with Peruna.

We have on file thousands of testimonials similar to the above. It is impossible here to give our readers more than one or two specimens of the number of grateful and commendatory letters Dr. Hartman is constantly receiving in behalf of his famous catarrh remedy, Peruna.

Mrs. Carrie King, Darlington, Mo., writes:

"I have suffered for years with biliousness, and kidney and liver trouble.

"If I caught a little cold, the pains were increased and backache and headache were of frequent occurrence.

"However, Peruna cured me—twelve bottles made me a healthy woman."

The Secret of Good Coffee

Even the best housekeepers cannot make a good cup of coffee without good material. Dirty, adulterated and queerly blended coffee such as unscrupulous dealers shovel over their counters won't do. But take the pure, clean, natural flavored

LION COFFEE, the leader of all package coffees—the coffee that for over a quarter of a century has been daily welcomed in millions of homes—and you will make a drink fit for a king in this way:

HOW TO MAKE GOOD COFFEE.

Use LION COFFEE, because to get best results you must use the best coffee.
Grind your LION COFFEE rather fine. Use "a tablespoonful to each cup, and one extra for the pot." First mix it with a little cold water, enough to make a thick paste, and add white of an egg (if egg is to be used as a settler), then follow one of the following rules:

1st. WITH BOILING WATER. Add boiling water, and let it boil THREE MINUTES ONLY. Add a little cold water and set aside five minutes to settle. Serve promptly.

2d. WITH COLD WATER. Add your cold water to the paste and bring it to a boil. Then set aside, add a little cold water, and in five minutes it's ready to serve.

3 DON'TS { Don't boil it too long. Don't let it stand more than ten minutes before serving. Don't use water that has been boiled before.

TWO WAYS TO SETTLE COFFEE.

1st. With Eggs. Use part of the white of an egg, mixing it with the ground LION COFFEE before boiling.

2d. With Cold Water instead of eggs. After boiling add a dash of cold water, and set aside for eight or ten minutes, then serve through a strainer.

Insist on getting a package of genuine LION COFFEE, prepare it according to this recipe and you will only use LION COFFEE in future. (Sold only in 1 lb. sealed packages.)

(Lion-head on every package.)

(Save these Lion-heads for valuable premiums.)

ECZEMA FOR TWO YEARS

Little Girl's Awful Suffering With Terrible Skin Humor—Sleepless Nights For Mother—Speedy Cure by Cuticura.

"My little girl had been suffering for two years from eczema, and during that time I could not get a night's sleep, as her ailment was very severe. I had tried so many remedies, deriving no benefit, I had given up all hope. But as a last resort I was persuaded to try Cuticura, and one box of the Ointment, and two bottles of the Resolvent, together with the Soap, effected a permanent cure. Mrs. I. B. Cancer Statistics.

Recent cancer investigation has shown that young persons are less free from malignant disease than has been supposed. Of 322 cancer patients recently entered at a German clinic ten were from 19 to 30 years old; 121 were between 30 and 50; 156 from 50 to 70, and 35 from 70 to 90.

HAPPY WOMEN.

Mrs. Pare, wife of C. B. Pare, a prominent resident of Glasgow, Ky., says: "I was suffering from a complication of kidney troubles. Besides a bad back, I had a great deal of trouble with the secretions, which were exceedingly variable, sometimes excessive and at other times scanty. The color was high, and passages were accompanied with a scalding sensation. Doan's Kidney Pills soon regulated the kidney secretions, making their color normal and banished the inflammation which caused the scalding sensation. I can rest well, my back is strong and sound and I feel much [illegible] in every way."

WORK FOR THE SUNSHINE.

There's work for the sunshine—the rose from the dead
Must be kissed to the beauty of white and red;
The trees, shorn of fruitage—gray spectres of grief—
Must feel the sap's thrill in the veins o' the leaf;
The daisies must blossom—the lilies must lean
O'er rivers sweet-singing through meadows of green.
There's work for the sunshine on hillside and deep
'Till in ultimate harvests earth's riches we reap!

A BASKET OF MUSHROOMS

By FANNIE WHITE.

"THERE!" exclaimed George of a sudden as he caught sight of an industrious figure in his mushroom preserve, not a hundred yards from his farmyard. He took up an old whipstock that was lying handy, flourished it grimly and strode circuitously upon the impudent thief.

It was a big field, and George was considering how best to trap his enemy when something brought him to a standstill.

Proximity proved the enemy a woman—a young woman—attired after the fashion of town. The irate farmer shifted his pipe and pulled doubtfully at his beard. George was a bachelor and wonderfully shy of women. He was half minded to beat a cautious retreat.

"Pooh! a chit of a lass. Now, George," and throwing his weapon aside, he urged himself forward.

He climbed the fence and walked briskly up to the trespasser unperceived.

"Hello!"

The woman raised her head, and, with a startled cry, recoiled. She had a small, pale face, that was powerfully suggestive of angels to rustic George. "I beg——" George hastily recovered the dignity of his position. His heart beat quick, and he felt a bit of an uncouth fool; but surely it was not for him to ask pardon.

"You are trespassing, miss," he informed her, brusquely.

"Oh!"

The woman breathed a sigh of relief, and—smiled.

George was feeling bewildered.

"You are only the farmer?" thankfully.

"Only the farmer," he replied, stupidly.

"I thought—I was so frightened," and the woman smiled a winsome apology. "You are so big, and strong!"—she looked him over with sincere, almost childish admiration—at his brown, muscular arms, his mighty chest, and resting her glance at last on his bearded face. "But you have kind eyes," she added.

George blushed like any schoolboy. Then all the stories he had ever heard of woman's blandishments burst warningly over him, and he grew half indignant. "The minx!" he muttured, under his breath.

And, determined not to be outwitted, he stretched an arm toward the woman's basket, which was full of mushrooms.

"I must take charge of this, miss!"—sternly.

"No, you wouldn't take them from me?" she pleaded, irresistibly. "I've been hunting them since 6 o'clock. I only reached the treasure house after tramping weary miles. Now I'm lost"—ruefully—"and look at my poor feet—wet through!"

She held her skirts aside.

"What a brute I am!" muttered the man.

"I will pay you for them!" eagerly.

"No, no," he blurted. "It was—it was a bit o' my fun, miss," he said, lamely. "There's plenty for both on us, only"—deliberately—"I don't like poachers, miss, that's it. I don't mind you—you won't hurt, miss; but I'm pretty smart on poachers, as I call 'em."

This was a vast piece of oratory for George.

"And I have never looked at it in that light!" the woman frankly confessed. "Of course it's stealing! I'm a thief—oh!" and she put down her basket and held forth her slim arms, with the wrists together, in a manner which George could not mistake.

He laughed and manacled the pretty thief with his thumb and first finger.

"Now, what have you to say for yourself?" judicially.

"Oh, I won't do it again, sir!"

Her eyelashes fell roguishly.

George discreetly let go and picked up the basket. She was a little witch.

"Are you staying in Fensbro' (the village, miss?"

"Yes; but I'm lost!" hopelessly.

"Your best plan would be to cut through my farmyard."

George led the way at a good pace.

"How far is it to Fensbro'?" she inquired.

"Two miles, miss."

"And what time is it, please?"

"Half-past 8."

"Half-past 8!"—surprised. "I may well feel hungry."

"You might have a bit of breakfast with me—that is, if you don't mind," dubiously.

They stood by the farmhouse door.

"You might dry your feet as well," he pursued, slowly, "and then I could put you on the lane myself. Polly's out for the day—that's the worst of it. But come in, miss."

And George crossed the threshold.

It was quite a charming little adventure to Rose Carol, and, desirous of seeing it through, she followed the big farmer without demur.

He drew a snug chair to his hearth, and threw a bashful glance at her feet; then he brought forth a pair of capacious slippers.

"You might get four feet into them, at a pinch!" he said, humorously; and plunged into the business of breakfast.

With a restrained ripple of girlish laughter, Rose changed her sodden boots and placed them to dry. This done, she sat and watched the man filling the breakfast table.

She was quick to guess his single blessedness (?)—Polly must be his servant. It was very amusing to see this big man "doing for himself"—and a guest. But when he started to slice a new loaf of bread she could contain herself no longer. It was awkward, moving in those ridiculous slippers, but she got to the table without mishap.

"Allow me to help you," she said, with a smile.

He surrendered the knife with alacrity.

"I'm no hand at that sort o' thing," in disgust.

George had never felt the want of a wife until that moment, until he saw Rose preside at his table; then his heart was filled with passionate longing.

They sat down to breakfast for all the world like man and wife. Suddenly the woman burst out irrepressibly.

George, with a full mouth, looked up guiltily.

"It is so exquisitely funny!" laughing tears in her eyes.

"What is?" self-consciously.

"All of it. Poaching! Capture! Prosecution—almost! Oh, dear! oh, dear! I say, Mr.—— look you, I am ignorant even of your name!"

"Meadowson—George Meadowson."

"Mr. ——" gravely.

"George!—everybody calls me George, young and old."

"George."—shyly—"do you consider this at all proper—quite the thing, you know—being here, alone? Don't you think I ought to go?"

"No."

There was something embarrassing in the farmer's decisive negative. Her lashes drooped, and she fidgeted nervously with her teaspoon.

"You might tell me your name, miss," said George, after a space, with a boldness that surprised himself.

She murmured it very softly.

"And Rose was my mother's name!" he cried.

There seemed destiny in this romantic meeting. He stood up in a sort of triumph; his heart was drumming, and his blue eyes beamed.

"Rose!" he said, impetuously. Then he sat down, looking ridiculous, and lashing his presumptuous heart with scorn. What a mad fool he was!

* * * * * * *

They stood in the lane. Rose put out her hand, and it was buried in a big warm grasp.

"What sort of a bear do you take me for, Miss Carol?"

"Well, rather a nice sort of bear!"

"Do you know,"—abruptly—"I've come to think, all at once, that I ought to get married!"

The imprisoned hand made an effort towards freedom.

"You want a woman in the house," Rose granted.

"Polly's neither one thing nor the other!" hopelessly.

"How old are you?" curiously.

"Old enough to be your father, I reckon—thirty."

"You're not too old to marry!" provokingly. "Nil desperandum! You may get married some day, there's no telling. "I'm"—carelessly—"six-and-twenty."

"Not much difference," meditatively.

"I must go!"—hastily. "But you've not told me how wicked you think me?"

"Rose," tenderly, "I'm just thinking you're about wicked enough to make me a good wife!"

"Oh!" and the little woman drew close.

"You're so big!" she murmured.

"But I've kind eyes!"

"Let me look," and she held up her sweet, blushing face.

No wonder he kissed her.

She broke loose, with a sudden cry:

"My mushrooms!"

The basket which had brought them together had been left behind.—New York News.

A Disappointing Occasion.

"How was the lecture?" demanded Mrs. Sawin, with the impatience of one who had been denied a coveted pleasure, as Mr. Sawin stooped to remove his overshoes before entering the sitting room. "My cold's a sight better. I believe I might have gone as well as not."

"I guess you did well to remain at home," said her husband, as he seated himself before the stove, "as far forth as the lecture was concerned. The entertainment opened with a selection by the band, then prayer by the Congregational minister, then the band again, then a song by the Methodist minister accompanied by his wife at the cabinet organ, and then the lecture; after that the band once more, and then the benediction by the Episcopal minister."

"Well, what about the lecture?" asked Mrs. Sawin. "I can hear ministers any day."

"The lecture was on Scotland," said Mr. Sawin, slowly. "I never felt much drawed to Scotland, and I guess after to-night I shall give up all thoughts of ever going there. Folks that haven't got any more idea of the English language after all these years need a missionary, but I don't feel any call to be one. And as for their houses, there wasn't one single good two-story frame building in all the stereoptics that man throwed on the sheet. If it hadn't been for the band, I should have felt I'd wasted my fifteen cents' admission."—Youth's Companion.

Investigation of the Packers

Very general interest has been [illegible] fested in the Government inves[illegible] now in progress into the [illegible] ducting business by the large [illegible] located in Chicago and [illegible] Much has been written [illegible] leged illegal and improper [illegible] business procedure connected [illegible] packing industry; but it seems [illegible] far no definite charge of any k[illegible] been sustained and no proof [illegible] or inequitable methods has been [illegible] closed to the public. While a [illegible] severe criticism of this great [illegible] interest is now passing over the [illegible] try it might be well to remember [illegible] the packers have had as yet no [illegible] tunity to make specific [illegible] many indefinite charges of [illegible] ing having never been formu[illegible] that a categorical answer [illegible] made.

The recent report of Com[illegible] Garfield, which embodied the [illegible] of an official investigation under [illegible] by the Department of Commerce [illegible] Labor of the United States, was [illegible] dication of the Western packers [illegible] this result having been unsuc[illegible] tempts in many quarters to discredit [illegible] were made.

In view of the situation as it [illegible] stands, however, attention may [illegible] ly be called to a few facts that [illegible] to popular clamor are now being [illegible] parently overlooked. For the [illegible] in this country has heretofore been [illegible] corded to all citizens whose affairs [illegible] sume prominence in the public [illegible] some of the facts that bear upon [illegible] relation of the packers to the [illegible] merce of the country may at [illegible] be briefly alluded to. [illegible] Let these facts be remembered [illegible] now it is so popular to revile [illegible] great packing industry as deserving [illegible] condemnation. At least it must be [illegible] mitted that, so far, there is no adequate reason for the almost [illegible] mous howl that may be heard [illegible] where in the face of the Garfield [illegible] port above alluded to which practically exonerates the packers from [illegible] secure and indefinite charges that [illegible] been for some time past made the [illegible] ject of popular comment.

...BEEKEEPERS.

... fiber rela... ...like directing the ... ...ess is so well ... ...d in it. Bees ... ...s who learn ... ...wishes of the ... ...ons in rare cases. ... ...the separator, the ... artificial wax foundation have made beekeeping almost a pleasure.

Bees stand in high reports in examples of thrift, foresight and economy, yet it must be confessed they are arrant little burglars. The knight of the gold and brown armor going forth to gather with such laborious diligence his golden treasures seems almost a miraculous creature engaged in self-imposed Herculean task of turning twenty-five pounds of honey into one of comb.

He is crafty, systematic and ambitious to be rich; so with no thought but that of plunder he rifles the buckwheat patches, levies on the blossoming trees and seizes the coveted wealth of the clover fields. He has been seen to visit twenty flowers in a single moment.

If he finds one nectary dry he sucks another without delay. Unconsciously, indeed, he is doing the flowers a great service, but little he knows or cares, as he climbs from the lower flower to a bunch of those above, which are opened later, that he is leaving pollen on the female flowers and receiving polen from the upper male flowers to carry off. This helpful act is no concern of the sweet-toothed robber whose long, hairy tongue is busy filling the honey bag with richest nectar. Yet, curiously enough, upon each journey, he is careful to visit only one kind of flower.

Indeed, the natural history of the bee reads like a fairy tale. The honey bee is not a native of America, but every farmer should have a few hives of the little busy-bodied foreigners.—Correspondent Drovers Journal.

LINGERIE OUTFITS.

The lingerie outfits which are being displayed in the shops are elaborate but beautiful in the extreme. They display yards and yards of real Val. lace, both in inserting and edging, and are made very dainty when accompanied by tucks and a few shirrs.

It seems as if hats were getting too "young looking," in fact, more so every year, and this year carries out the idea to an astonishing degree. Matrons are wearing hats which several years ago were donned by young girls.

Pongee in all colors is now being turned out, and many handsome frocks are fashionable when made of this serviceable material. Trimmings and imported applique are to be had in all of the shades.

Hail again the advent of the white duck suit! It will be a feature of the summer wardrobe.

The novelties offered in the belt line are attractive. One is prettier than the other and their colorings are all that could be desired to correspond with the summer frocks.

The flowered nets are becoming quite a fad. They are being made up over taffeta and lined with the same colored chiffon.

Many batiste berthas will be used to transform some of the plain, left-over frocks of last summer.

PRETTY HANDS.

Women who are afraid to wash their hands for fear of making them chap can quiet their fears. Soap and water never yet injured a pair of hands; but there are ways and ways of washing the hands, and particularly in the winter.

Take warm water, and let it be soft, add a teaspoonful of borax powder to the water to soften it, and still more if necessary. Now take good soap and wash the hands well. Next rinse them, and when the hands are perfectly free from soap dry them perfectly, then rub a little skin food into them. Men's hands do not chap in winter because they wear thick gloves, so that their hands are not subjected to the extremes of heat and cold.

Women who are addicted to the reprehensible habit of biting their finger nails will find a remedy in keeping them polished. The nails, if very highly polished, feel brittle to the teeth, and there is not the same disposition to bite them. Women will not bite highly manicured nails. It is said that polish for the nails is going out of fashion, but still one sees it, for there is something very attractive about the gloss, a certain dainty finish which cannot be obtained in any other manner. Polishing the nails with the palm of the hand gives good results. Put a little polishing powder in one palm, rub the nails vigorously, and then polish them. This gives a deeper, pinker flush than the ordinary polisher, and is preferable.—Newark Advertiser.

HAIR ORNAMENTS.

Ornaments for the hair are worn with all evening dress, and while there are charming wreaths and sprays of flowers which give somewhat a flat appearance, the high feather, butterfly, or spray of flowers is more and more fashionable all the time. The hair is still worn in pompadour, but the pompadour is pushed more forward over the face, while the rest of the hair is either in a small knot on top of the head or in a soft, graceful coil low in the neck.—Harper's Bazar.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

Great Britain's Wool Consumption.

In a recent consular report from Nottingham, England, it is stated that the figures of an expert statistician there show that there has been a great shrinkage in the consumption of wool in Great Britain. The average per capita since 1890 was given as follows: 1890 to 1894, 16.35 pounds; 1895 to 1899, 17.13 pounds; 1900 to 1904, 15.73 pounds. The alleged cause is disastrous droughts in Australia greatly increasing the price of wool. While the consumption declined from 524,600,000 pounds in 1900 to 466,900,000 in 1904, the estimated consumption of shoddy increased from 130,000,000 pounds in 1900 to 180,000,000 in 1904. The consumption of home-grown wool has steadily declined year by year, with only two breaks since 1870, when it amounted to 150,400,000 pounds; in 1904 it was only 94,100,000 pounds. The consumption of foreign wool increased year by year in the same period, with only one break, from 191,200,000 pounds in 1870 to 423,400,000 in 1901. Since then it has steadily declined. It is predicted that there will be an even greater consumption of shoddy and inevitably less consumption of wool in 1905 than in 1904.

COFFEE HEART.

Very Plain in Some People.

A great many people go on suffering from annoying ailments for a long time before they can get their own consent to give up the indulgence from which their trouble arises.

A gentleman in Brooklyn describes his experience, as follows:

"I became satisfied some months ago that I owed the palpitation of the heart, from which I suffered almost daily, to the use of coffee (I had been a coffee drinker for 30 years), but I found it very hard to give up the beverage.

"I realized that I must give up the harmful indulgence in coffee, but I felt the necessity for a hot table drink, and as tea is not to my liking, I was at a loss for awhile, what to do.

"One day I ran across a very sensible and straightforward presentation of the claims of Postum Food Coffee, and was so impressed thereby that I concluded to give it a trial. My experience with it was unsatisfactory till I learned how it ought to be prepared—by thorough boiling for not less than 15 or 20 minutes. After I learned that lesson there was no trouble. Postum Food Coffee proved to be a most palatable and satisfactory hot beverage, and I have used it ever since.

"The effect on my health has been most salutary. It has completely cured the heart palpitation from which I used to suffer so much, particularly after breakfast, and I never have a return of it except when I dine or lunch away from home and am compelled to drink the old kind of coffee because Postum is not served. I find that Postum Food Coffee cheers and invigorates while it produces no harmful stimulation." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

"IT SAVED MY LIFE"

PRAISE FOR A FAMOUS MEDICINE

Mrs. Willadsen Tells How She Tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Just in Time.

Mrs. T. C. Willadsen, of Manning, Iowa, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I can truly say that you have saved my life, and I cannot express my gratitude to you in words.

"Before I wrote to you, telling you how I felt, I had doctored for over two years steady and spent lots of money on medicines besides, but it all failed to help me. My monthly periods had ceased and I suffered much pain, with fainting spells, headache, backache and bearing-down pains, and I was so weak I could hardly keep around. As a last resort I decided to write you and try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am so thankful that I did, for after following your instructions, which you sent me free of all charge, my monthly periods started; I am regular and in perfect health. Had it not been for you I would be in my grave to-day.

"I sincerely trust that this letter may lead every suffering woman in the country to write you for help as I did."

Private Car Lines.

The railroads seem very willing to have the private car lines brought under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. A railroad President is authority for the statement that lines are paid mileage, without discrimination, and the question of excessive charges is a matter for the shipper to settle with the car lines, so long as there is no law to govern their rates. Car mileage paying has been decided to be as legal as the payment of rental for property.

SMOKING MARIAHUANA.

WONDERFUL POWERS OF THE DRUG AS AN INTOXICANT.

Mexican Weed Prof. Starr Is Trying Drives Men to Murder and Madness, Besides Producing Visions of Demons—Its Use Prohibited in Mexico—Many Victims.

There will be some remarkable and exciting things done by Prof. Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago, and the students of that institution if the published report is true that they have taken to smoking mariahuana, writes the Austin (Texas) correspondent of The New York Sun. It is stated that Prof. Starr dotes on the weed and recommends it as a substitute for tobacco. According to the published report he brought back great quantities of it from Mexico in his recent visit to that country and has invited the students to partake freely of it for scientific purposes.

Mariahuana is one of the most dangerous drugs found in Mexico. The weed grows wild in many localities in the southern part of that country. Its wonderful powers as an intoxicant have long been known to the natives and many are the wild orgies it has produced. So dangerous is mariahuana that in the City of Mexico and other Mexican cities the government keeps special inspectors constantly employed to see that the weed is not sold in the markets.

A few years ago it was found that many of the prisoners in the Belem prison in the City of Mexico were losing their minds. An investigation was started and the discovery was made that they were all addicted to the use of mariahuana, which was smuggled in to them for that purpose. Since then strict orders prohibiting the use of mariahuana by prisoners have been enforced.

The poisonous weed also finds favor among the soldiers, who mix it with tobacco and smoke it. The sale of the weed to the soldiers is strictly prohibited, and severe punishment is provided for any one guilty of the offense.

The habitual user of mariahuana finally loses his mind and becomes a raving maniac. There are scores and scores of such instances in Mexico. It is said that those who smoke mariahuana frequently die suddenly.

The smoking of mariahuana is a seductive habit. It grows upon a person more quickly and securely than the use of opium or cocaine.

Leaves of tobacco bear a close resemblance to leaves of the mariahuana weed. The latter is smoked in cigarette form or in a pipe the same as tobacco.

The first effect of smoking mariahuana is a slight headache. It comes after the first three or four draughts of smoke. A marked dizziness then sets in. Everything seems to move around the smoker, this whirl becoming faster and faster, until all sense of his surroundings is lost.

The next stage of the intoxication is full of terrors. Troops of ferocious wild animals march before the vision of the smoker. Lions, tigers, panthers and other wild beasts occupy his vision.

The wild animals are then attacked by hosts of devils and monsters of unheard of shapes. The smoker becomes brave and possessed of superhuman strength. It is at this stage of the debauch that murders are committed by the smoker. Many mariahuana crimes are committed in Mexico.

A short time ago a Mexican of the lower class living in the City of Mexico smoked a mariahuana cigarette. He became wildly insane and attacked and killed a policeman and seriously wounded three other officers. It required the combined strength of six policemen to overpower the madman and take him to prison.

A few Americans in Mexico have experimented with mariahuana. A few years ago Henry Hommert, a former well known citizen of San Antonio, purchased a large coffee plantation in southern Mexico. He was induced to try smoking mariahuana. He became addicted to the habit, which rendered him insane and finally resulted in his death.

In another instance the superintendent of a mine in Mexico, who was an American, became the object of hatred of one of the men in his employ. This Mexican mixed mariahuana with the American's tobacco. The latter was made wildly insane from smoking the mixture and made a vicious attack upon a party of miners. He was shot and killed in the affray.

MAGIC WHISTLE.

Caused Trouble in a Missouri Town And was Removed.

The City Council has ordered the screech-owl whistle, now on the water works power house over on the river, brought back to town and replaced on the electric light plant so as to sound the tocsin for fire.

This whistle was removed from the town power house last year as a health precaution. The engineer became fascinated over the noise it made and blew it on all occasions. If there was nothing to blow it for he turned it loose anyhow so as to keep his hand in. The operation of a screech-owl whistle grows on one like whisky. But no Keeley cure will restore to normal conditions the man who has fingered the valve of such a horror and lived. He becomes addicted to the habit for life. Men who needed the money offered to be engineer for nothing but to secure the weird privilege of tooting the dirge whistle.

The first night the screech-owl whistle was unninged here it broke up a colored revival meeting. Dogs howled lugubriously and rolled over in the streets. Horses butted their heads against the walls of their stalls. As the days went by and the engineer increased in proficiency temperance men took to hard drink and preachers quit damning cards and dancing in order to devote all their time to the greater evil.

To describe that whistle is beyond the ken of mortal man. The strongest work of pen and ink would be as thin air compared to the thing itself. It started with a mournful cadence like Rachel weeping for her loved and lost. Then it would roll up its sleeves, moisten its hands and send aloft a twisted wail that would shake the stars and bend the handle of the dipper. It wasn't exactly a whistle nor was it a screech. It was a sort of mixed melody like somebody had opened a vat of boiling water on a roomful of tom cats and the cats immediately began talking about it.

That awful blast has been known to make a red-headed girl's hair turn golden and to cause premature baldness where raven locks had flourished.

The citizens stood it for a week. Then they rose up as one man. The whistle was sent out of town in disgrace. It was coupled to the steam pipe over the water works plant down on the river, since which time no fish have come nearer than five miles of the reservoir and the real screech owl has gone out of business before its sinister mechanical rival.

And now the council is going to bring it back to town and limit its use to fire alarm. The code agreed on is: One blast, First Ward; two blasts, Second Ward; three blasts, Third Ward; four blasts; Fourth Ward; five blasts, Fifth Ward.—Macon (Mo.) Correspondence Chicago Chronicle.

DON CARLOS AS A REVOLUTIONIST.

The Pretended Pretender as He is in These Days.

Don Carlos has his palace on the Grand Canal, in Venice, says Vance Thompson, in Success Magazine. You may see him any day, driving at full speed in his electric launch through the silent waterways. As the yellow, whizzing launch appears the black gondolas scatter like waterflies. In foam and noise it passes, Don Carlos lolling on the red cushions, his handsome, dissatisfied wife beside him. Manned by flunkies in the red and yellow livery of Spain, it passes—a thing of noise and pomp and color, which has no business there, drumming, up the quiet waters of the canals. Don Carlos is a big man physically, his body vast—high and wide and profound; he is rosy, blond, bearded, with bulging eyes; so far as the look of him goes, he might sit on any throne with credit—this last of the kings in exile of the male branch of the Bourbons of Spain.

But he will never reign. That, perhaps, may be in store for Don Jaime, his son, who is with the Russian cavalry in the Far East. This pretender has found a more profitable occupation. Oh, men have died for him, true enough! Still in Biscay women pray darkly for the day when he shall come to his own. Round about Bilbao, good men—furious little royalists—go to jail for his joyous martyrs. Bankers so far away as Frankfort gamble money on his chance of reigning.

Don Carlos smiles skeptically in his blond beard. He has long been one of the lackeys of the Court of Alphonso XIII; that, but nothing. Whenever the ministry, or whenever the King, has need of a small revolt, which may be promptly repressed, and add thus to government prestige, the word is passed to the big pretender in Venice. Forthwith scores of frantic little arlists go out to be shot or jailed for him.

It is, I believe, a new industry. In time the pretended pretender may become a useful adjunct to every throne, just as the circus carries its pseudo "Rube" and the bad gambler his innocent looking "capper."

The Value of a Good Voice.

The voice has much to do with a boy's success in life, and it should be well cultivated. There are boys who speak up so that they can be heard a long distance every time they open their mouths, who are even more objectionable than a boy who mumbles. An over-loud, brassy voice, with a kind of defiant ring in it, is extremely unpleasant and is sure to make a bad impression. A voice with a whine in it is always irritating, and an insolent tone of voice has told against more than one boy when he has been in search of a position. The voice that is clear and distinct and at the same time deferential, is the voice that makes the best impression. Don't mumble, don't meech, don't whine, and don't use an insolent tone when you speak. You may think that it is A mouse may naturally be a "timid of no consequence how a boy speaks if he does his work properly, and faithfully, but I am sure that you are mistaken. There are other things to be taken into account besides doing one's work as it ought to be done, if a boy hopes to get on in this world. I know a young man nearly thirty years of age who is very thorough in his work and would long ago have been advanced to the position of foreman of the establishment in which he works but for the fact that he is boorish in his manners. The manner of one's speech, as well as one's general bearing, is considered at certain times apart from his work.—Written

INDIANS AND THE BOW.

WONDERFUL STORIES OF THEIR SKILL AS MARKSMEN.

They Frequently Sent Their Arrows Completely Through the Bodies of Animals at Which They Shot—Wounded Spaniards Through Their Armor.

A correspondent who signs himself "Early Settler" recently came out in an eastern Kansas newspaper with a communication which purported to be a narrative of personal pioneer experiences and observations, but which was, for the most part, if not wholly, an effusion of fanciful ideas. For instance, among other equally misleading statements, was the following:

"The prevailing idea regarding the effectiveness of the Indian with his bow and arrow is extremely erroneous. In the early days in Kansas I have seen a band of Indians armed with bows and arrows surround a buffalo and literally fill his hide with arrows, indeed to the extent that he presented the appearance of a mammoth porcupine. But none of these arrows seemed to penetrate to a sufficient depth to kill the beast or even disable him to any perceptible degree, and he was not conquered until he was actually overcome from exhaustion of the chase."

I shall not accuse this "Early Settler" of being an anonymous Ananias, for it may be that he has a very vivid imagination, or else a defective memory; nor could it have been that the particular tribe of Indians to which he refers was so exceedingly deficient in the art of archery. This art was the one above all others that was thoroughly mastered by the American Indian as a race. The youthful mind was, from the start, imbued with the importance and necessity of this particular accomplishment, and to "teach the young idea how to shoot" with the bow and arrow was the elementary principle of the aboriginal education.

"So great," says Dorsey, "was their skill in archery that they frequently sent their arrows completely through the bodies of animals at which they shot." Major John Dougherty heard that in some instances the arrows were sent with such force that they not only passed entirely through the bodies of the buffaloes, but even went flying through the air or fell to the ground beyond the animals. Another authority says:

"From his horse at full gallop the Indian will shoot 15 or 20 arrows a minute at flying buffaloes, all with sure aim and deadly effect." Washington Irving says that frequently a buffalo cow was killed on the spot by a single arrow; and Capt. Bonneville, in one instance, saw an Indian shoot his arrow completely through the body of a cow, so that it struck in the ground beyond. During the famous hunt of the Grand Duke Alexis, of Russia, on the western plains, Two Lance, an Indian chief, sent an arrow clear through a bison, the Duke retaining it as a souvenir of his hunt. Francis Parkman carried home a similar souvenir from the plains. In his "California and Oregon Trail" he describes a big buffalo hunt in which the Indians took part. He tells about seeing an Indian alighting from his horse by the side of a buffalo cow he had killed. "Riding up to him," says Parkman, "I found him in the act of drawing out an arrow which, with the exception of the notch at the end, had entirely disappeared in the animal. I asked him to give it to me, and I still retain it as a proof, though by no means the most striking one that could be offered, of the force and dexterity with which the Indians discharge their arrows." Charles Augustus Murray, while travelling in the west in the early '30s, saw the Indians on the plains send their arrows into the buffaloes to the feathers, and in some instances even burying a portion of the feathers in the flesh.

A Capt. Williams, of Missouri, in his journal of an expedition on the plains in 1807, published by David H. Coyner in Cincinnati, in 1847, describes a buffalo hunt by the Kansas Indians, in which he says: "A single arrow in several instances would despatch a large bull, and when the carcass was opened by the Indians to get the arrows they were found to have passed from the flank obliquely through the body and lodged against some of the bones on the other side. It is common for an arrow to pass completely through the body when not striking a bone." The Rev. Samuel Allis, a missionary among the western Indians, who often accompanied them on their buffalo hunts, says: 'They often make a charge on a herd of 1000 or 1200, killing 400 or 500 at one surround. An Indian knows when he shoots a buffalo in the heart; he often does it at the first shot."

Buell's "History of the Plains" says: "The bow is the natural weapon of the wild tribes of the west. At short distances it is a terribly effective arm, and the Indian expert can seize five to ten arrows in his left hand and despatch them with such rapidity that the last one will be on its flight before the first one touches the ground. In close quarters they prefer to rely on it to depending on the rifle, as it can be of deadly force at from 30 to 40 yards, and creating a bad wound at a much greater distance. In buffalo hunting, where the horseman can approach near, it is invaluable and economic, and is often buried to the feathers."

In the chronicles of the Coronado expedition we find it stated of the plains Indians that in war and the chase they used the bow and arrow with great skill. On one occasion an Indian was seen to shoot a buffalo bull right through both shoulders with an arrow, "which," the narrator added "would be a good shot for a musket." Cabeca de Vaca, the early Spanish explorer, in his narratives printed in 1542, says of the Indians whom he encountered in this country: "They are all archers. The bows they use are as thick as the arm and of 11 or 12 palms in length, which they discharge at 200 paces with so great exactness that they never miss."

In one conflict some of De Vaca's men were wounded. "We found them," he declares, "traversed from side to side by arrows, and although some had on good armor, it did not afford sufficient protection against the nice and powerful archery of which I have spoken." Some of his men that day swore that they had seen two oaks, each as thick as the lower part of the leg, pierced through from side to side by arrows, and De Vaca himself saw "an arrow that had entered the foot of an elm the depth of a palm." "The buffalo or bear could not withstand the fatal effect of these well-directed shafts," he concludes.—Kansas City Journal.

THE HE-SAID GIRL.

Sometimes Nature Makes a Fine Woman of Her, But Rarely.

Did you ever notice a group of little girls between the ages of 14 and 18 chatting away in a corner? The next time you sit near such a group listen and hear if about every tenth word is about what "he said." If it is, you have found some more of the "he-said" girls, and they are not the nicest little girls in the world. The "he-said" girls are likely to loiter down town after school too late to help their mothers with the afternoon work. They are likely to wear a little better clothes than their fathers can afford, so that the neighbors wonder what their mothers can be thinking about. The "he-said" girls also too often think more of the boys than of their books, and frequently fail to get through school. They are in for a good time, and have nothing in their heads but hairpins and two-steps.

Sometimes nature takes a girl out of the "he-said" family and makes a fine woman of her, but generally she gets to going out to parties and is developed before her time, and either marries and fades at 20, or hangs on after all the other girls are married off and takes generation after generation of young boys to raise by hand, and becomes known as "grandma" in the crowd.

There is nothing so sweet as a simple, frank, open-hearted girl. But the boy-struck girl is an abomination. The whole matter rests with the girl's mother. She can either bring up one of the "he-said" girls or she can have a daughter to be proud of.—Emporia Gazette.

QUAINT AND CURIOUS.

It is said that over $1,000,000 worth of diamonds are stolen from the diamond mines in South Africa every year.

A parade was recently held in Manila, and among the civic bodies that marched were the official rat catchers. They all carried their rat traps in their hands.

There is a belief among the South Sea islanders that no man can enter paradise who has lost a limb. For this reason it sometimes happens that a man will choose to die rather than submit to amputation.

The Krupp company at Essen, Germany, is making field guns of paper now, and it is said that they are about half the weight of the steel guns, and are nearly as powerful, and have nearly the same length of life.

After many years of trials the introduction of rubber in a commercial sense has been established in Hawaii. Six years ago a rubber plantation was started at Nahiku, but little had been heard of the venture until recently. Now the trees have been found in a condition to produce rubber, and the work of gathering sap probably will soon begin.

A new vegetable has been introduced into France by M. Labergerie, and M. G. Bonnier has reported on it to the Academy of Science. It is a species of wild potato which grows where there is plenty of moisture, while the ordinary potato does better in dry soil. The plant is a native of Uruguay, and the species which M. Labergerie is cultivating is known as the Solanum Oommetani, and will yield more than ninety thousand pounds an acre on ground which suits it.

Richard Strutt, a son of Lord Rayleigh, has invented a clock that will run for two thousand years. The motive power is a small piece of gold leaf, which is electrified by means of a very small quantity of radium salt. The gold leaf bends away from the metal substance and keeps moving under this influence until it touches the side of the containing vessel. At the moment of contact it loses its electrical charge and then springs back and is again electrified, and the process is repeated. It is thought that a thoroughly reliable clock could be made with the use of radium salt for $1000.

Profitable Inventions.

No one class of inventions has been so profitable both to the manufacturer and the inventor as musical instruments and appliances for same. Numerous improvements to the piano have been a source of large fortunes, and various devices are at present being continuously applied. Radically new instruments possessing real merit are the inventions needed in this line. The public is always ready to adopt almost anything new in both wind and stringed instruments.—Inventor.

Negro Prisoner Found Dead in Jail.

Decatur, Ala.—A negro who gave his name as Dan Beard was found dead in the city jail Monday. He was arrested Sunday night by Police Officer Thomas Pearson on the charge of drunk and disorderly.

When the officer arrived at the jail with Beard the prisoner put up a fight and Officer Pearson struck him over the head with a club. Dr. E. J. Conyngton, one of the best physicians in the city, after an examination, said the negro died from the excessive use of whisky. Later some of the negro physicians examined the negro and said the lick over his head caused death. The case is in the hands of the coroner's jury. There is considerable excitement in the city over the affair on account of the recent negro trouble here in which three negroes were sentenced to hang. The best people of the Decaturs do not blame Officer Pearson in the least for his actions, as they believe the officer justifiable. It is rumored on the streets late tonight that several prominent negroes will try to get an indictment against Officer Pearson.

Student Drowned.

Marion, Ala.—M. L. Harris, of Russellville, a student of Marion Military institute, was drowned in Cahaba river Monday while attempting to swim the stream, which was swollen by recent rains. A party of about fifty citizens are dredging the river Monday night for the remains.

Monday, the weekly holiday at the Marion Military institute, the boys having been successful not only in athletics but in their studies, a fishing party was granted by the faculty. A party of a dozen left Monday morning for the Cahaba river, accompanied by Professors Kellogg and Thomas.

Harris attempted to swim the river, as did several other students. Harris' strength failed and his cries for help were responded to by Professor Kellogg and Cadet Shivers, but he rose only once and went down to death.

Small Wreck on Southern.

Pell City, Ala.—A small wreck on the Southern railway Monday night at 8:30 near Pell City delayed the passenger traffic several hours.

A freight car loaded with pig iron on an extra train going east was derailed and thrown across the track a few miles east of Pell City. No one was seriously injured.

Passenger train No. 37, due to arrive in Birmingham at 10:05, was several hours late. It came by the way of Childersburg from Anniston. The east-bound train leaving Birmingham at 11:30 was also dispatched by the way of Childersburg.

Two Highwaymen Caught in Ensley.

Ensley, Ala.—George Young and James Rapier, two well known young men of this city, were arrested Monday by the police and lodged in the city jail, charged with committing highway robbery. It is claimed that the young men attempted to hold up several different persons Saturday night. One of the men who was held up secured a revolver from Young and it was in this way that the officers worked up the case.

Boys Engaged in Battle.

Huntsville, Ala.—In a battle between negroes and white boys at a swimming hole near town Sunday afternoon, Charlie Taliaferro, of Jackson county, and Burt Novel, of this city, both negroes, were shot. A bullet penetrated Taliaferro's neck and the injury is fatal. No arrests have been made.

Jail Escape.

Birmingham, Ala.—Charlie Ford, a white man who was acting as stevedore or trusty, and Will Short, a negro, escaped from the city prison between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock Monday morning, by cutting a hole 20x10 inches through the brick wall on the northern side of the jail.

Fertilizer Sales Short.

Columbus, Ga.—The Columbus warehouse men when interviewed declared that their sales of fertilizer this year are from 20 to 25 per cent. short, as compared with the sales up to the corresponding date last year. Of the guano sold here about half is taken by East Alabama farmers.

Killed by Dirt Car.

Knoxville, Tenn.—Artie Johnson, aged 7 years, was killed instantly Saturday in the brick yards of the South Knoxville Brick Company by a dirt car running over him. The boy was playing on the track and did not see the car.

Residence Burned.

Trenton, Tenn.—Tulis Taylor's residence, in the Sixth district, was destroyed by fire Wednesday night. Insurance $1,100.

Store and Masonic Hall Blown Up.

Guntersville, Ala.—At 11 o'clock Friday night the people of Guntersville were rudely awakened by a terrific explosion which was followed instantly by by a second of great force, which shook the foundations of the buildings. Those who were yet on the streets say that at the sound of the second explosion flames shot skyward for 200 feet and instantly the whole was ablaze. The building was a two story wooden structure. The lower story was used by the Masons and Red Men lodges. The lower story was used for a store and was at the time occupied. The building was blown to atoms, parts being scattered over adjoining premises. Most of the effects of the Masons were saved, having been blown some distance and picked up by parties.

The only explosives in the building, says the man in charge of the store, were a 50-pound can of powder and a barrel of kerosene oil. The plan[illegible] from the building blown away [illegible] very decidedly the odor of burnt powder.

Killed in Mine.

Birmingham, Ala.—Alonzo Austin, lately employed by the Pratt Consolidated Coal Company at their mines at Horse Creek, was killed by a coal shot in the mines at the latter place Thursday. At the time of the accident another miner by the name of John Watkins was working close by the unfortunate man.

From the statement by a younger brother who was working in the mine when the accident took place it appears that Austin applied a light to a dynamite fuse in order to blast some rock, the light seemingly did not ignite and he went away from the place for a few minutes and returned to make a second attempt to light the fuse. He was leaning over the dynamite when it exploded, and he was struck and killed instantly.

He was a nephew of C. W. Austin, ex-chief of police of Birmingham. The deceased was 25 years of age.

State Files Bill.

LaFayette, Ala.—Considerable interest was aroused in this community by the filing of a bill in the chancery court of Chambers county by the state of Alabama against the LaFayette Railway Company to prevent the latter from tearing up its track and dismantling its road. The railroad people claim that they cannot operate the road profitably, and have a right to discontinue operating when this case. The next session of the chancery court is held June 12th, and the case will probably be decided at that time.

Store and Masonic Hall Blown Up.

Guntersville, Ala.—At 11 o'clock Friday night the people of Guntersville were rudely awakened by a terrific explosion which was followed instantly by a second of greater force, which shook the foundations of the buildings. Those who were yet on the streets at the sound of the second explosion saw flames shot heavenward fully [illegible] instantly the Masonic hall was [illegible]. The building was a two-story structure. The upper story was occupied by the Masons and the lower offices. The lower story was occupied by a store and was at the time filled with goods. The building was blown to atoms, the pieces being scattered over adjoining premises. Most of the effects of the Masons were saved, having been thrown some distance and picked up by [illegible]. The explosives in the building, per the man in charge of the store, were a 25-pound can of powder and a barrel of kerosene oil. The planks from the building blown away have retained considerably the odor of burnt powder.

Killed in Mine.

Birmingham, Ala.—Alonzo Austin, employed by the Pratt Consolidated Coal Company at their mines at [illegible] was killed by a coal fall in the mines at the latter place Thursday. At the time of the accident another miner by the name of John Talkins was working close by the deceased man.

From the statement by a younger miner who was working in the mine when the accident took place it appears that Austin applied a light to a dynamite fuse in order to blast some rock. The light seemingly did not ignite and he went away from the place for a few minutes and returned to make a second attempt to light the fuse. He was leaning over the dynamite when it exploded, and he was struck and killed instantly.

He was a nephew of C. W. Austin, chief of police of Birmingham. The deceased was 25 years of age.

LaFayette, Ala.—Considerable interest was aroused in this community [illegible] of a bill in the chancery court of Chambers county by the state against the LaFayette Railway company to prevent the latter from tearing up its track and discontinuing its road. The railroad people claim that they cannot operate it profitably, and have a right to cease operating when this is [illegible]. The next session of the chancery court is held June 12th, and the matter will probably be decided at that time.

Hurt in a Runaway.

Anniston, Ala.—W. Z. T. Weaver, who lives in Weavers, had both bones of his leg broken Friday, his face lacerated and his head cut in addition. Dr. Noble's attention was given and he carried home, going as far as he did by rail. While badly injured his wounds are not necessarily fatal.

To Have a New Warehouse.

A [illegible] thousand dollar company has been organized and necessary stock has been taken. The erection of the building will be commenced in time for the fall trade. The cotton and fertilizers [illegible] business. The warehouse completed will have a capacity of six or eight thousand bales.

Award Made.

Anniston, Ala.—A judgment for $1,000 awarded by a jury in the circuit court Friday in the suit of J. W. Stutts against the railway. Stutts was killed in Florence by a wild engine of the Southern and his suit was for $50,000.

Out for New Railroad.

Anniston, Ala.—News has reached here that a corps of surveyors have been coming toward Huntsville over the route of the Nashville-Interurban Railway. The right of way for the road is said through Lincoln county and the northern part of Madison county is expected to be secured.

Shipping Strawberries North.

Anniston, Ala.—The first carload of strawberries has been shipped from here. Charles Dippe, manager of the German Farmers' Association, has charge of the shipment. The berries were consigned to Turnbull & Co., Detroit, Mich.

Killed a Man Long Ago.

Birmingham, Ala.—Joseph Cranberry, a former resident of Birmingham, according to telegrams received in Birmingham, has made a confession to the police at Butte, Mont., that in 1888 he killed a man in Birmingham. The messages received here announce also that at periods Granberry is not in his senses, and has attempted his life. It is stated that upon hearing newsboys call out "All about the murder," that he made an effort to throw himself out of a window and was prevented by an officer.

Granberry killed a man named Tom Lewis on the corner of First avenue and Nineteenth street, sixteen years ago. People who remember the killing say that Granberry was justifiable and that if brought back he could not be convicted. No efforts are being made to have the man brought back for trial. He is of good family and married into a prominent family at Columbia, Tenn.

Died on Table.

Union Springs, Ala.—George Wright died suddenly here Thursday at the sanitarium. He was a brother of Mr. John W. Wright, whose family resides here, and was engaged in railroad construction in Tennessee. He received an injury recently that incapacitated him for work and made a surgical operation necessary. He expired while on the operating table and under the influence of chloroform.

W. E. Lightfoot, of this county, was bitten on the forefinger of his left hand a few days ago by a rattlesnake. He was in town to receive medical attention and said he had suffered greatly from the effects of the snake bite.

Leg Broken When Car Lever Slips.

Gadsden, Ala.—James Powell, section foreman on the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis road, happened to a bad accident at Littleton Friday morning while assisting in the placing of a loaded car back on the track. Mr. Powell and the regular train crew were trying to get the car on the track and were using a jack to aid them. Finally the jack was placed on a loose cross-tie, which was thrown violently to one side when the jack slipped off, striking Mr. Powell on the left leg and breaking it just above the ankle.

Successful Raid.

Troy, Ala.—Deputy Collector Russell and Deputy Marshall Collier have returned from a raid in Houston county. They raided an illicit distillery near Cottonwood, said to belong to Walker Mercer, destroying two complete outfits and a quantity of beer and rum. Mercer was brought before Commissioner Tutwiler, pleaded guilty and was bound over to the fall term of United States court, to await the action of the federal grand jury.

Carpenter Confesses.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—John Carpenter, the negro who has just been tried for the killing of Stewart Champion, has been sentenced. The death sentence was pronounced by Judge Foster, and the time set was the 23rd of June. When Carpenter heard the sentence he became excited, but had very little to say. He denied the crime, but said it was all right. Later when being escorted to the jail by Deputy Latham and his attorney he admitted that it was he that shot and killed Mr. Champion.

Greensboro Tragedy.

Greensboro, Ala.—In a difficulty Thursday night on the streets in this place, just before midnight, Bolin Dugger shot with a pistol and instantly killed Fred Breitenbach.

Dugger is the son of Sheriff G. W. Dugger, and is a young man 18 years old. Breitenbach was a printer about the same age.

The affair is a great shock to this community, and is very much deplored by the friends of all parties. Dugger immediately gave himself up and is now in custody.

Fifth Well

Huntsville, Ala.—The New York Alabama Oil Company has begun drilling a fifth well at Hazle Green. The company is following the instructions of government geological experts in locating its wells and has not failed to find natural gas in any of them.

Bridgeman Killed.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—M. Chisolm, a night bridge watchman employed by the Alabama Great Southern railway, was knocked off a trestle about six miles south of this place by the Pan-American and killed instantly late Thursday afternoon. It seems that Chisolm was inspecting the trestle when he discovered it was afire. He had extinguished the flames and was crawling up between the cross-ties. He was deaf and did not hear the approaching train. His body was dashed into the bottom of the stream. The train backed up and brought the mangled body to the city. The deceased is survived by a wife and several children, who reside here.

A HUNDRED KILLED

And Much Damage Done by an Awful Tornado at Snyder, Oklahoma.

A LARGE NUMBER INJURED.

Communication Established With Snyder Relief and Provisions Sent to the Town.

Snyder Okla.—At midnight Thursday night all estimates of the number of persons killed by last night's tornado exceed 100, and 150 persons were injured. Ninety-five persons are known to be dead, several are missing, and a number of the injured are in a critical condition. The wounded found sheiter in an improvised hospital until tonight, when they were taken to hospitals in Guthrie and Oklahoma City. The financial loss is estimated at $350,000.

Vernon, Tex.—The first train from Snyder since the tornado struck that town Wednesday night arrived here at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon. Passengers of this train gave a story of fearful loss of life and property destruction.

Snyder is about a mile square. The tornado struck the town just a little west of the southwest corner of the township. Its pathway was about a half mile wide, and in this trip there is not a vestige of anything left, and in places the ground is literally ploughed up. To the west of the pathway everything is devastated with the exception of one or two stone stores. The course of the tornado was due northeast.

Snyder is crossed by two tracks of the Frisco system, one traverses the town just a little north of its center, and runs east and west. The other runs north and south, about half way between the center of the town and the eastern edge. Not a thing remains north and west of the junction of these tracks, except the depot building and a water tank, both twisted.

The tornado struck the town at 7:40 p. m. Just preceding it there was a heavy rainstorm, accompanied by vivid flashes of lightning and deafening thunder. Nearly all of the homes in Snyder had storm cellars, and during this heavy downpour many sought sheiter in these cellars.

Then there was a let-up of perhaps ten minutes, during which time many thinking that the storm, had broken, left their places of refuge and returned to their houses. Then, with a deafening rumbling noise, the funnel-shaped cloud dipped to the earth, apparently two miles from the town, and with appalling velocity crashed through the town. Many were caught between their houses and the storm cellars and killed outright. Others remained in their houses and perished when the houses were demolished.

The first intimation the outside world had of the cyclone was at 7:40 o'clock when the long distance operator at Hobart heard the long distance operator in the Snyder exchange scream. The cause of this scream was the destruction of the Snyder telephone building, which was a long narrow wood building, and which was split half in two by the wind, the break occurring where the switchboard was fastened to the wall. As the wind whipped off the front end of this building, a heavy piece of wood was driven into the side of the head of the manager, who was sitting at his desk. The operator taking in the situation, gave a scream which was heard over the telephone at Hobart. A young man who was in the exchange at the time grabbed the operator and fairly slung her in a glass booth near by and slammed the door. The glass in this booth was not even cracked.

Round House Demolished.

The immense solid stone Frisco round house here was completely demolished, and not a stone that was in the structure has yet been located. Not an engine was in the round house at the time. A box car loaded with sacks of cement was scattered over two miles. Another box car loaded with broom straw, that was standing by the car of cement, was overturned, but the broom straw was not disturbed by the wind.

The two cotton gins of the town were completely demolished. One of the boilers standing had all the steam-fittings blown off and the iron door to this boiler was found two miles to the northeast. As an instance of the suction force of the wind, a substantial stone building in the southwest portion of the place, just east of where the cyclone first struck the town, had its entire front literally pulled out. This building is fully twenty yards from the path of the tornado. It was a gambling hall and all the paraphernalia is in plain view.

Guthrie, Okla.—The latest official reports from the tornado-stricken town of Snyder, Okla., place the list of dead at ninety-five. Other rumors advance this figure to one hundred. It is highly probable that the death list when accurately tabulated will reach 130.

Of those injured, there are various reports, reaching from 100 to 150.

Fire Broke Out.

To add to the general confusion and distress after the tornado had passed, fire broke out and burned up all that remained of the buildings in the business blocks. So far it has not been possible to find out whether or not any bodies were cremated, but it is highly probable that such was the case.

Horses Killed.

About seventy-five head of horses and cattle were killed on the town site. A committee was set to work to remove carcasses.

Blown Sixty Miles.

Fort Cobb, Okla.—Many law books, letters, photographs, bank books and papers were picked up here, having been blown here from Snyder, a distance of sixty miles. The storm did little damage here.

A Fearful Explosion.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Twenty persons are known to be dead and more than 100 others were injured in the railroad wreck and dynamite explosion which occurred early Thursday morning on the Pennsylvania railroad in the southern part of the city. That no more persons were killed is considered remarkable by the Pennsylvania officials, as a full box car of dynamite exploded, directly at the middle of the heavy express train.

A scene of horror followed the explosion of the dynamite. The passenger cars and some of the freight cars instantly took fire. As the reverberation of the terrific explosion died away, the agonizing cries of the injured could be heard. Men and women came tumbling and climbing from under the wreckage. No one for the moment seemed to know what to do, and many of the passengers, momentarily seized with terror, ran wildly about the fields on the north side of the railroad or waded into the shallow waters of the river, which parallels the railroad on the south. Realizing their safety and the danger still threatening others, the frightened passengers soon began the rescue of the living. As they approached the wreck another explosion occurred which sent them scurrying away. Fearing that the entire train might be loaded with dynamite, no one dared go near the wreck. Finally the railroad men who knew the contents of the burning freight train led the way and the uninjured passengers followed.

Storm in Indiana.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Two fatalities, several minor injuries and serious damage throughout the state, resulting from an extraordinary rain and electric storm, accompanied by high winds and hail, are reported from cities throughout Indiana. Ernest Johnson was killed by lightning at Nora, while Edward Martin, a laborer is dead from the same cause at Union City. A number of slight injuries by lightning are reported from various parts of the state. Hail inflicted serious damage upon crops, fruit, greenhouses and residences. One man was knocked unconscious by a hail stone at Logansport.

At Elkhart, Mrs. Elbert R. Burns died of fright during the storm. Telephone and telegraph service is seriously crippled.

Tornado Reaches Missiouri.

Platte City, Mo.—A tornado struck the town of Hampton, eight miles southwest of here, Wednesday night, and several persons were injured, though none were killed. A drug store, a general store and a blacksmith shop were demolished and half a dozen residences were badly damaged.

The public school building at Benten was struck by lightning during a severe rain storm. A number of school children were shocked, but no one was badly hurt. Montevallo, 20 miles southeast of here, sustained much damage from a wind storm. Several residences were destroyed, but no lives were lost.

Lieutenant Ross Is Drowned.

Newport News, Va.—First Lieut. Moses R. Moss, of the artillery corps, stationed at Fort Monroe, was drowned in the moat at that post early Sunday. He was riding a bicycle along the cement walk which skirts the moat, when the chain broke, precipitating him into the water. Lieutenant Ross was 25 years of age, a native of Pennsylvania, and a graduate of Washington and Jefferson college. He was with the volunteer army in the war with Spain.

A TERRIBLE TORNADO

Sweeps Over Kansas, Destroying Many Lives—Injured Many—Town Ruined.

TWENTY-SIX MORE DEAD.

May Go Higher—Country Districts to Hear From—One House Standing in Stricken Section.

Marquette, Kans.—Twenty-six persons are known to have been killed and over forty-four were injured in a tornado, the most disastrous in the history of Central Kansas, which swept over this portion of the state at midnight. One large section of Marquette, where the principal loss of life occurred, was entirely wiped out. Reports from the surrounding country shows that the destruction to life and property was widespread and the list of dead and injured is growing constantly.

A store room belonging to Olaf Olson, a furniture dealer, has been converted into a temporary morgue and at 9:30 o'clock twenty-four bodies had been brought in. Following the storm the utmost confusion prevailed and it will be some time before the actual extent of the storm is known.

State of Panic.

When daylight broke over the town it found the entire population in a state of panic. Business was entirely suspended and everyone who escaped injury turned his attention toward aiding the wounded.

The tornado formed three miles south of Marquette and did not spend its force until it had passed many miles north of the town. In Marquette the residence portion west of the main street suffered the principal damage. The houses in the course of the tornado were all, with two or three exceptions, completely wrecked. In this section there was a number of modern residences of which only one, the home of R. A. Thompson, was left standing.

The Swedish Lutheran and Methodist churches were among the first buildings struck, and they together with the parsonage adjoining the Methodist church, were demolished.

Yesterday afternoon had been hot and oppressive, the atmosphere loaded with electricity. Late in the evening a terrific rain storm broke over the town. The rain continued to fall in torrent until 11:50 o'clock Monday night, when the tornado struck. Within less than five minutes it had wrought its terrible work and passed on. Telegraph and telephone wires were carried down and it was several hours before the outside world could be appraised of the plight of the city.

Clearing the Debris.

It was not until 8 o'clock that physicians and surgeons began arriving from surrounding towns. In the meantime dozens of willing hands set to work to clear away the debris and extricate the dead and injured. The Swedish Lutheran parsonage and several private residences were turned into temporary hospitals, while aid was asked from other towns and physicians were sent from Salina and many nearby places.

Marquette is a town of 1,500 people in McPherson county. It is in the exact center of Kansas and in the richest farming country in the state.

Distinguished Educator Dead.

Auburn, Ala.—Dr. O. D. Smith, professor of mathematics in the Alabama Polytechnic Institute for over twenty years, and one of the best known instructors in Alabama, died here suddenly Sunday.

Farmer Killed by Son-in-Law.

Fort Worth, Tex.—A special from Terrell, I. T., says that in a street duel Sunday between Joe Matthews, a farmer, and Bruce Roberts, Matthews was instantly killed. Matthews had objected to the attention of Roberts to his daughter. Saturday he learned they were married, and meeting them on the public road fired on Roberts, frightening the latter's team, the bride being injured in a runaway.

The father took the daughter to his home Saturday and when the father and his son-in-law met at the livery stable, Matthews fired at once, and Roberts returned the fire, killing Matthews.

Violate Sunday Laws.

St. Louis, Mo.—Six saloon keepers were arrested in St. Louis county Sunday on charge of violating the Sunday closing law by selling liquor. It is stated that one of them is also a justice of the peace.

Courage

There are who, bending supple knees,
Live for no end except to please,
Rising to fame by mean degrees;
But creep not thou with these.

They have their due reward; they bend
Their lives to an unworthy end—
On empty alms the toll expend
Which had secured a friend.

But be not thou as these, whose mind
Is to the passing hour confined,
Let no ignoble fetters bind
Thy soul, as free as wind.

Stand upright, speak thy thought, declare
The truth thou hast, that all may share;
Be bold proclaim it everywhere;
They only live who dare.

—Sir Lewis Morris.

TWO of a KIND

BY J. C. PLUMMER

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Mr. Philip Thompson's eyes strayed over to a map of the United Kingdom hanging against the office wall.

"A dangerous coast the northeastern part of Scotland, Captain McLeod," he said carelessly, "a likely place for a wreck."

"Ferry," assented Captain McLeod. "Then there's the Orkneys and the Shetlands, bad places those in a fog, Captain."

The Captain nodded and looked at Mr. Thompson, then he looked out of the window.

"You are going to take the Curlew to Gottenburg," continued Mr. Thompson, "and you'll come back in ballast. You'll probably take a northern route which will about bring you off that coast. It's autumn and the season for fogs, so be careful, Captain."

"It wad be a bad thing for me, a sheepwreck," said Captain McLeod. "Aw might be a year finding another sheep."

"No, no," replied Mr. Thompson," I know you are a careful skipper, and if Providence ordains that the Curlew should be lost I'd see you'd another ship. More, I'd obligate myself to pay you a hundred pounds to tide you over until you did get a ship. Then you could pay it back."

"Wad ye put that in writing?" inquired the skipper.

"Certainly. Give me a shilling, Captain."

Mr. Thompson wrote rapidly and then handed the paper to the skipper. Captain McLeod read, "For the sum of one shilling, received, I insure Captain David McLeod against the wreck of the steamer Curlew on the passage from Gottenburg to Shields, in the sum of one hundred pounds.

(Signed) "PHILIP THOMPSON."

"There," he said, "you see what a careful skipper I think you." Captain McLeod read the paper carefully, put it in his pocket and went down to the docks.

Mr. Thompson put on his overcoat and attended a meeting of the vestry of St. Barnabas church.

That evening Captain McLeod went aboard the steamer Moray, loading for Reval. She was commanded and owned by a fellow Scot, Fergus McCliesh. The two skippers talked earnestly until late in the night and parted with a gleam in their eyes.

The morning of his departure Captain McLeod read prayers with his family and cautioned his daughters to avoid invitations to places where there was dancing.

"Eet's the devil's own game," he said, "and wha eet's going on ees na place for the daughters of a godly man."

"Be very careful, Captain," said Mr. Thompson as he bade the skipper

"Wad ye put that in writing?" inquired the skipper.

farewell. "Don't let anything happen to the old Curlew."

"Ees she censured, sir?" inquired the skipper.

"All my ships are insured," replied Mr Thompson. "The Curlew is insured for five thousand pounds."

Mr. Philip Thompson, who had been for a whole year vainly trying to sell the steamer Curlew, watched her departure thoughtfully.

Capt. McLeod, standing on the bridge, looked back at Mr. Thompson standing on the wharf and shook his head, thoughtfully.

Two days later the Moray, Captain McCliesh, cleared for Reval.

The Curlew had a prosperous passage to Gottenburg, but she was slow in discharging cargo. When she had taken on ballast and was ready to return to Shields Captain McLeod wired that fact to his friend Captain McCliesh, who was then at Reval and ready to sail on his return to England.

The shilling which Captain McLeod had spent in having Mr. Philip Thompson insure his safe passage from Gottenburg to Shields did not appear such a bad investment that night of the twentieth of October when the Curlew, enveloped in as thick a fog as ever crawled over the German ocean, tossed in an ugly swell off the northeast coast of Scotland.

That Captain McLeod was a careful, conscientious skipper was evidenced by the fact that when night added its blackness to the fog he would trust the helm to no one save himself. He telegraphed so frequently to the engineer that he must have been navigating with great care, but accidents will happen to the most careful, and the Curlew took the ground with a jar which threw the mate prostrate on the deck.

Swore deeply and profanely.

Sailors and stokers rushed on deck panic-stricken, for a grounding on that part of the Scotch coast meant, usually, death to all or part of a crew.

"There's na use in standing by her," said the Captain, "get awa the boats."

With remarkable luck or skill Captain McLeod piloted his shipwrecked crew over that ugly swell safely into a small fishing harbor and then it was that Mr. Philip Thompson heard that the Curlew was lost, and smiled, and old seamen visiting Lloyds in London read of the wreck and, shaking their grizzly heads, wondered what a ship bound for Shields was doing so far to the north.

Capt. McLeod was not the only navigator who, for some reason, lay a course to the northward. When the Moray came out of the Baltic instead of clearing sou-west, or even west, Captain McCliesh pointed her nose nor-west as if he had a cargo to deliver at the Shetland islands.

Mr. Philip Thompson was astounded to receive the news that the steamer Moray had arrived at Aberdeen with the Curlew in tow, having pulled her off the shore on the northeast coast of Scotland. That the news was not altogether welcome to Mr. Thompson may be inferred from the fact that, though a vestryman, he swore deeply and profanely when he heard it and even shocked Captain McLeod, who had arrived in Shields that morning, by swearing in his presence.

"There's na man has the luck of Fergus McCliesh," muttered Captain McLeod. "Everything turns to siller in his hands. Aw've no sheep, and ma censurance ees na guid since the Curlew's saved."

Mr. Thompson commended Captains McLeod and McCliesh to a region from which St. Barnabas church was doing all it could to rescue people and fell into a brown study, from which Captain McLeod made no move to arouse him.

The salvage awarded Captain McCliesh was a generous one, and Captain McLeod called to congratulate him.

"Ye're a navigator, Davie," remarked Captain McCliesh with a grin. "A hundred yards above or below where the Curlew grounded she'd ha' been smashed like an egg. Mon, ye're a navigator."

The board did not agree with Captain McCliesh as to the ability of Captain McLeod as a navigator. They decreed his being so far out of his ... for the removal of his certificate. Oddly enough, this misfortune did not depress Captain McLeod. He deposited in the bank of Aberdeen a check for several hundred pounds, which check bore the signature of Fergus McCliesh. With this sum the skipper bought an interest in a fishing business and gave up the sea.

"Davie," said Mrs. McLeod, as she and her husband walked to kirk with their two daughters, most becomingly attired, in front, "I hope ye did na get this money in a sinfu' way."

"Woman," exclaimed Captain McLeod, "wad ye think it sinfu' to hit the deil wi' a chunk of his own breemstone?"

Mrs. McLeod's countenance cleared and she smiled with pride at the excellent appearance of her two daughters.

RENDERED VERDICT IN RHYME

Foreman of Texas Jury "Dropped" Into Poetry.

A correspondent calls our attention to an interesting verdict which was rendered in the District Court of Travis county, Tex., in 1857. The defendant, Frank B. Rafer, at that time a well known citizen of Austin, was accused of gambling, which was not regarded as a very serious offense in Texas in those early days, especially if the offender chanced to be a prominent citizen. The prosecution was generally treated as a pleasant jest, but was nevertheless carried through in earnest, and a jury composed of lawyers brought in the following verdict:

We, the jury, lawful men,
Fine the defendant dollars ten;
A guilty man beyond all doubt,
Let the defendant pay himself out.
Thus we've said this freezing morn.
Your obedient servant, A. O. Horne,
Foreman.

The composition of this verdict is attributed to A. W. Terrell, who at the time of his service on the jury was a young lawyer. Afterward he attained great distinction in practice, served as a District court judge, and was United States minister to Turkey under President Cleveland. Other members of the same jury who afterward achieved renown were Charles S. West, who rose to be a justice of the Texas Supreme court, and F. W. Chandler, who became one of the leaders of the Texas bar.—Law Notes.

Some Fabulous Confabs.

Zeus had been enthroned and announced that he could do up all the other gods by his sheer strength, but the king of heaven didn't seem to be in a very good humor for all that, and the rest of the divinities wondered what was wrong.

Taking Hebe to one side, Zeus queried:

"What was that stuff I drank last night, and why under the shade of Olympus do I feel like the second joint of a stewed owl this morning? You served the drinks, I think; maybe you can tell me what's wrong."

"Huh!" snorted the pert young damsel of the wine cup. "You ought to know. It's your funeral. Don't you know yesterday was inauguration day?"

"And was I inaugurated?" asked Zeus in a stage whisper.

"Sure; don't you feel like it?"

And the dread monarch, pressing his hands to his aching brow, wondered if the game was worth the candle after all.

Bobbie's Notion of Church.

church is a place whare yu go when sunday comes and yu wud rather stay hoam. when you git reddy to go to church yu put on yure best cloes and then when yu git to church yu see some people that has got better cloes and yu doant think about what the teecher says but moar about what yure frends is waring that is better than yures.

i doant go to church but Ma makes me go to sunday school and she makes Pa go to church. i doant think he wants to go but he is afrade of Ma and he puts on his hat and cote and says Well I wish thare wasent any preechers to tell me whare to git off. Then Ma sniffs and says Yu wud be a pritty sight if preechers dident help yu from going to the Dogs. And then Pa says yu dident think I was going to the dogs when I married yu, i guess thats whare i began going to the dogs, and then Ma and Pa go to church and sing I want to bee a Angel. —Milwaukee Sentinel.

If I Wait.

I do not hear the message that
The tell-tale bears in spring,
Which brings him homeward from afar
On swiftly flying wing;
But still I know he's coming, and
Will find his rest and mate,
In the tree which now is leafless—
So I wait.

I cannot feel the shiver that
The startled leaflet feels,
As autumn's breath, frost laden, through
Its vivid greenness steals;
And yet the change is coming, though
To me it may seem late;
And the green leaves will turn crimson
While I wait.

I cannot grasp the meaning of Earth's happiness and pain;
Yet such I know I would attain;
Each step I trust leads onward, and God's universe is great;
To find no incompleteness
If I wait.

Myth for Moderns.

Wounded Ares showed Zeus the immortal blood flowing from his wound, and begged revenge on Athene.

"Sit not by me and whine, thou renegade! Truly thy mother's spirit is intolerable, even Hera's; her ego I scarce rule with words. Therefore I deem that by her prompting thou art in this plight."

"Well, then," impertinently retorted insatiate Ares, "it's hereditary. Don't blame me. Go after her!"

And the stern-visaged cloud gather in sheer despair told Paean to heel the spear wound, while Hera chuckled behind her fan.

ACCOUNTED FOR THE DOLLAR.

Beggar's Windfall Due to Somewhat Remarkable Circumstance.

Representative Branch of Morgan county, the "military man" of the house, has had some unusual experiences. The fact that he is a chairman of the committee on military affairs very often causes his colleagues to ask him for stories.

"It was while attending a military school a good many years ago that I formed the habit of taking long walks before breakfast," said Branch to a group of friends. "One morning I happened to be strolling through the town near which the school was located, when I was 'touched' by an old fellow, whose tale of hard luck would have melted a stone.

"'But, my good fellow,' I said, 'I haven't a cent with me this morning. I spent my last penny last night, and my check from home won't reach me until to-morrow.'

"The old man wasn't satisfied.

"'Look through your pockets,' he begged, 'maybe you'll find something.'

"'Well, if I've got any money in these clothes you can have every cent of it,' I said to him, and I began turning my pockets inside out just to show him that I was 'strapped.'

"Well, would you believe it, a silver dollar dropped out of one of my pockets and rolled on the sidewalk.

Delighted, the old man quickly grabbed it up and said, 'Thanks.'

"He was much bigger than I and I said, 'Certainly; I am glad I can help you, but, really, I didn't know it was there.

"All the way back to school I wondered how that dollar came to be in my trousers.'

"And did you ever find out?" asked another legislator.

"Oh, yes; when I got back to my room my roommate told me that I was wearing his pants."—Indianapolis Star.

Faith.

We will not weep; for God is standing by us,
And tears will blind us to the blessed sight;
We will not doubt, if darkness still doth try us,
Our souls have promise of serenest light.

We will not faint if heavy burdens bind us,
They press no harder than our souls can bear,
The thorniest way is lying still behind us,
We shall be braver for the past despair.

O not in doubt shall be our journey's ending;
Sin with its fear shall leave us at the last;
All its best hopes in glad fulfilment blending,
Life shall be with us when the Death is past.

Help us, O Father! when the world is pressing
On our frail hearts, that faint without their friend;
Help us, O Father! let thy constant blessing
Strengthen our weakness—till the joyful end.

—William Henry Hurlbert.

Blind People Use Most Gas.

"When it comes to consuming gas in large quantities blind people can beat their seeing brethren all hollow," said an inspector of the Consolidated Gas Company. "I know two families where both husband and wife are blind. Every jet is turned on full tilt in their homes at night and is kept going at that rate clear up to 12 o'clock. Light and darkness are all the same to the afflicted ones, but they insist upon illumination brilliant enough for a reception.

"And that partiality for light is not a whim peculiar to those two couples. All blind people feel that way. They demand the light and in all private homes and institutions where the blind are cared for the gas bills vouch for their strange fancy."—New York Press.

Teacher Beat School Board.

Nothing daunted because padlocks were put on the door, the stovepipe taken away and no fuel furnished to keep the building warm, Miss Jennie Mowell, a plucky young schoolmistress of Lew Beach, Sullivan county, N. Y., succeeded in finishing her term of school, though the trustees had officially declared the school discontinued. With the help of her pupils Miss Mowell got new stovepipe and fuel, but she could not get her pay. She appealed to the state department of education, which has just ordered the trustees to pay her full salary and continue the school.

Then Brutus Fled.

Caesar turned his mournful glance upon Brutus as that worthy plunged in his knife. "Et tu Brute," moaned the dying conqueror.

"Well," answered the murderer, shamelessly. "I wouldn't have done it if you hadn't such a terrible lot of Gaul."

Immediately there ensued a riot in the Forum and Brutus and Casca fled for their lives and never came back. This was the first occasion when that historic expression was employed by any one, according to Livy, though common nowadays.

Political Argument.

They say a negro approached Jim Orr to-day and said: "Mr. Orr, they say you say you don't want any negro to vote for you." To which Mr. Orr replied: "If you were running for mayor, would you say that?" The negro said he wouldn't. "Well, then," Mr. Orr continued, "don't you think I have as much sense as you have?"—Atchison Globe.

Cheese Brought the Tears

Christine Nilsson and Signor Tagliapietra, at one time co-members of the Strakosch Grand Opera company at the Academy of Music, New York city, figured in an episode a la limburger, says a writer in Lippincott's, most inappropriate in consideration of their nationalities.

One evening "Faust" was the opera scheduled to be given, Nilsson the Marguerite, the late Del Puente (alternating barytone) the Valentine, and so on. Tagliapietra was "off," and had invited some German friends to a "small and late" at the then famous old Moretti restaurant in East Fourteenth street. As the dinner was drawing to a close the singer found the feast lacking in what he considered the essential limburger cheese for his Teutonic guests, and ascertaining Moretti could not supply them with it, rushed forth to an establishment in the vicinity, where he purchased a quantity and was returning therewith when he ran into the arms of the Impresario Strakosch, who was tearing about distractedly to find him.

"Come quickly, 'Tag,' Del Puente has been taken ill," he gasped. "The curtain is up and there is no one to finish the part of Valentine."

Remonstrances from the barytone proving vain, he was obliged to the "academy," where the cheese in a corner of ing room, he donned his dispatching a note to the restaurant "to keep he was dead, when he them," he answered went on the stage.

Wife Was Good Manager

Mrs. Benton had been away for a much-needed vacation, and "Aunt Jane," her husband's sister, had kept house for her. When she came home the house looked bright and shining, but Jane seemed a good deal depressed. The two women sat down together the next morning, after Mr. Benton had gone to his office, and took account of stock.

"I don't believe you've had a very good time, after all," said Mrs. Benton, looking at her sister-in-law keenly, after they had discussed the state of the larder.

"Oh, yes," was the answer. 'Only I feel sort of depressed, I've made so many mistakes."

"How did you know they were mistakes?" inquired Mrs. Benton. "Did Henry tell you?"

"Well, yes, I suppose so. He did say his wife was the only good manager he knew. That was after I'd bought some canned soups, and had to send them back because they were the wrong kind."

"What made you tell him they were the wrong kind? Why didn't you serve them piping hot and say

Money in Alligator Raising

Hatching alligators is the latest use to which incubators have been put. Beginning with chickens, ducks, geese and turkeys, the use of incubators was extended to ostriches and babies and now a manager of an alligator farm in Arkansas has adopted the use of incubators there.

An alligator is in its propagating habits between a fish and a hen. It swims in the water like a fish and lays eggs, but instead of laying them in the water it goes out and makes a nest on the land like a hen.

In this nest it lays twenty-five or thirty eggs, and then trusts to the warm weather to hatch them out. The period of incubation of alligator eggs is not accurately known, but it approximates five weeks, or a fortnight longer than chicken eggs, or a week longer than duck eggs.

Most of the alligators hatched at the alligator farms are sold in infancy for $1 apiece to visitors from north. As many alligators to maturity as the incu and streams of the alligator farm permit. They are valuable for hides, which are used for bags purses and like purposes.

The supply of alligators less than the demand, as hunters have killed off all they find, and there is as yet no son in the game laws for their tection. Like the terrapin becoming extinct in their wild

At the alligator farms more alligators are kept than are for breeding purposes. Most of are sold when a month or six old, and the others are kept early age, when their hides are pliable and easily worked.

Alligator farming so far has a profitable industry.—American Naturalist in New York Tribune.

Japanese Love of Bathing

The betterment workers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. have encountered some very interesting phases of human nature in their work. An amusing instance of race customs and prejudices is recorded in the World's Work by Mr. Lawrence Lewis as follows:

Differences in customs, too, require careful study. For example, a gang of fifty Japanese miners, after working two days in one of the large mines, sent a polite message to the superintendent, that it would be impossible for them to continue to work, unless provision were made for them to take baths every day when they came from the mine. This made the company's surgeon—who had striven, sometimes vainly, with Mexicans, Slavs and Italians to induce them not to slaughter goats in their sitting-rooms and least to throw offal outside the ho where the company's seavenger c get at it on his daily rounds—a delirious with joy. The superin had a large tank constructed of plate. Keeping a Stout Heart

If life's way is dark and rough
It develops all the stough
That misfortune can not blough
Nor beguile.
Don't despair and weaken, though
Even adverse winds seem to blough;
Take things easy, rather slough;
Bravely smile.

If you feel no longer young,
If your lute is all unstrung
And the tender songs you soung
Give no sign
That they still can cheer your heart,
Let by chance an echo steart,
Then will some remembered peart
Seem divign.

If a whisper you have heard,
If dissessions have occeared,
Breathe no tainted thought or weard
To your friends.
Let no blight of scandal claim
Vigor from your voice or naim,
Nor convey reproach and blaim
To ill fends.

WHITINGTON WHITINGTON

BY SHANNON BIRCH

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Nobody knew so well the inscrutable mainsprings that set in order the beauty, the wit, the sprightliness, the hopes and achievements of the fair members of Gold Handle Street—nobody knew these things so well as Whitington Whitington, and knowing well the capabilities of this select sphere of the social world, he enjoyed its environments and assumed control of its destinies, preserved in his task by an intimate knowledge of its many matrimonial pitfalls.

To be young and to be fair, in the catechism of Gold Handle Street, was to be in love with Whitington Whitington. To be in love with Whitington Whitington was generally known to be, with Whitington Whitington's own unusual candor, curable; it was an event against which there seemed no desire to become immune. Like a spell of the measles it was serious enough while it lasted; it was considered inevitable, and finally mended only when ended.

Whitington Whitington was believed never to fall in love in return. To have fallen in love would have put him beyond the leadership of Gold Handle Street society, and beyond the gentle remembrance of many and many a Gold Handle Street graduate whose romantic reminiscence he consigned to be long after they had passed to wider stages of action.

At last, however, be it known, unseen fate decreed that Whitington Whitington should labor in the shadow of impending matrimony, for he was to be ardently loved by a maiden who knew not to palter, indeed her age was ten years or more beyond the class of callow maidens to whom Whitington Whitington had so long made love professionally. It was the second attack, for in fact Rosina Crosby had fallen under the customary charm of Whitington Whitington years before, and he had counted that incident, in the usual diplomatic sequence, was closed, indeed he had always been led to believe that Rosina herself treated it as a closed affair and was only, alas, undecided in the ripening stages of his devotion, within the confines of Gold Handle Street, with the newest of its opening buds, Annette Van Tank.

The [illegible] dented vigor with which Rosina Crosby, now no longer young, set out that season the more dangerously pressed her rejuvenated claims [illegible] never heard of before in Gold Handle Street society, and [illegible] perplexing to Whitington Whitington as her's was a display [illegible] wholly out of line with his [illegible] Love had perished [illegible] instance with Whitington Whitington simply by the [illegible] limitations, it just run along [illegible] outlawed, indeed he con[illegible] Rosina Crosby had fol[illegible] in the footsteps of all [illegible] Street, and that between [illegible] there existed nothing [illegible] than a pleasing aroma [illegible] days. In fact Whitington

Whitington Whitington.

[illegible] had been further led to [illegible] that Rosina had not only for[illegible] her early flame, but that she [illegible] eternal solace in the mani[illegible]ries of Professor Van Tank, [illegible] wife had died young and left [illegible] care their only daughter, the [illegible]utiful, Annette Van Tank.

Whitington Whitington could not, however, forget his value as a matrimonial catch, and trembled for his fate at the hands of Rosina Crosby. Nothing like it had ever happened before. Rosina took charge; she dined him; she wined him; she monopolized his precious time and absorbed entirely his valuable attention.

Something must be done or he was lost! Thoughts of Annette—of love for Annette, that flew through his mind, merely served to aggravate his distraction. Could he save himself? for Annette? Could he save himself at all? Could he. If he could at all it should be for Annette. It was worth while to be saved for Annette; for himself it would not be worth the supreme effort. In the case of resolutions as admirable as Whitington Whitington's it is a pity that anything should ever prevent their consummation, but when we take into consideration that these resolutions were made in the absence of Rosina we can see how easily they might, as of course they did, "go awry and lose the name of action."

Annette.

Would Whitington boat. So would Rosina! Would Whitington drive? So would Rosina! Would Whitington rest? So would Rosina! And so on to the end of the chapter. Finally would Whitington Whitington please Rosina enough to become her guest at supper with Professor Van Tank and his daughter, Annette? Behold, here was a green spot! Yes, he would dine, gladly, under these conditions.

Whitington Whitington on the day he dined found the conditions as stipulated, but with an unmistakable air of marriageable thing about. Was Rosina about to execute some unexpected masterstroke? Was innuendo to be used? Was he, Whitington Whitington, willy-nilly, to be announced? Was Annette thereafter to count him among the lost? Alas for his tongue that clave to the roof of his mouth! In the midst of these perturbations Professor Van Tank arose from the table and asked permission to make known a condition of affairs the most delicate and happy that could fall to the human lot. In the private gathering around him he wished to call on all to drink to the happiness of two people who had consulted the calendar of love, and found the stars propitious; he wished to call on those present to drink to the happy event, known to all present but one (whereupon Whitington Whitington looked despairingly at Annette); "known," the speaker continued, "to Rosina, Annette and—and—and to myself, of course, and now announced first and specially to our dear friend, Whitington Whitington. I refer to the early prospects of marriage between—(a long pause, amounting to suspense)—Rosina Crosby, whose guests we are, and—(another long pause, still more excruciating)—and the speaker, your servant, Alcibiades Van Tank!"

"Our health!"

Whitington Whitington, passing from death to life, arose with Annette, and with the most intense look of gratification possible to the human countenance, exclaimed exuberantly, as he lifted his cup:

"Delightful! Delightful! Professor, your health! Your health!"

Rosina arose and looked the sphinx on all except on Professor Van Tank; to Professor Alcibiades Van Tank she was sweetness itself.

Whitington Whitington at once turned an awkward eye on Annette, who was never lovelier; his spirits could not be subdued, and he promptly made an important resolution with reference to any further delay; he then resumed his seat, murmuring:

"Ah! Delightful! Delightful!"

NO SUCH WORD AS FAIL.

Remark Attributed to Admiral Togo's Great Rival.

The Makaroff memorial just issued, says the Saturday Evening Post, recalls a visit to Washington paid by the stalwart admiral immediately before the outbreak of the war in the far East.

The part of Washington which pleased him best was the National Museum, where he was under the guidance of one of the best-informed anthropologists in America, the acting dean, Prof. Otis T. Mason. Prof. Mason is as small as he is mighty, but straight as an arrow, in spite of his white hair, and every inch of him a man. He looked like a picturesque pocket-edition beside the magnificent Makaroff, with his broad shoulders and massive chest and huge beard.

They were standing before the incomplete Russian exhibit. Prof. Mason explained several reasons why the collector had failed to do his duty, ending, according to his invariable kindness, with the remark: "I suppose we must consider them as adequate excuse." Instantly Admiral Makaroff replied: "There are plenty of reasons, but there is never an excuse for any failure." His deep voice was like velvet thunder. It made whatever he said seem momentous. And he came by the principle honestly. It ran in the family. His grandfather once received an order from the czar direct, which was so difficult of execution that the czar closed with the unusual words:

"Can it be done."

"Sire," the general replied, "if it is possible it will be done. If it is impossible—it shall be done."

Literary Labor.

It is an interesting study to compare the different methods of world-famous authors in producing their works. Virgil, for instance, thought no toil too laborious in order to perfect his verse; his Eclogues occupied him for three years, his Georgics seven, and the Aeneid no less than twelve. Yet Dryden translated the whole in less than three; but then composition and translation are not quite the same thing. Our great Shakespeare must have been a very rapid worker, to judge by the voluminous quantity of his plays; while as for Sir Walter Scott, he fairly takes our breath away. On the other hand, there is Addison, who used to stop the press in order to insert a comma. But of all remarkable feats in rapidity of production, to our mind there is nothing to compare with that of William Beckford's "Vathek." Beckford was the son of an Englishman, one Alderman Beckford, leader of the Opposition of the city of London, in the stormy times of Wilkes. Yet "Vathek" was written in French, and written, too, in the course of a continuous sitting of three days and two nights, the author sustaining himself by large draughts of wine. Beckford is, perhaps, best remembered now as the original builder of Fonthill Abbey.

Boy Not to Be Tempted.

The following story is told of a very little boy in Forest Hill:

He stood at a corner near home one day, soaking in the sunshine. An older boy strolled along, dragging a sled.

"Come on, and go coasting," said the older boy.

"I dassent," replied the smaller; "my mother told me to stay right here."

"Aw, come on—just down the hill."

"No, I dassent; my mother told me to stay right here."

"Shucks! She won't ever know. I'll haul you on my sled if you'll come."

"I'd like to, but I dassent; my mother told me to stay right here."

The older boy looked scorn. "Go to h——l, then," he said.

"I dassent," the little chap answered, "my mother told me to stay right here."—Newark News.

The Windy Day.

Oh, the windy day is a laughing day!
For the wind is a funny fellow;
He rollicks and shouts when skies are gray
And leaves are turning yellow.
The pines, a moment ago so still,
Fling out their arms and laugh with a will,
Nodding their heads, as who should say,
"The old wind has an amusing way."

Oh, the windy day is a singing day!
For the wind is a minstrel, strolling
Thro' field and wood, with cheery lay,
Insistent, sweet, cajoling:
The strings of his harp are pine and oak,
As he chants his tale to the woodland folk—
Ah, revelers of old are they
When the minstrel wind begins to play!

Oh, the windy day is the vagrant's day!
For the wind is a comrade rover,
Whistling down the great highway
To every hill-road lover;
And whether he whistles or laughs or sings,
Through every vagrant heart there rings
The impelling, world-old call to stray
With the comrade wind for ever an aye.

Mark Twain's Criticism.

Mark Twain was visiting H. H. Rogers, and was led into the library.

"There," said Mr. Rogers, as he pointed to a bust in white marble, "what do you think of that?"

The work of art pictured a young woman coiling her hair, a very graceful example of modern Italian sculpture.

Mr. Clemens looked at it a moment, and then he said, "It isn't true to nature."

"Why not," asked his host.

"She ought to have her mouth full of hairpins."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Recent Wall Street Winners.

Among winners by the recent upward movement in Wall street William Rockefeller is said to take the lead. His profits in the last few months are put at $15,000,000, chiefly made in the rise in Union Pacific. Charles M. Schwab, John W. Gates and E. H. Harriman also came out ahead, but did nothing like so well as Mr. Rockefeller.

DOG GOT THE ROBBERS.

Persistency of Yellow Cur That Brought Results.

After a posse had failed to locate them, a little shaggy yellow dog recently stood guard over six bank robbers he had run into a straw stack, says a Sioux City, Ia., dispatch to the New York World, and by his frantic demonstration induced the pursuers to dig them out. The yeggmen had blown the safe of the Jolley, Ia., bank, and were traced to the farm of A. Clark, near Yetter. The posse looked over the premises, and walked around the very stack where the robbers were concealed.

They gave up the search and returned to Yetter, where they were telephoned by Mrs. Clark that the dog was barking himself sick at the stack. They returned and watched, and presently a leg was thrust out at the dog. Three burglars were dug out from the bottom of the stack and taken to Yetter. Again Mrs. Clark telephoned the dog was frantic about something in the straw.

A third time the posse returned. A farme climbed the pile of straw, and stepped on a burglar the first thing, and instantly described a parabolic curve diving off. The other two burglars also showed themselves and announced they would fight. The posse repaired to a barn, from which they besieged the stack.

The men finally surrendered with their guns, nitroglycerin and all. Then the dog quit barking.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Growing Old.

The stress and toil of life are past,
And I may take mine ease at last;
Quiet and peace my friends shall be,
To share my hearthstone reverie;
My latter days shall be my best;
Ample the guerdom of my quest.
The rosy breaking of the dawn,
The noontide shadows on the lawn.
The summer's march, the autumn's glow,
Sweet home, where love's dear blossoms grow—
Ah, what may be more fair than these
The hungry heart of man to please?
Here now shall end ambition's flight,
The toil of youth, strong manhood's fight;
Long years the fruit of these I sought;
The world hath now its tribute brought,
Come, joy of life, with me abide,
My soul's desire is satisfied.

My son, my son, it may not be,
Thine is a larger destiny;
More vast than all this world can give
Thy lot, when thou shalt fully live.
Within thy soul a spark of fire
I bid, which shall, with new desire,
Flame forth when I thine eyes unseal.
Heaven's undreamed questings to reveal.
Thou art not old! Thou hast outworn
The apparel which thy soul hath borne;
It hampers thee; when I shall give
New raiment, thou more free shalt live;
New-fledged thy spirit shall aspire
To larger flights, nor ever tire.
Too highborn then to sit at ease
Where fading earthly treasures please;
Couldst thou but know toward what they tend—
Ah, no, my child, there is no end!
—Henry N. Dodge, in Christian Advocate.

Two Kitchen Comforts.

I find my two best kitchen friends are a high stool and a camp chair; cost $1. The high stool saves strength and rests the feet when employed in the ceaseless round of washing dishes. So many women stand to peel potatoes or apples, while I find it a great pleasure to sit in my camp chair and lean back. It is very light and can be easily lifted to the handiest place in the kitchen or carried to the open air. Then, again, I sit in my camp chair by my blue flame when frying fritters or doing the many things which need almost constant attention. Ofttimes I can have paper, magazine or book in hand, but with the nose and ears so close the cooking can be attended to even if the eyes and mind are otherwise engaged. —Brown Book.

Iowa Student Goes to Oxford.

Jacob Van Der Zee of Sioux Center, Iowa, a student at the Iowa state university, has won one of the Rhodes scholarships at Oxford, England. Young Van Der Zee is a native of Holland and came to this country fifteen years ago. His father is a carpenter and the lad had to work his way through the university. The Rhodes scholarships require applicants to have an athletic as well as a classroom record, and the fact that young Van Der Zee excels in the mile run and is also a good foot-ball, baseball and tennis player no doubt aided him in passing the tests.

"Paper" Lessons Not Enough.

Prof. John Dewey tells the following story to illustrate the futility of certain present-day educational methods when applied to the affairs of practical life:

"There is a school in Chicago," said he, "where they teach boys to swim without any water. All the motions necessary for swimming are taught scientifically and correctly. I asked one of the graduates what he did when he got into the water.

"He replied laconically, 'Sunk.'"—New York Times.

Horror!

The superintendent of a department store in Brooklyn which caters a great deal to the German trade tells the story of a woman who came to the store the other day and admired a large basket of shamrocks which were on sale. She stared at them for a long time and finally asked the saleswoman what they were.

"Shamrocks," replied the saleswoman.

"They are very pretty," replied the woman, "but haven't you got them in red?"—New York Times.

Why Supplies Were Ample.

Thomas F. Somers loves to tell of his early experiences as a drummer. One night he had to stay over in a very small town in the Far South; he confided to the woman who ran the hotel that he was very fond of buttermilk. At supper she brought in a huge jar of it, set it on the table in front of him and said: "Go ahead and drink all you want to. We don't keep no pig."—New York Times.

PHILIP NOLAN

The Man Without a Country, the Lost Ship and the Lost Island.

By Dr Edward Everett Hale, in the National Geographic Magazine.

THE curious paper which Dr. Hague has printed in the National Geographic Magazine for December closes with a reference to a story which I wrote in the year 1863 called "The Man Without a Country." That story begins with these words:

"I suppose that very few casual readers of the New York Herald of August 13 observed, in an obscure corner among the 'deaths' the announcement, 'Nolan. Died on board the United States corvette Levant, latitude two degrees eleven minutes south, longitude 131 degrees west.'"

I had full right to say that very few readers observed it, because nobody observed it. The story was a fiction, and with the right of an author of fiction I made this statement, which is unequivocally true.

I speak of this with a certain sensitiveness, because I have been accused of being a forger and counterfeiter for using such language. But it is one of the privileges of authors of fiction to make their narrative as plausible or probable as they can, if they give sufficient clues to the reader from which he may know that he is reading fiction. In this case I began by placing the supposed action of part of the book on board a ship which had disappeared more than two years before. I knew that she had disappeared, the Navy Department knew she had disappeared, all well informed readers knew that she had disappeared. Even among 4000 newspapers in the country the editors of two knew that she had disappeared. With my eyes open I intentionally gave this ready clue to any careful reader, that from the beginning he might know that the story was a parable; and if there are any of such croakers left, as I suppose there may be in the office of one newspaper known to me, I will say to them that from the time of the Pharoahs down parable has been a method of instruction employed by teachers, even of the highest distinction.

The Navy Department did not know where the Levant disappeared. All they knew was that Captain Hunt of the Levant was under orders to proceed as rapidly as possible from Hilo to the American coast, and that he started out to obey these orders, and the ship has never since been heard from by any trace whatever, unless it be in certain wreckage found on the south shore of Hawaii in June, 1861.

The Navy Department knew this, but I did not know it. I only knew that she had disappeared somewhere in the Pacific Ocean two years before.

To carry out the specific purpose to which I have alluded I meant to have these latitudes and longitudes indicate a spot high on the Andes. It was over twenty years afterward that I found in some inaccuracy of some proof-reader, possibly by some blunder of mine, the spot indicated is in the Pacific Ocean, where I did not know she had disappeared. But also, the manuscript copy is lost, and I cannot find who made this change. This is in point of fact not far from the Marquesan Islands, and, oddly enough, in the story Nolan is supposed to have been at those islands with Essex Porter. But I had nothing to do with this. I placed the ship on the Andes with the specific purpose which I have named.

I should perhaps have never discovered my own error but that many years ago my friend James D. Hague, who knows the bottom of the Pacific better than I do the surface of the United States, called my attention to the instructions which Captain Hunt had on his last voyage in the Levant. I had never looked for those instructions, having no occasion to for my purpose. It seems that Mr. Hague was in Honolulu at the time when the Levant sailed; that Hunt was his friend, and that they bade each other good-by on the day of her parting. As the reader knows, she was never again heard of but from the silent record of the spar which has been found on the island of Kaalualu. But Mr. Hague has brought together in his interesting paper the evidence which shows that almost certainly Hunt intended to sail on a line nearly east from the Hawaiian Islands. In that region on any of the more recent atlases there is a spot of blue water. On the most recent atlas of the world I find not a speck for thirty degrees of north latitude from the equator. On the old Spanish charts, however, and on charts copied from them, Mr. Hague and the officers of marine hydrography have found indications of reefs and even islands. One of the latest of them is De Graves' Island of 1859. Almost anywhere in this area, itself larger than some of the smaller planets of the solar system, the bones of the Levant may lie. In this region five degrees of longitude and two of latitude have now been searched in vain.

Mr. Hague, however, is kind enough to assure me that if my fictitious character, Philip Nolan, ever had some sublimical form, he or his spirit, if they were on the Levant, may still haunt the reef or atoll under the shadow of cocoanuts or bananas or breadfruit trees. Nolan would have been twenty-five years old in the year 1805. Thus his 125th birthday would be found in this year. If the climate is healthy for sublimical people, Dr. Hague assures me that if I will land with him on that reef I may meet for the first time in the flesh and blood the somewhat bended form of my old hero. He will forgive me that I placed him on the Andes, where men do not live so long.

MEAT NOT INDISPENSABLE TO PROPER DIETING.

Man, as His Teeth Show, is an Omniverous Animal of Amazing Adaptability.

The vegetarian has done us a service in exploding the superstition that meat is an indispensable item in a complete diet. His experience and that of various peoples, such as the Japanese, has indeed taught the teachable that the indispensable article of diet does not exist. In this country we are apt to think of milk as indispensable; yet the Japanese have not used it (possessing very few cows, or, indeed, domestic animals of any kind), and only now is the Japanese soldier being compelled to drink milk and eat much meat—for neither of which, we are told, has he any liking.

Indeed, the great lesson which all must learn who do not wish to become faddy about their food is that man, as his dentition shows, is an omnivorous animal of amazing adaptability. When hard put to it he can make a living out of almost anything; and after a time he can even begin to convince himself that he is better off as he is. This is the reason why all these mutually contradictory food faddists can co-exist. All are right—particularly; and wrong—universally.

If men were designed to live on one particular standard diet such as each food faddist thinks he has discovered they would have a simple, straightforward digestive apparatus, calculated to deal with such a diet without undue complexity or "overlapping." On the contrary, our digestive apparatus is like our teeth, characteristically omnivorous. Pepsin is only one of at least a dozen different ferments, some of which can only act in an alkaline medium, others only in an acid medium, others only in the presence of such and such a body, others only in its absence. This extraordinary, complex apparatus was not constructed to provide problems for physiologists nor to consume superfluous vital energy. Its plain meaning—if people were on the lookout for meanings—is that the more complex, adaptable and varied the apparatus the fitter is its owner to survive in all dietetic emergencies.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Bishop's Gaiters.

An amusing story is told of Dr. Gore. He was once walking in the street when two little boys were attracted by his black episcopal slippers. "Wot's 'e?" asked one, in surprise. "Oh, 'e—'e's a Scotchman in mourning," was the reply.—M. A. P.

Will Be Ladies Now.

"I'll mak' the carles lords, but I'll no mak' the carlines leddies," said King James IV., in giving the judges of the Court of Sessions the title of "Lord." And it has been so until now. The wives of Scottish law lords have all along been plain "Mrs.," an arrangement which has frequently brought about a situation more awkward than pleasant. When a new judge retained his previous name little confusion could arise, it being then a case of, let us say, Lord Wallace of Elderslie and Mrs. Wallace. But when a new judge took the title of his estate the whole aspect of things was changed. It was then Lord Elderslie and Mrs. Wallace; hence a sea of troubles. Now, happily, this fortuitous arrangement, which surely did credit to King James' reputation of being "the wisest fool in Christendom," has been abolished. Henceforth, "By His Majesty's command," the wife of a judge of the Court of Session will be "Lady."

CIRCUIT COURT.

Court convened Monday morning Hon. S. L. Brewer, judge presiding; and Hon. W. B. Bowling, solicitor. The grand jury consists of J. Wiley Littlejohn, foreman; J. M. Merchant, S. R. Letcher, Joseph Cox, John Crumpton, Robert Milford, Joel Friday, A. L. Foshee, J. N. Glasscock, J. L. Smith, A. T. Hathcock, W. E. Thomas, A. F. Mims, L. Moore, Samuel Pate, Wm. Veazey, Albert Gore, Charles Robinson and Charles Foshee. Judge Brewer gave the grand jurors a very plain, explicit charge, that all could understand the duty required of them by their country. The petit jurors are: No. 1: F. M. Moore, C. C. Crumpton, R. W. Ward, Monroe Ramsey, J. W. Edwards, Charles Littlejohn, J. R. Martin, N. A. Kicker, J. M. Bean, E. M. Giles, Jack Groom and John A. Collins. No. 2: H. M. Mahan, Wash Wilson, R. Calloway, T. J. Cobb, S. E. Bruce, J. C. Veazey, J. M. Potts W. R. Pate, W. C. Dorminy, John Edwards, Charles Shaw, and John Ramsey. No. 3: C. C. Cost and S. S. Scott. Monday afternoon and Tuesday morning were taken up with motions, etc. Tuesday afternoon the Robinson-Campbell case, better known as "the dog case," was called; 63 witnesses were subpoenaed in all. The plaintiff's witnesses were examined in the afternoon and after a recess for supper the court sat until about 10 p. m. hearing the defendant's side. Wednesday morning at the time of our going to press Judge Brewer was charging the jury. It is to be hoped that this "tackle(?) of a dog" will soon be settled.

THORSBY LETTER.

The gentlemen of the Commercial Club gave a reception to their ladies on Friday last. The club rooms were beautifully decorated with Japanese lanterns, flags and flowers. Dainty refreshments were served during the evening. A ladies' auxiliary was organized, the wives, sisters and sweethearts of the members being eligible. Every one present reported having spent a very pleasant evening. Miss Carol Olson gave a farewell reception to her lady friends at the Thorsby Inn on Saturday. Every one was glad to get a bargain at the Malmgren auction on the 13th. The editor of the Union was a visitor here last week. Mr. G. W. Phalin, Mr. Edward O'Grady, Miss Carol Olson, and Miss Anna Howard spent a pleasant Sunday at Shelby Springs. Mr. Prescott, of Montgomery, was a guest at the Horn residence on Sunday. Miss Dora Thorson returned from a flying trip to Calera on Monday. Rev. Clarke, of Fort Payne, who is the State President of the Congregational Board of Missions, spoke at the college hall both Sunday morning and evening. He will remain with us a few days this week. The Johanson and Malmgren families both left for the north on the 15th, the former family going to Rockford, Ill., and the latter going to Sioux City, Ia. Friends regret their going and hope to see them back again at some future date. Dr. Junkerman is spending the week in Clanton. Miss Carol Olson, who for the past year has been the pleasant visitor of her sister, Mrs. Michelson, at the Thorsby Inn, left for her home in Chicago on Wednesday. During her sojourn here she made many friends and was the recipient of numerous invitations to parties and other entertainments. In her going Thorsby loses one of its most charming ladies. We all entertain hopes that she will soon return. She seemed so pleased with Thorsby that we feel as though her praises will bring other young people here. All the girls seem to be leaving. Boys, can't you keep them at home? An international money order office will be opened at Thorsby after the first of July. Rev. Moses, of Lawrenceberg, Tenn., who has been spending several weeks with us, has returned to his home. G. W. Phalin went to McHenry, Ill., on Tuesday night on account of the serious illness of his father. His numerous friends here sympathize with him on his sad journey. Mr. Haggarty, who has been spending several months in Thorsby, returned to his home in Chicago Wednesday. He made many friends while here and was the life of our social gatherings and all say farewell with regret, but cherish hopes of his speedy return to us.

ELLISON.

"Sam Ellison was born in Alabama February 28, 1845. He passed from this world at his home at Prairie Hill, Texas, May 17, 1904. He was converted when a boy and joined the church in his 26th year at Rocky Mount, Shelby county, Ala. He was a soldier in the war between the States, and was wounded in the battle of Murfreesboro in 1862. In his 22nd year he was married to Miss Mary B. Thomas. This union was blessed with nine children, three of whom preceded him to the better land. He moved to Texas in 1878 and settled in Prairie Hill community, where he was known and greatly loved and respected for his noble Christian character. Bro. Ellison suffered for more than a year with Bright's disease, but with this terrible affliction he was patient, cheerful and fully submissive unto the will of God. Two months before his death he thought the time for his departure had come. He said: "It is all right. I hate to leave you all, though I'm ready." In a tender and loving way he bade his family good-bye, then seemed to be waiting the change. When his children would weep for him he would say, "Weep not, but meet me in heaven." He said to the writer: "I feel that as soon as I'm done shaking hands with you all I'll begin shaking hands with those on the other side." The writer preached his funeral in his home church to a crowded house. Text from Rev. 2:10. We laid his body to rest in Mt. Antioch Cemetery to await the resurrection of the righteous. He leaves a host of friends, who loved him and miss him in the church and community, a wife, six children, a dear mother 89 years old, six brothers and a sister to mourn his departure. May the Holy Spirit comfort their bereaved hearts. May they lean on the all-strong arm of their Savior in this hour. His pastor,

Still wet weather, and the grass is looking fine, as well as the regular crops.

Some warm letters from different parties on stock law. I've never lived where it was, but of those that have eight or nine out of every ten say the land owners don't need it, to say nothing of the renters and widows. I was a little uncertain, but Mr. Jones and others have decided me against it. We're doing splendid without it. So if it comes up here is one vote against it, for I've got some land, and all it is to me is for the grass that's on it. There's enough timber to fence it for a while yet, and I can get wire cheaper than I can afford stock law if it is like some say it is.

J. P. Gentry has bought a new buggy for his son, A. D., to carry the mail on R. F. D. No. 3, and we are all proud of our mail carrier.

G. W. Marlar has had a cancer taken off his neck, and we are glad to say he is doing well.

O. P. Scott visited his son, David, Saturday, accompanied by Morgan and C. W. Scott and A. D. Gentry. They report a nice time and good music.

We would like to hear from R. A Day, of Homer, La., again.

CLANTON.

Well, here I come. Court is on, and the guilty must face justice; but suppose that every man who has violated the law in the last twelve months in Chilton was before this court, wouldn't it be a big one? We expect a large crowd, though the farmers are behind and the grass is growing.

The Lord is helping the cotton association by sending so much rain that the cotton can't be worked, but we farmers and the Lord go hand in hand.

Some actor by the name of Jefferson died lately, and there has been so much said about him that lots of us feel like we knew him. I think some time I'll die just to find out how much all think of me, but then I'd be so long dead I might get tired of it. Just look at Nan Patterson, that show girl how prominent she has made herself by killing her lover, and now I expect a lot more cheap actresses will go out and bring down their man just to make themselves popular. This is a curious world anyhow. I believe in scattering flowers in the path of the deserving while they're living, but it does look as if I'll have to die to get some one to speak nice of me. I expect that even the Banner would say something nice about me if I was dead.

I hope we'll have a good time at court this week. I'm expecting some nice whortleberries about now, and I invite you all to come and help me eat them. You see our two popular clerks went down to Florida some times ago, and one of them made a contract for a big lot of berries to be shipped here, but the other one prefers to go down and pick his. Anyhow, when you come to court just call around at the office and get all the whortleberries you want and a full history of Florida and the latest dots on fishing. Hoping to see you all at court,

ENERGY.

Editor Union:

I can't refrain from saying something about stock law, as I've read so much about it lately. I don't know who "Observer" is, but I fear there is a great deal that he has failed to observe along this line in Chilton county. And then there's "Whippoorwill;" he thinks he knows the voice of the people in his community, but I'm afraid he's got a lot of lazy neighbors, and I'm sorry for a man in that fix. Stock law in such sections would make lasting trouble, for if such an element exists now trouble would be double under stock law. We're a quiet people here in Beat 6, and have no talk about stock law, for we don't need it. We are industrious and don't mind splitting rails and fencing our farms. We have a good range for our stock, have plenty of meat, milk and butter. Then why fuss about stock law? Yours for no stock law,

"RAIL SPLITTER."

MARS HILL.

Editor Union:

About this stock law wrangling, we should consider whether or not it would build up our county. Now, fellow citizens, we're bad enough already, but if stock law should come in we'll get demoralized and go to the dogs. It would break up our schools and churches, and we'd be crossways with one another. Let "Observer" build himself a fence and he'll be all right, even if he has to split a few rails. Hurrah for Jones, Waldrup and Avery. A man from Georgia, who lived under stock law there, told me today that he had to cut down the poplar trees and cut up the limbs so his cows could eat the leaves to keep them from starving. If I knew where "Observer" came from I could tell you whether he is a rail splitter or not. Let's have harmony and peace among us, that God may bless us, is my prayer. "SAME OLD COON."

JEMISON.

Editor Union:

A few words about stock law. I see Mr. Jones and others arguing for and against the law, and I appreciate the way they are handling the question. I think that our good people are a little premature in writing on this question like they are, for there is something to do before we can vote on stock law. The law requires that before the Probate Judge can order an election on a local law that he be furnished with a petition signed by a majority of all the freeholders in the territory to which the law applies. So the first thing to do is to circulate the petition and see whether that majority wants the election, and by this way Mr. Jones will get the expression of the old white heads that he speaks of. Now, I can't afford to take sides on this question more than to express my ideas on the matter. I think the time has come when stock law would be a benefit to a greater number of people than it would be against. You all know that when the pine timber is cut off our land that it grows up in black jacks, and they grow so thick that they overrun the grass, and that about all the pine is gone out of our county. It will take about $130 to hold an election in this county on the special school tax, and the loss of a day's time for every qualified voter, and while we are voting on that it will not cost one cent more to get the expression of our people on stock law. I think it advisable for the county S. P. T. to send a petition to the chairman of every rural district and let him call a meeting, and every one sign the petition for the election, not stock law, but to give the people a chance to vote on it, and I for one will be satisfied with their decision. I am yours for the people and their wishes and the Union.

Editor Union:

A few questions for Observer to answer, if he can: Did you pay damages for stock trespassing just before you left chambers county? Did you say you came from stock law and would move again if it come here? Then how can we believe you if you go from one side to the other? I've spent the most of 35 years in Chilton and never knew one of my neighbors to have to pay for stock trespassing. My brother owned a hog which got in your wheat field some time ago, and like a man he asked you what was the damages, and you said under the law of Chilton you could not get damages. That is sufficient to say if the law was so fixed you would charge as much as you could. It seems like you are a traitor if you come from stock law and said you would move if we had it here, and now you want stock law. Observer, there are too many just like me for you to get stock law in Chilton. You had better get some timber while it is cheap, for stock law will never come till your head is white. Have you heard any of the old men who were raised here arguing for stock law? It may be good for Chambers, for I've heard there is a heap of rock there, and the little children can't do much towards making a crop, only graze the stock. If you want better milk and more of it, get better cows, give $20.00 for a cow that will give a gallon and a half instead of paying $14.00 for a cow that only gives 3-4 of a gallon. Go back to the garden spot of Chambers and get a cow that suits you and don't run down our cows. I've had a little experience in stock law and hope never to see it here. There is some profit in having stock run at large, if you don't believe it try it. I rented land one year and I split rails and I got pay for them. I paid the 3rd and 4th of the crop that was the way land rented then; around here some pay the 4th. I know of some in stock law that was rented for the 3rd and 4th. The renter pays $1.00 each for pasture, two head at that rate would cost him $24.00 per year. Now, Mr. Smith, just think how near your little town of Thorsby came to having trouble. One man did make those people turn his hogs out of prison, or so I've heard. I've seen some stock law country myself, but I've never seen 4-horse wagon loads of dressed hogs, that must have been near some butcher pen or where the land is better than it is at Thorsby. I don't think either you or Observer have seen much of the county. I don't profess to be broad-minded nor a very progressive farmer, but have sense enough to make an honest living while I live where there is no stock law. If good fence will not keep stock out, how are you going to keep them in? Hundreds of acres are improved every year. Some men are improving their stock right here in Chilton county, and I expect just as good hogs as anywhere. Success to THE UNION and freedom of stock.

G. W. JONES.

THORSBY.

Editor Union:

A few words on stock law, and hurrah for those who oppose it. I don't think it is a debatable question, for any thinking man knows that it won't do for old Chilton. We are trying a part of it up here and it is a curse from start to finish. I would not like for Observer to dictate to me, as I'm afraid it would not stick. Judging the future by the past, we admit it would be good for our opposers, and then they would sell all their timber and land. We must look before we jump again, for we have already voted our privileges away, and you may think that is all they want, but their next move will be a king. All some people know about the question is the money they are offered to get it made a law. I'm sorry to say that we've some good people in our county that will vote contrary to their interests. Remember, friends, that we are all one, and the high ones are the ones that doeth the will of the Father, and God gave us a free country if we would serve Him. Let those that want stock law fix their pastures and show us that it is a good thing, and then like "doubting Thomas" we will believe. With success to THE UNION and all.

"OPPOSER."

RANDOLPH.

Well, it rains and grass grows. That is one way to reduce the cotton crop. Revival services at the Methodist church closed Thursday night. The pastor was very ably assisted by Mr. Northcutt, of Centerville. Miss Emma Hubbard was in town Monday. Thomas McCumber, of Selma, is visiting here. Mrs. Julia Meroney went to Selma Sunday. Mr. Kinsey, of Selma, preached at the Methodist church Sunday night. R. W. McKerrall is painting his residence. S. G. Glasscock was a visitor last week. James Rasberry, of Mulberry, was in town last week. The stock law question seems to be waxing warm, and there is danger of some of the writers using too harsh language. Brethren, stop; use reason instead of denunciation, and on this question as well as all others, "Let the people rule."

Editor Union:

We'd be pleased with a little space in THE UNION. Grass is growing beautifully. A. J. Lumpkin has the largest potato crop we ever saw; last Sunday was a happy day at his house. A nice little crowd gathered in the morning. Seats were provided, and the organ presided over by his little girl (about 11 years old) and we all enjoyed a prayer and praise service. Then a sermon by S. Thornton, of Clanton. Then a testimony service. Next a fine dinner, to which all were made welcome. In the afternoon another beautiful service of prayer, praise and testimony, and Mr. Lumpkin addressed the people in his earnest and enthusiastic manner. It was a pleasant season. Mr. Lumpkin's little girls are quite interesting and have fine musical ability. It is a delightful home, and we hope to go there again. S. B.

LOMAX.

The farmers are having a great battle with General Green, and he is hard to beat. I hope everybody in Chilton will read P. C. Smith's letter in last week's UNION. It tells all that is necessary to convince intelligent persons that stock law is best for the people, and shows in many ways why it is so. "Whippoorwill" sends good sound argument. I've some neighbors like his. I like to reply to any one so long as they stay in the bounds of reason, but when it comes to such as "feeding cows on pine stumps, and knots," and "Pat's prayer," it reminds me of the old saying that "a drowning man will grab at straws." I expect some of the anti-stock law people run their rows up and down the hill, when they learn the economy there is in stock law and running their rows on a level, they will be ready to leave the wilderness and enter the promised land of prosperity that flows with rich milk and butter, with hogs that make bacon, with the wilderness under cultivation and everything is economized. As to the cost of a fence between stock law and no stock law I can't tell exactly, but it is safe to say the cost is a great deal less than to fence the farms under no stock law. Come out with reasonable arguments. Yours for stock law.

OBSERVER.

LOMAX.

Editor Union:

I am proud to see such reasonable talks as P. C. Smith makes in OUR paper. It is welcomed by all the family. We know each has a right to his opinion, but the beauty is in reason such as he and some others use. I'd not want stock law if I thought it would be detrimental to the welfare of our county, but my experience teaches me it would not be. Stock law does not prohibit stock from eating the grass that God provided for them, and does not force them to eat pine knots and black jack brush. It it a step in the direction of prosperity and better stock. As Whippoorwill says, it takes 4 pine rooters to weigh as much as one good hog kept in the pen. Oh, says one, make you a pasture, but you see there is no economy in fencing against your own stock and the other fellow's, too. Now, men, discuss the subject from a reasonable and economic standpoint. A public discussion will be held at Lomax soon, so Messrs. Jones, Avery et al., bring out your best arguments for the occasion.

OBSERVER, JR.

THE WONDERFUL TOADS.

Real Explanation of Why They Ar Found Alive Underground.

Have you ever seen a toad bury himself? Often, in moving a box or a flower pot which has stood in a dark and sheltered corner of the garden, you will discover a toad underneath. But he is not at all easy to see. His flat, rough back is perfectly level with the surface on which the box rested, for the toad is so loose and bulgy in figure that he can accommodate himself like putty to the flat bottom of the box under which he has hidden.

It is this habit of the toad, to be discovered by the merest accident in the midst of soil which has apparently formed around him, since there is no visible aperture by which he entered, that gives rise to the belief that toads can live for unlimited ages underground.

When, too, miners and others—worthy men, who are evidently trying to tell you the unvarnished truth—aver that they have, with their own eyes, seen a solid block of coal split open and a live toad fall out of an hermetically sealed prison in the centre, the narrative seems to be more than a startling confirmation of your own wondering belief.

The fact is, of course, that the creature has buried himself where you found him; and so quietly and unobtrusively is the operation performed that, even if you happen to be looking in that direction, no movements catch the eye. The toad simply sinks into the soft ground backward, his long, handlike feet shoving the earth upward, around and over himself. Thus it smoothly closes over him, and, though a mere film of soil covers him, there is no sign whatever on the surface of his presence. He fills exactly the same space as before, only a fraction of an inch lower.

Consequently, our friend, the toad, sets out upon his little journeys with so little circumspection that it is the rule rather than the exception, when you look down a deep well, to see luckless toads straddling on the top of the water far below, hopeless prisoners for life.

Arrived below, he follows nature's rule, and finds some crevice into which he can bury himself backward, covering himself with the loose debris which his entry displaces, only coming out at intervals to search for food. Then some day there is a blow of pick or shovel above his hiding place; and, as blocks fall aside, there, in a cavity exactly fitting his body, with no trace of any hole by which he could have entered, an astonished toad stares at an equally astonished miner.

A very simple geological calculation then fixes the approximate number of millions of years or so that that toad must have remained in the centre of what has gradually become a block of coal.—Answers.

Saved by a Pipe.

Bob Chestnut's visit to town on Thursday recalls the story of how his coolness saved his life in an altercation with an Irishman in a Western cattle camp many years ago. The Irishman was a bully and a bad man. He started something with Bob. While the latter always wore a brace of six-shooters in his belt, he also carried a sudden emergency Derringer in his outside coat pocket. The Irishman had an eleven-inch Colt's already in his hand. Bob thrust his hand in his pocket for his Derringer, but the weapon had slipped down in a hole in the lining. His hand coming in contact with his pipe, he quickly drew it out and placed it in his mouth. The Irishman lowered his gun, which he had elevated when Bob thrust his hand in his pocket. Bob reached for his pocket again, presumably for his tobacco. Fumbling around, he secured the Derringer, brought it into play like a flash of lightning—and they carried the Irishman away. Bob took a trip to the British possessions for his health, although this was hardly necessary, as the shooting was a plain case of self-defense.—Coffeyville (Mo.) Journal.

BEAT NINE ITEMS.

And yet it rains and old General Green still holds the fort, and farmers have begun to wear a haggard look—the same as to say something was going wrong.

Mr. "Doc" Gentry went to Maplesville Sunday, where he met his wife, who had been with her sister, Mrs. John Barrett, of near Stanton. Mrs. Barrett has been very sick for several weeks, but is better now.

Several of our boys attended a meeting held at Thorsby in the interest of the cotton seed oil mill, ginnery, warehouse and fertilizer factory Saturday. Our people will join in with Thorsby in trying to have the above named enterprise located at Thorsby.

I think some of your correspondents would make good debaters and even lawyers from the way they discuss the stock law question.

With best wishes to the Union and its many readers.

FARM AND GARDEN

SELECTING BROOD SOWS.

The selection of brood sows is a very difficult matter, not only to the amateur hog raiser, but also to the most experienced judges. Even the most proficient connoisseurs of hogs are very often disappointed in their choice. A sow that seems externally perfect in shape, form and size may prove to be barren or otherwise deficient.

Brood sows should not be chosen until they are about five or six months old, as it takes them about that time to round out in figures, thus enabling you to choose more satisfactorily. Good large sows should be chosen. They should be not only large but proportionately as long. They should have a good, blocky form— just as broad across the belly as across the back. There is an old, old verse which brings the truth out about as good as anything I can say:

"A broad belly and broad back Brings the dollars ev'ry whack."

They should have a goodly number of well developed teats, for in most cases this not only indicates a good milker, but also a tendency to be prolific.

A young sow or gilt should not be bred until the last of December or the first of January, as they seem to do better and farrow about the first of May when the weather is warm and there is green vegetation to be had. Old sows may be bred any time from the middle to the last of November with perfect safety if a good shelter is provided for them.

Swine should have good shelter. This is especially true of the brood sows. How many of us just merely throw a few old brush across a corner of the pen and pile a lot of old hay upon it? And then expect our sows, with such a shelter, to successfully farrow and raise from eight to twelve fine pigs twice a year.

Not only is the shelter of our swine usually insufficient, but our bedding is often very scarce. Bedding is something that a brood sow has positively got to have—especially in cold weather. We can't expect our sows to be successful with her offspring unless they have a warm place to stay. When your sows are about to farrow they should be given a good bed of straw or hay, and let me add don't be stingy with your straw—enough don't cost you a little of pigs.

The feed of brood sows should never be limited entirely to one kind of grain, and especially is this true if you are feeding corn. Corn produces only fat, and a sow fed solely upon it lacks the stamina and strength and does not beget as vigorous pigs as one fed upon mixed feed. The ration should be so balanced as not to get the sow too fat and at the same time not allow her to become thin. Corn, oats and wheat make a very good ration, and this occasionally mixed with vegetables, such as artichokes, beets, turnips, etc., will usually bring a sow to the farrowing time in good shape when good judgment is exercised in feeding it.

I will say one more thing in reference to farrowing: Always keep your eye on your brood sow, especially about farrowing time. Then is when they need your attention, and then is when your attention is most richly repaid.—E. L. T. in Indiana Farmer.

FERTILITY OF EGGS.

The question of fertility should be of more importance than how to get eggs, especially at this time of the year. There are few farmers that separate the breeding stock from the flock, but it is certainly best to do so if one is desirous of good results. It is now time to select the fowls which are expect to furnish eggs for the early hatches. It should not be treated as a light matter for upon this point much of your success may depend. If you have fowls that have been sick or drooping during the fall and winter do not use them for it would certainly have a bad effect, even if they are well, seemingly. After the stock is selected, see to it that they are well fed and cared for. Starved stock never did much good in any section, we cannot expect strong, healthy chicks from a flock of this kind. Do not neglect to feed some fish in lime for these help to make the shell and furnish material in the egg to make the bones of the little down birds. Meat and the various grains will supply flesh. Keep the drinking vessels well filled with water, which is the necessity for a large per cent of the egg is made up of water.

Provide nest boxes with clean straw; change the contents often. It is said a nest that is clean and properly made is an inducement to laying hens and not only that but dirty eggs are spoiled by being left in the nest and allowed to chill during cold weather; they should be gathered at least three times a day. Keep in an even temperature until ready to set them, which time should not exceed four or five days. Chicks are seldom hatched earlier than March with hens, and from this time on during the entire summer one may arrange to have hatches to come off even as late as August or September. The late hatched chicks made splendid frys.—M. D. H. in Indiana Farmer.

AT SEED-BUYING TIME

It is estimated that if the corn crop of the country could be increased ten per cent it would add to the production of wealth in the United States over seventy millions of dollars. That the corn crop can be increased this small per cent is well known, for it requires only the selection of the best seed and the best methods of cultivation to do it. The trouble is, corn is too easily grown and the crop is usually large enough so that there are enough kernels left in the crib for seed. So the average farmer argues, "why should I pay out good money for seed corn when there is more than I need in my own crib?" He forgets that the seed corn in his cribs may be the kernels dropped from nubbins and if so they will produce nubbins.

The tendency to pay out as little as possible for seeds is wrong. It is safe to say that in a normal season one would make more clean cash from crops grown from the best seed sold regardless of price than from double the quantity of what may be called cheap seeds. If you don't believe in the value of the best seeds, test them in a small way. Take, for example, a few seed tubers from the potato pile in the cellar, then buy from some reputable seedsman the same quantity of the same variety, cut the seed in the same way, plant at the same time and give the same care and cultivation. At harvest time compare results and if you do not find the argument in favor of high-class seed a solid one we'll take it all back.—Indianapolis News.

KEEPING MILK RECORDS.

With feeding grains very high in price one is tempted to feed more roughage and less grain and unless there is a decided falling off in the quantity of milk received is apt to deceive himself with the idea that he is saving money. It is a good plan to try different combinations or rations and note results. To try them, without keeping a record of the milk, at least by weight, is of little use. Take a ration of, say, gluten feed, wheat bran and oil meal. Try these in varying proportions of each, keeping the record carefully and thus determine which is the most profitable. The same plan may be readily carried out with any other combinations of grains.

Then, too, experiment with the roughage as with the grains and see what difference, if any, is in the results when the corn stover is cut or crushed before feeding. Also note the difference which may result from giving rather warm water. There is more in obtaining a balanced ration than simply feeding a combination which some one says is good. It may be good for his herd, but, by experimenting you may be able to hit on a combination which will be better for your cows and, perhaps, at less cost.—Indianapolis News.

SOWING FERTILIZERS ON GRASS LAND.

It should be done early in the season, while there is plenty of moisture in the soil to render the materials soluble and of use as plant food. The fertilizers best adapted to grass seem to do better on land that is a little moist rather than on dry ground.

Apply while there is a good seeding of grass or sward, otherwise the land should be plowed, devoted to other crops and again reseeded. With these conditions a small amount applied each spring will produce very satisfactory returns.

Several years since the writer selected a field of several acres, second or third year from seeding, with a good sward, and sowed thereon only one hundred pounds of a standard fertilizer to the acre.

It was a hard-pan soil and a little moist. There was a large crop of hay, estimated at one-half a ton extra for the hundred pounds of fertilizer.

The next spring the same amount was again sown with like results, and this practice was continued for four years, when it became necessary to plow, devote to other crops and seed again to grass. The experience seemed remarkable, and convinced the writer that it is often better to apply a small amount of available fertilizer of any kind every year rather than much more all at one time.—E. R. Towle in Massachusetts Ploughman.

PERPETUITY POST PAINT.

Take boiled linseed oil, and mix it with charcoal dust until the mixture has the consistency of ordinary paint. Give to the posts, which should be well dried, two coats of the mixture before setting them, and no farmer will live long enough to see the same posts rotten. The posts, which may be of the softest wood, will cost less than three cents each to prepare, and will also be a great saving in the cost of building fences.—R. M. Field.

In March over $31,000,000 worth of property went up in smoke in the United States. This was irrespective of the tobacco burned.

PUERTO BELLO, BELOW COLON, ON THE PANAMA CANAL.

PANAMA CANAL PROGRESS.

Chief Engineer Wallace Says Sanitary Work Is Now Showing Positive Results.

Mr. John F. Wallace, chief engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, said recently that there are now practically five thousand men engaged under his direction on the engineering and construction work of the canal. The work of installing an American plant at Culebra is going forward as fast as the machinery and supplies can be obtained on the isthmus. When Mr. Wallace left there were six American steam shovels at work in the Culebra excavation, and arrangements had been made to install additional machines at the rate of two a month.

The health of the young Americans on the isthmus is particularly good, and the employes from the United States have been remarkably free from fever.

The Sanitary Department is beginning to show very positive results. The water supply for the city of Panama will be available by July 1. Water supply systems also are being installed at various points along the line of the canal work. Several large hotels for the accommodation of the Americans are nearly completed, and Mr. Wallace states that it will be only a matter of a few months now before life on the isthmus will have practically all the comforts and conveniences that are obtainable here on a large work of this character.

In answer to a question as to the necessity of an immediate decision by the commission on a plan of construction, Mr. Wallace said that it would require about two years to manufacture and install the necessary machinery to complete the excavation for a canal at a sixty-foot level—work which would be necessary in any event. During this period ample time will be afforded for investigation and thorough analysis of all the elements or factors that go to make up the problem as a whole.

In the meantime the excavation of the central Culebra cut, which is the controlling element, both as to time and cost, will be pushed vigorously with the aid of modern American excavating machinery. The investigations being conducted include diamond drill work along the entire line of the canal, the character of the formation being revealed in this manner to a depth of forty feet below the surface. These borings will give absolute information as to the character of the material to be encountered in the canal work. In addition, shafts are being sunk at certain points to reveal more fully the character of the formation.

SEAL FOR TELEPHONE TRANS.

The invention shown in the accompanying cut relates to certain new and useful improvements in telephone attachments, the primary object of which is to provide means adapted to be attached to a telephone receiver for engagements with the telephone transmitter whereby the latter may be closed or sealed against sound until the device is detached from the transmitter.

It is frequently desired by those using the telephone to converse with others in the office relative to certain matters, and oftentimes it is not desired to have the person at the other end of the line overhear the conversation carried on in the office. Under these conditions the person speaking does not desire to return the receiver to its hook, for the reason that the line would then be cut off. Neither is it desirable to allow the receiver to hang dependent from its wires, and in case it is desired to close the transmitter it must be done by holding the hand over the same or by some like inconvenient means.

It is the purpose of this invention to overcome these defects and provide means for closing the transmitter and also supporting the receiver while it is detached from the hook.

This is brought about by the use of a device somewhat hood-shaped, which is secured to the receiver, and when it is desired to seal the transmitter against sound the hood referred to is placed over the mouth of the transmitter, and thus is afforded a convenient resting place for the receiver on such occasions as is alluded to above.

ONE OF THE CAMPS ALONG THE PANAMA CANAL ROUTE.

The Hedgehog's Frown.

A hedgehog curls itself up by a frown—that is, by muscles like those which produce a frown—and it frowns severely or gently according to circumstances. If it is poked hard, it "sighs" itself tighter. If really hurt, it frowns into a tight ball. The prickles can be erected in a measure. Though as they point all ways this is not needed. They are as sharp as needles. We have only known one dog, a large black and white setter, which would deliberately bite a hedgehog till it killed it. But this dog was quite mad, and shared some of the anaesthesia common to certain lunatics.—London Spectator.

Two Miles of Dead Fish in Minnesota Lake

Dead fish line the shores of Minnesota Lake and appeals to the State Health Department to have the nuisance removed have been made. The fish weigh from one to eight pounds and are banked up for more than two miles.

They were smothered. The residents here estimate the money value of the fish at $3000 had they found a market last fall. These fish are mostly carp and suckers.—Mapleton correspondence St. Paul Dispatch.

Bluff at Lynching That Worked.

Twenty-two masked and armed men assembled yesterday at Bullion Gulch, four miles west of Redding, took Steve Shumake, a half-breed Indian, and a man known as "Bill" from their abode, marched them to a nearby tree and proceeded to carry out plans to lynch them for various thefts they are alleged to have committed.

When the rope was ready Shumake asked for leave to go away and was granted half an hour's time. He burned his cabin and departed. The other man was given time to close his business affairs before leaving.—Redding correspondence Scranton Bee.

Rural Entertainment.

The through train had stopped at the little station for water.

"What do you people do to amuse yourselves here?" asked the passenger with the upturned moustache and the bored look, who had stuck his head out through a car window.

"Well, we git a lot o' fun comin' to the deepo an' lookin' at the queer critters that goes through yere on the k'yars," replied the native who was lounging on the station platform.—Chicago Tribune

FRUIT BISCUITS.

Mix half a cupful of butter into four cupfuls of bread dough, also a half cupful of sugar, a third of a cupful of chopped citron, the same of figs and candied cherries; add four well beaten eggs. Then knead thoroughly and set to rise. When light, make into biscuit form, brush with the white of an egg, dust with sugar and set again to rise. Then bake in a moderate oven.

PINEAPPLE CREAM PIE.

Cream one-half cupful of butter and one cupful of sugar; add the yolks of two eggs beaten and mixed with one-half cupful of milk and one cupful of freshly grated pineapple. Turn into a pie pan lined with paste and bake in a moderately hot oven. Beat the whites of two eggs to a foam, add two tablespoonfuls of sifted powdered sugar gradually, then beat until very stiff, spread roughly over the pie when cool, return to the oven and brown.

ALMOND WAFERS.

Cream one-half cupful butter; add slowly one cupful powdered sugar, one-half cupful milk, drop by drop; then add one and seven-eighths cupfuls bread flour, one-half teaspoonful extract of almond; spread very thin on the bottom of a dripping pan inverted and buttered; mark in squares; sprinkle with almonds blanched and chopped rather fine and bake in a moderate oven about five minutes; roll in tubular or conucopia shape while warm; it is better to set the pan on the back of the range while rolling the wafers, as they become brittle very quickly.

CREAMED EGGS.

Pour into a saucepan half a pint of milk, three tablespoonsfuls of butter, a saltspoon of salt, a little celery salt and a dash of pepper; thicken with a little flour made smooth in milk, and allow it to boil up once. Have prepared five or six eggs that have been hard boiled, crumble one of them into the mixture, arrange the others in thick slices in the center of a hot platter, turn the cream over them and garnish with three-cornered pieces of toast and an occasional sprig of parsley. Serve very hot.

PEACH-RICE.

This is a delicious way in which to dispose of a little extra cooked rice: Halve and pare nice large peaches, or use firm canned ones. In the former case, steam the peaches for fifteen minutes. Lay them on a dish with the cup side up and fill with rice, which is prepared as follows: Beat into it a little lemon juice and sugar to suit the taste. A few seeded raisins, that have been steamed or soaked in boiling water for a few minutes, garnish the rice. Serve warm or cold with cream or a nice sauce.—The Epitomist.

TUTTI-FRUTTI CAKE.

Cream two-thirds of a cupful of butter; add gradually two cupfuls of sugar, then the yolks of three eggs; when well mixed add three cupfuls of flour, alternating with one cupful of milk; then add the whites of eggs, beaten stiff; four level teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and one teaspoonful of vanilla extract; bake in greased jelly cake pans; put over the fire one cupful of granulated sugar, half a cupful of water; let boil to the head; pour it slowly over the whites of two eggs, beating while pouring, and beat until cold; add one teaspoonful each of chopped citron, candied cherries, pineapple, seeded raisins, English walnut, blanched almonds and one teaspoonful of vanilla; put between layers and over the top.

USEFUL HINTS.

In roasting pork sour apples are sometimes baked with the meat like potatoes. They should be placed on a wire rack to keep them out of the fat. The apples are served with the roast and take the place of apple sauce.

To keep a spoon in position when desirous of dropping medicine into it, and requiring both hands to hold the bottle and cork; place the handle between the leaves of a closed book lying upon a table.

Silver spoons and forks which are in daily use may be kept bright by leaving them once a week in strong borax water for several hours. The water should be nearly boiling when the silver is put into it.

Lime water will sweeten jars and jugs which soap and water fail to cleanse. It is admirable for cleansing milk vessels and nursing bottles.

With boiled salmon, cream sauce plain boiled rice is very good. Many prefer it to potato. There really is no reason why any vegetable should be served with the fish course. Its sauce is quite sufficient. Still the average taste demands a scrap of potato, or sometimes with sole, a bit of creamed spinach.

A good cement for mending glass is made by boiling isinglass in spirits of wine.

Try a few drops of spirits of turpentine on a cube of loaf sugar for hacking cough.

Tea leaves moistened with vinegar will remove the discoloration in glass caused by flowers.

A half-hour's sleep after dinner is, to many women, worth two hours' sleep in the morning.

Eskimo Courtesies.

A Washington woman was chattering to Commander Peary, the Arctic explorer, relative to the Eskimos, and asked if they had a distinct language. Mr. Peary replied in the affirmative, whereupon the butterfly said: "Do give me an idea of how the language sounds. For instance, how would an Eskimo say 'good morning?'" "He wouldn't say it,' gravely responded the explorer. "Dear me!" said the woman. "Are there, then, no social amenities among the Eskimos?" "On the contrary," said Peary, "they are a comparatively polite people; but as in the country where they abide they would have occasion to use the expression only once a year they have no words equivalent to it."

Difference of a Letter.

After the state had introduced most of its testimony in the case against C. F. Taylor, of Chicago, on trial at Nacodoches, Tex., charged with swindling, the court sustained a motion to quash the indictment because the typewriter had written "any" where the statutes prescribed "and." Taylor was remanded to await further action by the grand jury.

Volcano Active Since 1728.

Mount Sangay is the most active volcano in the world. It is situated in Ecuador, is 17,120 feet in height and has been in constant activity since 1728. The sounds of its eruptions are sometimes heard in Quito, 150 miles distant, and 267 reports were once counted in one hour.

Schiller's Father's Wish.

WHAT THE COWBOY REALLY DOES OUT WEST

His Presence Ever Required on the Ranch, For There Are Unseen Dangers to Be Guarded Against.

The actual work with the cattle performed by the cowboy might not require over half his time. But slight as were the days of his recreation, his presence was ever required on the ranch, for there was the unseen to be guarded against. Some of his work was done under circumstances requiring unlimited patience, and then again with a rush where all the comforts of life were left behind. In the Cherokee Strip, now part of Oklahoma, I have seen a prairie fire break out from the reflection of the sun on a tin can, throwing its signal column of black smoke into the sky, instantly summoning every man within fifty miles. Or it might occur at night, from different causes, with its brilliant horizon, the flames leaping upward, visible at the distance of twenty miles, while every breeze was saturated with the smell of burning grass. Under such circumstances horseflesh was never spared in reaching the actual scene. The first men to arrive would begin back or counter firing, as it was called, much the same as city firemen blow up blocks in the pathway of a conflagration, taking advantage of every arroyo or dry wash, and with saddle blankets beating out their own fire on the leeward before it could gain headway. If a wide enough belt could be thus burned, in advance of the main conflagration, it might check the fire, or, jumping the emergency guard, break out anew on its course. Within two or three hours after a prairie fire had thus started, there might arrive fifty to 100 men. Being plainsmen as well as cowboys, they knew what to do. Frequently several light cow brutes were killed, beheaded, and split down the spine, leaving only the hide to hold the body together. The carcass of the animal was then turned flesh down, ropes were fastened from a fore and hind foot to pommels of saddles, and, riding astride the burning grass, the body was dragged over the fire, virtually rubbing it out. Other men followed on horseback to beat out any remaining flames and relieve the mounts by pulling on the ropes. This process could only be applied on the flanks of the main conflagration, and on the leeward of all counter firing, as no one dared dispute the sway of the fiery monster, except well in its advance. Such a fire might last three hours or three days, at the termination of which the men would ride for the nearest camp for rest and refreshment. —Andrew Adams, in the Pilgrim.

War and Swindling.

The political evils of war are almost as weighty as the moral. Probably no Government in modern times has been able to carry on a serious contest that has not been attended with extravagance and dishonesty. At any rate, the United States has never been able to do so. From the time that the soldiers suffered needlessly at Valley Forge on account of inefficient supply service and dishonest contractors, down to the purchase of army transports and "embalmed" beef in 1898, profusion and peculation have invariably attended our military operations. This evil, moreover, usually outlasts a war, because loose and irregular methods of conducting public business are not speedily reformed. After the Civil War Washington was still infested by swindling contractors who found not a few choice pickings, and the slimy trail of the corruptionist led up to the doors of Congress and some of the executive departments.—Charles J. Bullock, in the Atlantic.

Criminal Treatment of Pigeons.

Instances are not lacking where pigeons, with all their lightning change developments, have been found too slow for the purposes of the type desired, and the fancier has altered nature, says a writer in Country Life in America. There have been occasions when the beak of the Almond short-faced tumbler and the lower mandible of the Turbit were thumbed back and pulled down to give a diminished beak and the overhang of the brow. The bird is then voiceless and cannot express pain. And Dragons, whose glory is the regular wattling of the beak and the round and even cere of the eye, are sometimes massaged, when the skin sprouts, the budding flesh being worked back into the smooth surface.

Fixing Railroad Rates.

Making railroad rates is like playing a game of checkers or chess. Communities to be benefited, producers, manufacturers or shippers to be aided represent the pieces used. Every possible move is studied for its effect on the general result by skilled traffic managers. A false move in the making of freight rates may mean the ruin of a city, of a great manufacturing interest, of an agricultural community. Railroads strive to build up all these so that each may have an equal chance in the sharp competition of business. So sensitive to this rivalry are the railroads that in order to build up business along their lines they frequently allow the shipper to practically dictate rates. Rate making has been a matter of development; of mutual concessions for mutual benefit. That is why the railroads of the United States have voluntarily made freight rates so much lower in this country than they are on the government-owned and operated railways of Europe and Australia that they are now the lowest transportation rates in the world.

MOTHERHOOD

Actual Sterility in Women Is Very Rare—Healthy Mothers and Children Make Happy Homes.

Many women long for a child to bless their homes, but because of some debility or displacement of the female organs they are barren.

Preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound more successfully than by any other medicine, because it gives tone and strength to the entire female organism, curing all displacements, ulceration and inflammation.

A woman who is in good physical condition transmits to her children the blessings of a good constitution. Is not that an incentive to prepare for a healthy maternity?

If expectant mothers would fortify themselves with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which for thirty years has sustained thousands of women in this condition, there would be a great decrease in miscarriages, in suffering, and in disappointments at birth.

The following letters to Mrs. Pinkham demonstrate the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in such cases.

Mrs. L. C. Glover, Vice-President of Milwaukee Business Woman's Association, of 614 Grove Street, Milwaukee, Wis., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"I was married for several years and no children blessed our home. The doctor said I had a complication of female troubles and I could not have any children unless I could be cured. For months I took his medicines, trying in vain for a cure, but at last my husband became disgusted and suggested that I try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; this I did, and I improved steadily in health, and in less than two years a beautiful child came to bless our home. Now we have something to live for, and all the credit is due to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Mrs. Mae P. Wharry, Secretary of the North Shore Oratorical Society, The Norman, Milwaukee, Wis., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"I was married for five years and gave birth to two premature children. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me, and I am so glad I took it, for it changed me from a weak, nervous woman to a strong, happy and healthy one within seven months. Within two years a lovely little girl was born, which is the pride and joy of our household. Every day I bless Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for the light, health and happiness it brought to our home."

If any woman thinks she is sterile, or has doubts about her ability to carry a child to a mature birth let her write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., whose advice is free to all expectant or would-be mothers. She has helped thousands of women through this anxious period.

Women suffering with irregular or painful menstruation, leucorrhœa, displacement, ulceration or inflammation of the womb, that bearing down feeling or ovarian trouble, backache, bloating or nervous prostration, should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound holds the record for the greatest number of actual cures of woman's ills, and accept no substitute.

Many Women Have Been Benefited by Mrs. Pinkham's Advice and Medicine.

Truths that Strike Home

Your grocer is honest and—if he cares to do so—can tell you that he knows very little about the bulk coffee he sells you. How can he know, where it originally came from, how it was blended—or with what—or when roasted? If you buy your coffee loose by the pound, how can you expect purity and uniform quality?

LION COFFEE, the LEADER OF ALL PACKAGE COFFEES, is of necessity uniform in quality, strength and flavor. For OVER A QUARTER OF A CENTURY, LION COFFEE has been the standard coffee in millions of homes.

LION COFFEE is carefully packed at our factories, and until opened in your home, has no chance of being adulterated, or of coming in contact with dust, dirt, germs, or unclean hands.

In each package of LION COFFEE you get one full pound of Pure Coffee. Insist upon getting the genuine. (Lion head on every package.)

THE CHICAGO STRIKE

Among the Teamsters May End. It has Received Three Heavy Blows.

TO HOLD MEETING TO DECIDE.

Meeting of Teamsters' Joint Council To Be Held to Decide About the Strike.

Chicago, Ill.—Three severe blows were dealt to the cause of the striking teamsters Friday night, and as a result the governing body of the organization, the Teamsters' Joint Council, will meet to decide whether or not the strike shall be called off.

The decision to call this meeting of the council followed a two hours' session between the officials of the teamsters' union and the Teamowners' Association. The members of the latter body have all through the present strike been favorable to teamsters rather than to the employers' association. However, the teamowners bluntly informed the teamsters that their cause was lost, and that the best thing they could do was to call off the strike; and do it at once.

Second Blow.

The second blow came also from the Teamowners' association, when the resignation of John C. Driscoll, its secretary, was tendered, and adopted. Secretary Driscoll has been an official of the Teamowners' Association since its inception several years ago, and during the present strike has been a potent factor on the side of the teamsters.

The third blow was adopted at the meeting of the Illinois Manufacturers' association which is made up of business men from all parts of the state. At a secret meeting held at the Auditorium hotel, the members of the association unanimously decided that they would uphold the cause of the Employers' association, which has been conducting the fight against the striking teamsters.

Negro Attacked.

Walter St. Clair, colored, employed by Armour & Co., at the stock yards, was attacked by a crowd of strike sympathizers at Twenty-seventh and Canal streets. St. Clair was apparently suspected of being a strike breaker, employed by the Peabody Coal Co. He was beaten with clubs, black jacks and other weapons. Two deputy sheriffs rescued him and escorted him to the stables of the Peabody company at Twenty-sixth and Canal streets, where his wounds were dressed. He was sent home in an ambulance.

A total of 1900 wagons were scheduled to be moved Friday by non-union teamsters under police protection. This is the largest number of wagons moved since the teamsters' strike began, the excess over the records of the previous days being 150 wagons. To accomplish the task 2,100 policemen were detailed to guard the wagons and were assisted by an almost equal number of deputy sheriffs.

Children Strike.

Spread of sympathetic strikes among public school children received a new impetus today. Pupils of the Carter H. Harrison school at Twenty-third street and Wentworth avenue went on strike when wagons of the Peabody Coal Co. arrived at the building to deliver coal. The Peabody company is a member of the Employers' association and has been active in delivering with non-union teamsters to firms antagonized by the strikers. Police were still on guard Friday at the Hendricks public school, where a strike similar to that at the Carter Harrison school had not entirely subsided.

Much Trouble.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Within the past forty-eight hours there have been more fatalities in serious accidents and in fights here than ever before in the history of Chattanooga. The city has a bloodier record than any similar time since the close of the civil war. There are now no less than eight persons at Erlanger hospital, one of whom is already dead, while four others are probably fatally injured. Following is the list:

Fred Gammons, killed in fight at glass works.

William Meacham, seriously wounded in same fight.

Fred Meacham, wounded in head; same fight; may die.

John Sherman, fatally cut while acting as peacemaker between Doc Shelton and James Noodles, who are both seriously cut.

Percy Russell, grazed by train running fifty miles an hour, and one side badly injured; may recover.

Greer Riley, half of head crushed in by piledriver; will die.

Jews Are Alarmed.

Alexandrovsk, Government of Ekaterinoslav.—This city is disturbed by rumors of approaching Jew-baiting in consequence of which rich Jews are leaving the city. Permission has been given the municipality to organize militia to preserve order.

Sentenced to Be Hanged.

Hobart, Okla.—R. A. Wright, convicted of the murder of William Slatterly, was sentenced Saturday to be hanged July 7th.

PROTESTING AGAINST RATE REDUCTION.

Atlanta, Ga.—The recent proposition of J. Pope Brown, chairman of the Georgia railroad commission, to reduce the passenger rate in Georgia from three to two cents per mile was protested against by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Order of Railway Conductors and unions of the blacksmiths, machinists and telegraphers, boilermakers, railway trainmen, carpenters and joiners, clerks and car men. These organizations employed an attorney especially to represent them, who urged that such a reduction would work against the prosperity of the state and lead to a reduction in the number of railroad employes as well as of their wages. The Travelers' Protective Association also protested that a reduction as proposed would result in fewer trains and poorer service.—Special Dispatch to the New York News Bureau.

Negro is Lynched by Northern Mob.

Cairo, Ill.—Tom Witherspoon, a negro, was taken from officers at Belmont, Mo., fifteen miles below Cairo, Friday evening by a mob of several hundred persons and hanged in the public square to a large swing. Friday morning a negro, said to be Witherspoon, who only recently returned from the penitentiary, went to the home of Fred Hess, three miles below Belmont, and at the point of a rifle demanded $600. Hess, who is a member of the Missouri legislature, told the negro that he did not have that much money in the house. The negro ordered him to go to Belmont and get the money. He compelled Hess to hitch up a horse and buggy, and ordered him to get in with his wife and child.

The negro then saddled another horse, and mounting told Hess to drive toward Belmont, and when near the place the negro forced Mrs. Hess and child to get out of the buggy and enter a deserted shanty. The negro then told Hess to drive to Belmont and to send the money back by a negro preacher inside of an hour or he would kill his wife and child.

Hess hurried to Belmont and got the money and sent it back with a negro preacher. The desperado immediately mounted a horse and rode up the Iron Mountain railroad tracks. A posse was organized at once by Belmont and Columbus citizens, and a small party followed the negro on a switch engine and discovered that he took refuge in the swamps around First Lake. He was captured and taken to Belmont by the officers. A mob of several hundred persons had formed in Belmont, and they immediately took charge of the negro, and despite his begging and pleadings, they rushed him into the public square and secured a rope from a large swing and strung the negro up as the guilty man.

A New Court House.

Prattville, Ala.—The board of revenue has signed contracts with M. T. Leuman & Co., of Louisville, Ky., for the building of the new court house, and with Dobson & Bynum, of Montgomery, Ala., for the jail. It is understood work on each of these buildings will be begun at once. On account of the work necessary on the court house, it is likely the contractors will be one year in building it.

The Planters' Warehouse Company was organized here a few days ago and will erect a warehouse with a capacity of six or eight thousand bales of cotton. It is understood this company will buy and sell cotton and fertilizers and farmers' supplies generally. It will be ready for the fall business.

The Alabama Central railway, between Booth and Autaugaville, in this county, will put on a regular schedule for passengers in about six days. At present only freight trains are being run. When the regular schedule is put on, it is understood the trains will run through to Montgomery.

Paris Is Acquitted.

Birmingham, Ala.—Coroner W. D. Paris has been acquitted on a charge of embezzlement brought by Joseph Foggiana, one of the administrators of an Italian who met his death in the Virginia mine in the awful explosion of February 20.

A warrant was sworn out against the coroner charging him with embezzling $74 which amount was taken from the pockets of one of the victims of the mine explosion. The coroner denied the allegation, claiming that no claim had been made officially for the money.

President Diaz Signs Treaty.

Mexico City.—President Diaz has signed and promulgated a treaty or convention providing for the arbitration of pecuniary claims of citizens of any of the signatory powers. The convention was one of the results of the Pan-American conference. This convention has now been signed by the United States, Mexico, Guatemala, Salvador, Honduras and Peru.

New Texas Gusher.

Beaumont, Tex.—A new thousand barrel gusher was brought in at Dayton, Tex., by the Paraffine Company. This opens a new field. Dayton is fifty-one miles west of Beaumont on the Humble-Sour Lake pipe line of the J. M. Guffy Company.

Only passenger trains are leaving Warsaw and these are crowded with the engineering departments, all the engine drivers, firemen and porters having quit work.

STATE HAPPENINGS

Of General and Local Interest as They Occur.

Enjoined From Tearing Up Track.

Opelika, Ala.—The tearing up of the LaFayette railway track was stopped by injunction issued in the name of the state of Alabama restraining G. E. McGehee, president and general manager, and all other employes from dismanteling the road. The work of wrecking the track began about a week ago, and nearly four miles of track had been torn up near the LaFayette end and the rails and ties hauled to Opelika. When the injunction was served this afternoon the gang of workmen was brought to this city.

It is alleged here that the dismantling of the road known as the Merchants' line, is due to a deal with the Central railway, which parallels it. It was because of the high freight rates on the Central that the farmers and merchants built the Merchants' line nine years ago to secure better rates. Patrons of the road declare that the track must be relaid and the road operated under the terms of the charter. It is evident that a big legal fight is on.

Severe Storm.

Gadsden, Ala.—There was a severe storm just below Gadsden Thursday afternoon at the Elliott fruit farm, which assumed the proportions of a small cyclone and did considerable damage in the way of blowing down fine shade trees. The wind blew down twenty-six large oak trees around the lake and spring, eight falling in the lake. The rainfall assumed the proportions of a waterspout and did considerable damage. No damage was done to the fruit trees. Just below the Elliott farm three clouds met and seemed to fight a battle in the sky, the result being a waterspout, which tore up the earth considerably. No houses were wrecked nor any one injured.

Four-Legged Chicken.

Troy, Ala.—Mr. Mobley, who lives nine miles from Troy, brought quite a curiosity in the way of a chicken to town several days ago. The biddie, which is only about two weeks old now, has four legs, the two hind legs being almost as perfectly developed as the two natural ones. Mr. Mobley presented the biddie to Jim Hyman, who tried to induce some of his hens to adopt it, but they were all afraid of it. Mr. Hyman's mother keeps it in a large basket and turns it out in the yard several times a day. It is as healthy and lively as any chicken Mr. Hyman has, and he thinks he will succeed in raising it.

Improving Coal Mines.

Birmingham, Ala.—The Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company has equipped Mine No. 4, near Ensley, with an electrical haulage, one of the best in the South. Quite a large sum of money was expended in equipping the mine and it is expected that the output will be increased more than double with the new system. Mine No. 3 at Ensley was installed with an electrical haulage system last year, and the output is much greater than under the old system. Mine No. 5 will be similarly equipped next.

Postoffice Appointments.

Washington, D. C.—Rural free delivery route No. 1 ordered established June 15 at Murry Cross, Etowah county, serving 588 people and 140 houses.

Rural carriers appointed: Brewton, route 1, Walter A. Tippin carrier, Hillary H. Tippin substitute; Seale, route 1, John C. Vann carrier, Cary Vann substitute.

Hessie M. Lee appointed postmaster at Drane, Lowndes county, vice Flora Neely, resigned.

Talladega, Ala.—R. S. West, a local contractor, was awarded the contract for improving and enlarging the Talladega county court house. The contract price is $13,500, and is to be completed by October 1st. The Michael Supply Company, another local concern, secured the plumbing and heating contract for $1,298.

Time Table Arranged.

Montgomery, Ala.—T. H. Mizell, trainmaster of the Mobile and Montgomery division of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, went down to Bay Minette and arranged the time table for the Bay Minette and Fort Morgan branch of the Louisville and Nashville.

There will be one first-class mixed train each way daily between Bay Minette and Foley, the terminal of the line.

Seven Killed in Mine.

Butte, Mont.—Seven men were killed and one injured, probably fatally, in an explosion in the Cora mine, one of the Heinze properties, Friday.

Four Were Killed.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Four men were killed, one was fatally injured and two more were more or less seriously burned today by the collapse of an immense gas holder at the Point Breeze works of the United Gas Improvement company, in the southern part of the city.

British thieves steal $40,000,000 worth of property every year.

Good Prospects for Electric Line.

Selma, Ala.—The prospects for the building of the electric line between Selma and Marion appear very bright today. The committee on subscriptions for Selma have about concluded their labors, and at the meeting which has been called for Monday night next will report having secured about $20,000 from Selma and Dallas county. Marion has already raised about $16,000 for Marion and Perry county, and it is thought that this sum will be sufficient to secure the issuance of bonds with which to build the road.

There is said to be just one possible hitch in the matter and that will likely be straightened out. This is that the subscriptions have been made to stock, while it is possible that the builders of the road will want it as a bonus. In either event it is thought that the building of the line is practically a certainty; and that before many months work on laying the track will commence.

Rains Cause Damage.

Roanoke, Va.—Passengers arriving here at midnight on a belated train from southwest Virginia bring news of great damage done by wind storms and cloudbursts along the Norfolk and Western railroads, between Roanoke and Bluefields. At the latter place six dwelling houses are reported blown down and completely demolished, all their occpants escaping injury. Between Vickers and Christiansburg, Va., more than three miles of the Norfolk and Western triple tracks have been washed away by a wall of water.

Laying Gas Mains.

Florence, Ala.—The Northern Alabama Gas Company has established a wonderful reputation for push and enterprise this spring. Eighteen miles of gas mains having been laid in the past few months. Since their mains reached Tuscumbia they have made connections with half the business houses in the town and have orders for many more. There are yet three miles of mains to be laid. The plant of the company which is in Florence is supplying gas in abundance for the use of the three towns.

Telephone Lineman Drowns.

Decatur, Ala.—Paul Becknor, of Indiana, a lineman for the Morgan County Telephone Company, was drowned in Flint river near Hartselle, fourteen miles south of here, while bathing. His body has not yet been recovered.

Mr. Sherwood, local manager of the company, formerly of Ohio, is with the party searching for the body. Becknor was working on a long distance line which the company was constructing to Birmingham.

Lumber Company Assigns.

Bessemer, Ala.—The Krebs Manufacturing Company of this place, which is principally owned and controlled by M. J. Boots, posted a general deed of assignment to creditors Friday. The assets are given at $19,000 and the liabilities about the same amount. The principal creditors are W. H. Lewis, Bessemer Trust and Banking Company and Martin Bros., representing an indebtedness of about $12,000. Mr. Boots stands high in Bessemer. He was for some time paymaster for the United States Cast Iron and Pipe Company, of this place.

A Small Wreck.

Selma, Ala.—A small wreck occurred on the Meridian branch of the Southern Friday at Marshall Platform, near Gallion. Five coal cars were ditched which blocked the road for several hours and necessitated the transfer of passengers.

The five cars that were ditched were part of an extra freight train going to Meridian and the cause of the wreck is assigned to spreading of the rails. No one was hurt in the wreck except the conductor, who had one of his fingers slightly mashed.

Ensley, Ala.—Frank McDonald, aged 25 years, and employed as a wire puller at the rod mill, was fatally injured Wednesday night at 10 o'clock, dying Thursday morning at 3 o'clock. Mr. McDonald was struck by a piece of flying billet. His shoulder was knocked out of place and he was injured internally.

After Six Days Boys Is Found.

Marion, Ala.—The body of Cadet Harris, of the Marion Military Institute, who was drowned Monday, was recovered at daylight Friday morning within a hundred yards from where it went down. The river had been dredged and guarded for over six miles day and night since the accident by the students and a large number of citizens, who volunteered their services.

Paul Jones' Remains.

Washington, D. C.—President Roosevelt has approved the recommendation of Secretary Morton that the body of John Paul Jones be buried at Annapolis, Md.

London, Eng.—Yi Hang Fung, Korean charge d'affaires, committed suicide at the Korean legation Friday morning. No cause is known for his action.

Norfolk, Va.—Lieutenant Commander Truxtun, U. S. N., died Friday night at the residence of his mother, Mr. Truxtun was retired some months ago on account of failing health. He was a son of the late Commodore William Truxtun.

Whitecapping Denounced.

Jackson, Miss.—Judge Niles, of the federal court, spent the entire day in hearing arguments on the demurrers submitted by the attorneys for the alleged whitecappers of Franklin county to the indictments against them and Friday continued the cases until next term of court. The indictments were demurred to on the ground that they did not state any specific crime, that they did not charge that the homesteader interfered with was competent to make a homestead entry. All these points were overruled, the judge holding that the indictments were valid. Judge Niles, in granting a continuance to the accused, delivered himself of a powerful denunciation of whitecapping. In speaking of whitecappers, he said, among other things:

"They have forgotten that all men are equal before the law, and by this I do not mean social equality. God never intended social equality, and there is no law that can make all men socially equal. It never was and never can be."

He advised the Franklin county citizens to go home and become good citizens. There were some 400 to 500 citizens of the county in the city as witnesses before the court.

Held for Robbery Without Bail.

Anniston, Ala.—Will Fox and Bob Gentry, two white men, who have lived nearly all their lives in Anniston, were arraigned in police court on two charges each of highway robbery, alleged to have been committed Sunday evening. Both of the alleged robberies took place on Twelfth street, the first on Moore avenue with a white man as the victim, and the second on Brown avenue with a negro as the victim. Very damaging evidences was brought out and Mayor Kilby, acting as recorder, bound the men over, Fox in two cases under a $500 bond in each case and Gentry the same amount in one case. He afterwards withdrew the amounts and had the men held without bail. The cases will go before the City Court grand jury at its next meeting.

President Will Visit Alabama.

Washington—President Roosevelt is not the man to rest content with the laurels of popular acclaim he received in the west and southwest. Before he quit his last whirl he said to a few newspaper men with whom he lunched that he would next go South when he made a trip anywhere; that there were four states he wished to visit—Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia and Florida—and he wanted to visit them as president of the United States. He had been to Georgia, but this time he would go to his mother's home in Georgia. He would respond to invitations to go to the other states in two of which, Florida and Arkansas, he had never been.

Cotton Belt Wreck.

Dallas, Tex.—West-bound passenger train No. 101 on the Cotton Belt railroad, due in Dallas this morning, was wrecked Friday near Weaver, in Hopkins, by running onto a soft piece of track. The engine and baggage and mail cars turned over and rolled into a creek and several persons were badly hurt, though none, it is believed, fatally.

The derailed part of the train rolled down an embankment into the creek where it lay bottom up. The engineer was pinned beneath the engine for several hours with only his head above water. Relief trains were sent out from Mount Pleasant and Commerce, but as the track is washed away it is doubtful if they will arrive before morning. Weaver is nine miles east of Sulphur Springs.

Judge to Marry.

Evergreen, Ala.—The many friends throughout the state of Judge J. C. Richardson of this circuit will be interested to know that cupid has pierced the susceptible heart of the able South Alabama jurist. It is announced that he will marry near Pensacola on the 18th. The lady's name is Miss Daisy Anson. The ceremony will be a quiet one at the home of the mother of the bride-elect at Bayou la Grande.

C. R. Bricken will be best man and Osgood Anson, brother of the bride, will give her away.

Quiet at Warsaw.

Warsaw.—Sunday passed quietly at Lodz and in Warsaw. Strong forces of troops guarded the Jewish district throughout the day. The socialists are reported to be trying to their utmost to create new strikes, but the workmen are disinclined to engage in such a conflict.

VOL. III. CLANTON, ALA., MAY 25, 1905.

STATE HAPPENINGS

Of General and Local Interest as They Occur.

Accident at the University.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—A painful and se[rious] accident occurred to A. K. Parker, a student of the University at the barracks. Mr. Parker was in Mr. Lott's room, where the latter was attempting to repair an air gun of the ordinary kind. While so engaged, Mr. Lott accidentally discharged the gun and the shot took effect in one of Mr. Parker's eyes. The accident was very painful, and it is feared by the attending physician that he will have to lose the sight of this eye. Mr. Parker is a very popular student and is one of the editors of the Crimson-White, the college paper.

Sale of Coal Lands.

Montgomery, Ala.—Governor Jelks has advised of the sale of 200 acres of coal lands owned by the Girls' School at Montevallo and located in Talladega county to the Galloway Coal Company, for $25 an acre.

The lands were sold by direction of the Board of Trustees of the school, which met recently at Montevallo. A check for $5,000 to pay for the lands was received at the capitol and the property will be transferred at once.

Shot on Excursion Train.

Montgomery, Ala.—Information has reached the city that Mr. Archie Newman, master of trains of the Southern railway with headquarters at Anniston, was shot by a negro near Belmont Thursday. The particulars of the shooting are very meager. Mr. Newman was on an excursion train coming from Rome to Birmingham when the negro refused to pay his fare and was put off. The ball went through Mr. Newman's hand, inflicting a painful but not serious wound.

Seven "Wild Cat" Raids.

Opelika, Ala.—Deputy United States Marshals R. Gibson and Deputy Collector Knox Smith have raided seven illicit distilleries in Randolph county this week. The first raid was made Monday and the officers destroyed a still operated by a negro named Sam Carter, four miles south of Wedowee. On Tuesday they made two raids and captured and destroyed three stills, one four miles north of Red's postoffice, operated by Andy Halpin, one three miles east of Red's, operated by Pat Brooks, and one seven miles north of Delta operated by Charles Smith. Warrants have been issued for all these parties, but no arrests have been made yet.

Fire at Centre.

Centre, Ala.—At 10 o'clock fire was discovered breaking through the roof of the large barn at the residence of Judge Thomas Bradford and in five minutes the whole building was a seething mass of flames. The rapidity with which the conflagration swelled was incredible, the large crowd of eager citizens who quickly assembled being wholly incapable of any effort toward checking the ravages of the flames. Stored in the building were large quantities of corn and hay and other feed stuff, all this in addition to the tools, farming implements and fertilizers, being a total loss. The vehicles were saved by hard work, though in a badly damaged condition. The doors at one end of the barn were open, permitting the stock, except one cow, to escape. A valuable horse is so badly burned however, as to render his death probable.

Bond Issue is Urged.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—At a recent meeting of the grand jury, the building of a new court house was strongly urged. It was decided that $75,000 worth of bonds would necessarily have to be issued and a part of an adjacent lot purchased for room enough to erect a new house that would be sufficiently large. Circulars have been sent to every section of the county and it is hoped that the new house and it is hoped that it will be the will of the entire county that the new house in which the county is in such need to give the issue their support.

Order for Box Cars.

Anniston, Ala.—The Western Steel Car and Foundry company has just closed a contract with the South and West railroad, an important Tennessee short line, for 250 box cars and the order will be filled complete at the Anniston plant of the company. Activity at the big plant in this city is increasing constantly, and men are being added all the time. The order mentioned above is but one of the many that are being filled at this plant. The Western Steel Car and Foundry company has made bids on material and equipment for the Panama canal.

Hanging at Seale.

Seale, Ala.—William Vaughan, a negro, who was convicted of murder at the last term of court, was hanged in the jail yard here Friday in the presence of an immense crowd, mostly negroes. Sheriff Bellamy sprung the trap at 11:20 and Vaughn was pronounced dead in about fifteen minutes. His neck was not broken and he died from strangulation. He was apparently unmoved after mounting the scaffold and spoke without emotion. He denied his guilt to the last.

The crime for which Vaughn was convicted was one of the most atrocious ever committed in this county. He killed his wife's grandmother and burned her up in her house. There was a large crowd of negroes here from all parts of the county, though all were very orderly. This is the first hanging in this county in several years.

Postmaster Pleads Guilty.

Mobile, Ala.—In the United States district court, William McDonald, former postmaster at Plateaa, Ala., pleaded guilty to embezzlement of postoffice funds amounting to $112. Judge Toulmin fined him that amount and sentenced him to one year and eight months in the penitentiary.

Birmingham, Ala.—Eva Edna, the 11-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Pearson, residing at No. 2013 Twelfth avenue, north, was instantly killed by being run over by an East Lake electric car at Cain station, in Avondale, Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Will Make Tour of the World.

Lincoln, Neb.—William J. Bryan announces that he will make a tour of the world for the study of municipal ownership and railroad problems. His daughter is in poor health and with other members of his family will accompany him.

Mobile, Ala.—The printing house of E. Duval, 59 North Water street, caught fire at 10:45 o'clock Thursday night. The flames soon enveloped the building and spread to the Bush-Hall Shoe company, wholesale, and destroyed two upper floors. The stock on the first floor was damaged by water. Fire walls south of the house protected the big wholesale dry goods house of D. R. Dunlap Mercantile company, and at 11:45 p. m. is apparently out of danger. Loss is estimated: Two stores, 57 and 59 North Water street, damaged, $16,000; stock of J. E. Duval, printer, loss $5,000; Hopkins & Feeks, box makers, $8,000. Bush-Hall Shoe company, loss about $60,000. All insured.

JAPS STRIKE IN HAWAII

The Labor Troubles are Marked by Violence on the Pacific Ocean Islands.

2,300 MEN ARE DESPERATE.

White Population of La Haina, Including Military, Prisoners in Courthouse Surrounded by Japs.

Honolulu.—Most of the white population at La Haina, on the island of Maui, including the military, are prisoners in the court house surrounded by Japanese laborers. One Japanese was killed and two wounded by the plantation police during an attack on the plantation mill.

The entire 2,300 Japanese laborers on the island are now on strike, and are showing violent mood. The steamer Kinau left Honolulu Sunday afternoon, taking National Guard Company F, consisting of thirty men, and forty armed Honolulu police to the scene of the trouble.

All Demands Refused.

The strike started a week ago on the Wailuku plantation. The Japanese made a long list of demands, among them being the discharge of the head overseer. All the demands were rejected. On Friday the strike spread to the Pioneer plantation. The plantation immediately began paying off the striking Japanese, who then commenced to stone the mill and resisted all efforts of the mounted police to drive them away. The Maui military which was called out, restored order temporarily. Everything was peaceful late Saturday when the island steamer Claudine left, but soon after the steamer's departure a clash occurred between the Japanese and the plantation guard, in which the shooting took place. It resulted in a general outbreak, and the imprisonment of the whites and the militia in the court house by the Japanese. Wireless messages were sent to Honolulu asking for aid. A tug was also sent through fear that the wireless telegraph was not working.

Secretary to Pacify Them.

The secretary of the Japanese consul accompanied the forces on the Kinau. He will try to pacify the strikers.

The entire remaining police force of Honolulu is on duty at the police station tonight, although there are no signs of trouble.

Judge Tourgee Dead.

Bordeaux, France.—Judge Albion Winegar Tourgee, of Mayville, N. Y. American consul here, died Sunday morning of acute uraemia, which resulted from an old wound. Judge Tourgee was taken seriously ill some months ago, but his condition afterwards improved and it was believed his recovery was probable. Recently, however, the disease took another serious turn and Judge Tourgee lingered until this morning. He was born at Williamsfield, O., May 2, 1838.

Judge Tourgee was widely known throughout the United States as an author, two of his novels, "A Fool's Err" and "Bricks Without Straw," both dealing with the reconstruction period, gaining him considerable reputation.

Four Shot at Palos.

Birmingham, Ala.—In a shooting affray at a country church two miles north of Palos, on the Frisco railway twenty-three miles west of Birmingham, Sunday, four young men, Oscar Brassfield, Ose Brassfield, Thomas Collier and Charles Milligan, were more or less injured. It is reported that one of the two last named is dead, but this lacks confirmation.

Oscar Brassfield was brought to Birmingham Sunday night at 7 o'clock and is at Brown's infirmary on Nineteenth street. He was shot through the bowels with a pistol ball and is in a critical condition.

Ose Brassfield, a cousin of Oscar, was shot twice in the back. He is at home near Palos and his condition is not known here.

All the men engaged in the fight are white and the difficulty is said to have grown out of bad feeling that has existed for some time. The trouble occurred about noon.

Skirmishes Are Continuous.

Harbin, Manchuria.—An officer who has returned from the extreme left of the Russian army says the Yalu detachment is constantly skirmishing with the Japanese with whom are 5,000 Chinese bandits, armed with captured Russian rifles and officered by Japanese. A strong wind is drying the roads southward.

Little Girl Charged With Murder.

Toronto, Ont.—Josephine Carr, a 13-year-old girl, has confessed to the murder of William Murray, a 9-months-old infant. It is claimed of the Carr girl that she has been in the habit of stealing baby carriages from the front of a department store while the parents were inside shopping. The police have recovered several of these carriages, which had been sold to neighbors. Last Friday the girl went to a department store and found a baby in each carriage in front of the store.

Picking out the best looking baby carriage in the lot, which contained the Murray child, she made off with it. She took the child to the woods near her home at the east end of the city, it is alleged, and stripping it of its clothing threw it over an embankment and caused its death. Later she placed the body in a culvert and buried the clothing. On Saturday she made the announcement that she had "discovered" the child's body in the culvert. She was immediately suspected and when accused of the crime confessed. The girl claimed that she adopted the plan of killing the child from seeing a play at a local theater.

Policemen Charged With Murder.

Birmingham, Ala.—Chief of Police Dink Burrell and Policeman Walter McPherson, of Brookside, are in the county jail, the charge against them being murder. The men were arrested at Brookside Saturday night and brought to Birmingham on warrants sworn out before Judge Dan A. Greene, of the criminal court of Jefferson county, by Coroner W. D. Paris. They are charged with killing Gus Trout, a negro miner, at the mining town several days ago. It is understood that the defendants will enter a plea of self-defense.

Aged Pioneer Found Dead in Bed.

Gadsden, Ala.—Jehu Reece, known to everybody in his neighborhood as Uncle "J," was found dead in bed at his home on Lookout mountain, near Fort Payne, last Thursday morning. He and his family had spent the day before away from home with friends and was in splendid health apparently when he retired that night, but next morning he was found cold in death by those who went to awaken him. Mr. Reece was 75 years old and a pioneer citizen of Lookout mountain. He was a brother-in-law of Postmaster Frazier, of Fort Payne, and wa a splendid citizen.

Bond Election is Deferred.

Gadsden, Ala.—The city officials have called off for the time being the election to be held to decide whether or not the city will issue $100,000 worth of thirty-year 5 per cent bonds for the extension of the sewerage and the paving of the streets. This was made necessary from the fact that the civil engineers could not get together and compile the necessary data to be placed before the people in order that they could know what was intended to be done with the money. An election will be called in a few weeks, but only $50,000 will be needed to accomplish what the city needs.

Fifty Turks Are Killed.

Athens, Greece.—An encounter between Graeco-Macedonian bands and a strong Turkish detachment is reported to have occurred in the district of Langidina in Macedonia. Many insurgents and fifty Turks are reported to have been killed.

Dowie Buys Land.

Mexico City, Mexico.—Gladstone Dowie, son of the Zion prophet, John Alexander Dowie and Judge Barnes, a legal adviser, are in the city completing details for the taking over of 700,000 acres of land for the purpose of establishing a colony in Mexico similar to that at Zion City, Ill.

Storm in Texas.

Fort Worth, Tex.—A heavy wind storm, blowing at the rate of seventy miles an hour, struck this city from the southwest at 6:30 o'clock Sunday night. Part of the west wall of the Texas and Pacific passenger station was blown in, and John Young, a train dispatcher, killed.

More Troops from Poland.

St. Petersburg.—Greatly increased activity is observable in the dispatch of troops to the far east from Poland. Recently picked drafts from various regiments were sent from Warsaw, Lodz and other places.

Railroad Changes Hands.

El Paso, Tex.—The El Paso and Southwestern railroad announces the purchase of the El Paso and Northwestern system. The latter connects with the Rock Island, and has a branch line to the Dawson coal fields. The Alamo Gordo coal fields and timber tracts are included in the purchase.

M. Pobedonostzeff Says the Reform Movement is Russia's Downfall.

STRUGGLE HAS BEEN IN VAIN.

Declares Government Mad in Allowing People to Play With Question of State Like Toys.

St. Petersburg.—The power of M. Pobedonostzeff, procurator general of the holy synod, who for the twenty-five years since he induced Emperor Alexander II to overthrow Loris Melikoff and abandon his whole reform policy, has been dominating the reactionary influence of the Russian state, seems shattered at last. He is over 80 years of age, is confined to bed, practically continuously; believes he sees everything for which he fought slipping away, and is dying an embittered old man. Yet, with the threads of life snapping, he still protests with all the fire of his remarkable mentality.

Denominated a Fanatic.

M. Pobedonostzeff has been denominated a fanatic by the west. The secret of his wonderful sway over the minds of two emperors has been his unshaken belief in and devotion to the principles of autocracy and orthodoxy as the twin cornerstones of Russia's future greatness. Holy Russia, he believed with all the intensity of his soul, was destined to dominate the globe, and he was ever fond of asserting as he did to Senator Beveridge, of Indiana: "Russia, Russia is not a state; Russia is a world."

Figuratively, M. Pobedonostzeff spat upon the civilization of the west. Democracy to him was irresponsible despotism, and liberty a license, and he was especially hostile to a free press. For irresponsible editors sitting in judgment on any and everything, and lightly fomenting trouble, and international strife for which a monarch would be dethroned, and responsible officials disgraced, was to him an abomination.

Victories Were Legion.

In the council of the empire for a quarter of a century none of the emperor's ministers could hold his own against M. Pobedonostzeff, and his victories were legion. With all his might and main he struggled in spite of failing health against the new reform government, and in recent months when he was unable to win outright he managed at least to secure the appearance of a draw by inspiring his imperial master to balance the reform rescript with a reactionary manifesto. His last signal triumph was the blocking of the scheme of the Metropolitan Antonius for a church council, and the restoration of the partriarchate, and in having the satisfaction of seeking its author practically banished to the Caucasus. But the crowning defeat of M. Pobedonostzeff came with the imperial ukase striking the shackles from religion, the blow being all the harder because it was delivered on the anniversary of his jubilee as procurator general of the holy synod.

Sees Only Ruin Ahead.

To intimates who are admitted to his bedroom, M. Pobedonostzeff talks bitterly. He says he washes his hands of everything. He sees only ruin ahead for church and state. The government, he declares, has gone mad, and to allow people to play with questions of state, as they would with new toys, is deplorable. The crisis he attributes to the lack of a strong and commanding statesman, and he severely blames the emperor for his weakness in yielding to the importunities of the liberals. On Friday M. Pobedonostzeff said to a friend:

"Ten years ago one of the emperor's subjects would have been exiles to Siberia for what the emperor now proclaims in his imperial manifesto."

Indian Territory Tragedy.

Dallas, Tex.—A special from Cale, I. T., says: "A tragedy occurred near this city in which one person was killed and three badly wounded. Mrs. Terrell, with her son, Robert Terrell, and his wife, were returning home from Durant, I. T., and when passing a small branch one mile north of here, three shots were fired from the roadside shrubbery, at the occupants of the buggy, killing Mrs. Terrell instantly and badly wounding young Terrell and his wife. Near the scene of the tragedy E. W. Whitehead, stepfather of Terrell's wife, was found with a shotgun wound in the abdomen. He will die.

By GEORGE H. EVERETT.

WHY, here's a letter from Tom," exclaimed Peggy Wharton one morning, hastily selecting a foreign letter from among the little pile of envelopes that lay on the breakfast table. "He's coming home on a six months' leave," she continued, glancing over the thin, rustling leaves. "Expects to be in New York before the end of the month. Just think of it, I haven't seen him since he went to the Philippines years ago. You've heard of Major Anderson?" she asked, handing the letter across the table to her husband.

Bob Wharton propped the flimsy note paper against his coffee cup. "Cousin or something, isn't he?" he inquired.

Peggy nodded. "Third cousin on dad's side, and an old sweetheart," she added, laughing.

"Yes?"

"Oh, long ago, when I was at school."

"Well, I hope we shall see something of him," said Bob, rolling a cigarette preparatory to his departure for the day. "By the way, there's something special on to-night, so don't wait up. I'm afraid I shall be late."

Peggy's face clouded. "Very late?" she asked in a low voice. He bent tenderly over the small, dark head.

"Never mind, little girl," he said. "Must make hay while the sun shines, you know."

When he had gone, Peggy glanced through the letter again, and letting it fall unheeded to the floor, lapsed into reverie. Old scenes and half-forgotten memories flitted by her mental vision in pleasant panorama. She recalled the little old-world fishing town where, fresh from school, she and young Tom Anderson had spent so many joyous youthful hours, fishing, climbing the rocks or pulling out against the tide.

"I wonder what he looks like after all these years," she mused. "I don't suppose I should know him now," and she sighed deeply—possibly over her lost youth.

When three years ago the bells had rung for Peggy's wedding, there had not been a happier bride in the world. Bob Wharton, with his clear-cut face and tall, athletic figure, had always been her beau ideal of what a lover should be; and when she had stepped, a new-made bride, from the little ivy-covered church into the sunshine of a glorious June morning the future had appeared bright and beautiful indeed.

But Bob Wharton was a writer—an author of no mean repute, and a rising man in the journalistic world—and the life of a New York journalist is not all that could be desired from a young wife's point of view. The exigencies of this, the most strenuous of the professions, necessitated rather too much absence from home to be conducive to domestic bliss. Bob loved his wife with a strong, unshakable devotion, but ambition is apt to narrow the mental field of vision, and so it happened that the writer failed to notice, as the months merged into years, that his wife had begun to suffer keenly from his continued, if unintentional neglect.

Bob and his wife occupied a small but attractive apartment in the centre of New York. Returning home one evening rather earlier than usual, some three weeks after the arrival of the letter from the Philippines, he observed that the reception room was brilliantly lighted up.

On entering he discovered the cause to be a tall, dark man in gray, who rose to meet him.

"This is Major Anderson," said Peggy.

* * * * * * *

One morning, about six months later, Bob Wharton stood before his wife with an angry flush upon his face.

"Where, then, do you propose going to-night?" he asked unpleasantly. Peggy leaned back in the low basket chair, laughing softly.

"To the opera," she replied. "Tom has bought the tickets, and Laura is coming. It is Faust to-night. I do love Faust," and she began to hum the "Salve dimora," softly, looking at her husband between half-closed eyes.

"Oh," he said, "how very delightful; you are indeed most fortunate. I should say you will miss Major Anderson rather much when he goes back to his regiment."

She looked up quickly, and the "Salve dimora" ceased. "Is it possible that you are jealous of Jack?" Her widely opened gray eyes expressing unbounded astonishment.

"No, of course not. Don't be absurd. Anderson is one of the best fellows. But at the same time, Peggy, I think you have been going about a great deal too much lately. Why, hang it, I hardly ever see you at all."

"I'm here all day," she argued.

"You are here, but I am not. When I get a night off now, I invariably have to spend it alone, because you have made your own arrangements for the evening. It won't do, Peggy; a wife's place should be at her own fireside." He tramped about the room, virtuously indignant. Peggy gave a little trill of laughter. "Why, you were only telling Tom the other day how very glad you were to have some one to take me about, because you had so little opportunity yourself," she cried.

"Yes, but dash it, Peggy, you are away nearly every night."

"And why not?" she asked. "Tom will be going back to the Philippines soon, and I want to enjoy myself while I have the chance. 'Must make hay while the sun shines,' you know," she quoted with a quick smile at her husband.

Bob glared down at her. "Enjoy yourself as much as you please," he said, "but don't neglect me."

Peggy laughed scornfully. "Neglect you," she rejoined; "that is funny. For nearly three years you systematically neglect me, and then you complain because I take the opportunity of going about a bit now that I have some one to take me."

"Look her, Peggy," said Bob, pulling up suddenly before her, and speaking with great deliberation, "I expect a friend in to-night, and I want you to be here to meet him."

She looked up with the faintest suspicion of a sneer.

"Indeed, and what about Tom?"

"You must telephone him you cannot go."

"I shall do nothing of the kind," she retorted, rising. "Tom has taken the seats entirely on my account, and I am not going to play him a trick like that. Besides, Laura would never forgive me."

"Then you refuse to stay to-night?"

"Most certainly. You should have told me before."

She stood at the window looking out, a picture of offended femininity, with the most resolute of dimpled chins in profile.

"Very well," he said, icily. "You will be sorry for this—bitterly sorry."

There was no meaning whatever in his words, but he felt it necessary to make a good exit. He waited a moment, thinking she would reply, but as she gave no sign, he left the room without another word.

That night Bob Wharton sat before the fire in his study with a thoughtful and clouded brow. From time to time he roused himself from the reverie into which he had fallen to rekindle his pipe or glance impatiently at the little ebony clock which softly ticked its way toward midnight on the mantelpiece. The apartment was very quiet and still, save for an occasional footstep passing the outer door, or crossing the ceiling overhead.

"She is very late," he muttered, getting up and going over to the window. Outside it was beginning to rain. Already the pavements were glistening in the light of the street lamps, and belated wayfarers hurried along under umbrellas.

This sort of thing would have to cease, he told himself; Peggy was becoming more defiant and self-willed every day, and, although he blamed himself for allowing her too much rope in the first instance, he would put an end to it now once and for all. A severe lesson, he concluded in his own mind, would not be out of place. "Something to bring her to her senses," he thought.

For some moments he stood looking thoughtfully at the deserted streets below. Suddenly an idea struck him. "I have it," he said aloud, "I'll let her think I have gone. That's it—gone forever," and he turned back into the room chuckling over what he imagined to be a good joke. It is a curious but well authenticated fact that even the most level-headed men have occasionally their moments of unaccountable foolishness. And Bob Wharton was no exception to the rule, for the trick he thought of playing upon his wife did credit neither to his head nor his heart.

Seating himself at the writing table, he took a sheet of paper from a drawer, and wrote rapidly upon it for some minutes.

It was a note addressed to his wife, and ran:

"Friday Evening.

"By the time you read this I shall be speeding westward, for I leave New York forever. You will soon be free. In the course of a few days you will hear from Messrs. Brown & Smith, who, acting upon my instructions, will remit you a sum of money, which, I trust, you will find adequate to your present needs. Explanations, under the circumstances, are useless and unnecessary. Let it suffice that I am merely carrying out a long contemplated plan which will now give you the fullest reasons for legally freeing yourself forever from

"YOUR HUSBAND."

Reading it over with a grim, he placed it in a prominent position upon the desk. He had barely done so when the [illegible]gle of [illegible] approaching cab caught [illegible]s ear. [illegible]ne nearer, and finally pulled up sharply below.

"I'll slip into the spare room," he thought, moving swiftly toward the door. And then for the first time it occurred to him that he was about to do a cruel and foolish thing. It was possible that his wife might faint when she read the letter, he reflected. Perhaps he had better not spring it on her after all. He crossed the room again with the intention of destroying it, but at that moment a merry little trill of laughter floated up from below, and then he heard the voice of Major Anderson singing out "Good-night," and the cab jingled away.

Bob's face hardened in a frown. "Let her come," he thought; "perhaps it will teach her a lesson she'll not forget in a hurry." He glanced hastily about the room. "I would give something to see her face when she reads that letter, though," he said aloud. A large screen stood near the writing table. "The very thing," he thought; "I'll slip behind this and watch her."

He heard the sharp click of her latchkey. The next moment she had entered. He could hear the soft frou-frou of her dress.

There was a long pause, and he wondered what she was doing. He dared not move—to do so now would be to court discovery. Suddenly a quick exclamation told him that she had seen the letter, and he looked out cautiously from behind the screen. Peggy was standing at the writing table with the letter in her hand, less than three feet away. The subdued apricot light of the shaded cluster above fell about her like a halo, and Bob, gazing at his wife from the shadow of the screen, thought he had never seen her look so beautiful.

When she had read the letter through she stood for moments gazing fixedly before her. The dying embers clicked softly in the grate and a clock striking in the distance sounded distinct and near in the utter stillness of the room. Then clearly, unmistakably, her words broke the silence.

"Gone—gone forever?—You will soon be free? Free!" She raised her head suddenly, and the light beating down upon her upturned face showed that she smiled exultantly. "Free!—free—free!" her voice rang through the room. "Free to love!—free to be loved!—Oh, Tom, Tom—at last—at last!" The next instant she sprang backward with a smothered scream, for a grip of steel had closed about her wrist and an ashen wace was looking into hers.

"Bob!" she gasped.

He drew her toward him slowly, steadily, until she could feel his quick, hot breath upon her cheek. His face was white, his eyes were blazing, and great drops of moisture glistened upon his forehead.

For some moments he stood before her in silence, but when at length he spake his voice sounded strangely unlike his own.

"So you thought I had gone, did you?" he whispered hoarsely. Peggy had stood motionless like a figure carved in stone, with her gaze fixed steadily upon him, but now her face melted suddenly into a rippling smile, and the old light of mischief that he knew so well came dancing back into her eyes.

"No, Bob," she answered, "I knew you had not"—with a quick movement she held out her hands. "Come," she added, laughing, "hadn't we better cry quits?"

Astonishment for the moment held him speechless. Peggy held a little white-gloved hand upon his arm. "My dear boy," she said, "the next time you want to do this sort of thing, I should suggest that you don't stand quite so near a mirror. It is apt to spoil the result."

She nodded in the direction of a tall oak bookcase. A quick glance was sufficient to show that the two strips of mirror which served as panels to the doors of the case, not only reflected the screen and all behind it, but most of the room as well.

Without waiting for him to speak, Peggy continued sweetly: "Of course, I saw you the moment I entered the room. I knew you were playing some sort of joke, though it was not until I read the letter that I understood it all properly. But, Bob," she continued more seriously, "it was a thoughtless trick to play, and it might have ended very differently had I not seen you in the first place. The idea of paying you back in your own coin by pretending to take it all seriously struck me in a moment, and I shall always regard your present dreadful appearance, scared appearance, Bob, as a warm tribute to my histrionic powers—hitherto unrevealed." She laughed gaily, and Bob Wharton, with a sudden sense of immense relief, caught her by the shoulders and laughed too.

"Peggy, you are a little——"

"Hush; but tell me whatever made you try to frighten me like that?"

"Oh, I don't know," he answered vaguely. "You have been neglecting me rather a lot lately, and I meant it to be a sort of lesson, I suppose."

"You silly boy, I have only neglected you because you are always putting your work before me, and I wanted to show you what it felt like."

He put his arm about her. "Forgive me, little girl," he said. "It has been my own fault all along, but things will be different now."

There was something suspiciously like tears in her eyes as she turned up her face to his.

"Kiss me," she whispered, softly.

THE FRENCH MOTHER.

The French mother, as pictured by the author of The Simple Life in the Cosmopolitan is very different from the French woman of popular imagination. The daughter of the Puritans may be a frivolous creature, devoid of the maternal instinct, but it is the chief fault of the daughter of gay France, according to Pastor Wagner, that she is too devoted to her children, placing her maternal duties before other and greater ones.

The French mother, the article declares, does too much for her children, her sons particularly. She weakens their constitution by too much care, and directs their studies to such a degree that when the control is relaxed they find themselves entirely at sea. She does not separate herself enough from her growing sons, and it is very reluctantly admitted by both parents that the time has come for the nestling to use its own wings.

It is a part of this condition of affairs, evidently, that the French mother takes first place over the wife. It is the conventionally correct thing for the mother to love her children more than her husband, and it was the chief regret of one young mother, at whose deathbed the writer once stood, that she had always done the contrary.

Even in the interest of the children themselves Mr. Wagner considers that the union and mutual affection of the parents should be the first thing in the family life. It is not well for the child to feel that he comes first and the parents after him. All education, all discipline, suffer by it.

From this extreme of overzealous maternity French women also go to the other, shirking such duties altogether, but this, says the apostle of simplicity, is "rare among us."

POISONOUS EMOTIONS.

Anger, fear, anxiety are among the emotions or sentiments which literally poison our blood. It has often been said that evil thoughts are poisonous, the meaning being that they corrupt other people, but the real fact is that they poison our own bodies.

By losing control of ourselves and indulging in anger, by yielding to anxiety, fear, and unwholesome thoughts, we cause an irritation or disturbance which, according to the latest sayings of scientists, has the effect of producing a poison in the blood that may have serious consequences.

Naturalists are now declaring that the venom of snakes is generated by anger and fear, that it is rapidly collected in a special receptacle, and thence discharged at the object of its anger or fear; and it is further explained that the same process takes place in the human body, but that we have no special organ to receive it, and it therefore disperses in the blood, acting against ourselves instead of for our protection. Be that as it may, it is generally conceded that we are literally poisoned by the emotions mentioned and by any sentiment or passion which upsets the smooth working of our minds.

This may account for various expressions and notions which have been current for many generations. We sometimes hear of a venomous remark, or speech, the speaker is a prey to some emotion of what we may call a bad class, the poison is generated, it is ejected just as the serpent ejects its venom at the object of its anger.—Home Notes.

NEW COTTONS.

Among the cottons of silk finish there are plain, embroidered and printed surfaces. Wonderful flowered cottons, thin as silk mousseline, lustrous and silky of finish and beautiful of design; heavier mercerized cottons, checked, striped, plaid, figured, embroidered; very heavy mercerized cottons of many weaves—these are all shown and in such variety and beauty of coloring as is unprecedented, says the Philadelphia Telegraph.

A silky cotton, slightly heavier and firmer than china silk, was in very small checks of a true Colonial buff and white, with water dots of white scattered over the checked surface, and another design in the same material was in a yellow, a little deeper than buff, but hardly a tangerine, and white, being figured in half-inch checks formed from blocks of smaller checks in two sizes.

The tartan plaids in a lightweight cotton material of silky finish are very gay and pretty, and are being bought up briskly for children's frocks, although they by no means belong of necessity to the children's province. There are cottons in all the grenadine weaves, coarse and fine, figured and plain, some of the coarse mesh cotton grenadines with silk finish and printed flower designs being remarkably effective.

Pique, plain and figured, and softer in quality than the old pique; linen of all kinds, ginghams, cheviots—all of the old favorites are with us in new beauty. The organdies are exquisite in design, and there is a particularly attractive line of printed dimities. Certain plaided white cottons, barred off in sheer and heavy lines and with dainty little flower sprigs sprinkled over the latticed surface, are new, effective and heavy enough for service. The flowered percales, too, which had such a run in Paris last summer, are here this season in charming guise.

WOMEN IN BUSINESS.

The economic causes usually assigned for the low wages of the woman worker are the oversupply due to the fact that so few occupations are open to her, the lack of organization among women wage-earners, the fact that women are seldom "brought up to the trade" and consequently are less highly skilled than men, the influence of custom and public opinion and the political disabilities of women.

The most recent and authoritative statement on the subject by an economist of note is to be found in Prof. Nicholson's new Elements of Political Economy. He says: "When large numbers of women were employed in the same industries as men the tendency was for the men to gain the advantage in industrial competition: they were superior in physical strength and still more so in moral coercion.

"Thus women were gradually excluded from the more gainful occupations, and by force of habit they came to be considered unwomanly. Until recently, though half the people in the world are females, there was still a prejudice against lady doctors; and though women are often litigants, they are rarely lawyers, even if the law permits. The exclusion of women from certain occupations increased the supply and thus lowered the wages in employments to which they were admitted. In recent years, however, the great natural economic forces have been working in favor of women."—Edith Abbott in Harper's Weekly.

HEAVY AND LIGHT EMBROIDERIES.

The plain allover eyelet embroidery upon very fine but firm linen makes charming frocks over white or color, and the allover open work embroideries in batistes and lawn are used for some of the very smartest of the sheer lingerie blouses.

These embroidery blouses have, as a rule, little yokes and collars and long close cuffs of Valenciennes insertion and lace, the line joining between embroidery and lace being covered by a little frill or ruche of the narrow Valenciennes, or by a very narrow band of plain white material stitched flatly on both edges. On the simple allover eyelet embroidery elaborate open work embroidery insertions or bands are used as trimming, with Valenciennes at throat and wrists.

The open work embroidery, though so poular, has not pushed blind embroidery to the wall. Little frocks of sheerest lawn embroidered in trailing delicate garlands, vines and blossoms, and with additional trimmisg of fine Valenciennes, are immensely chic, and the heavy raised embroideries have thier place.

Other beautiful sheer frocks are of the allover open work embroideries on sheer material, trimmed in band insertions and flouncings of corresponding embroidery, with touches of Valenciennes lace to soften the outlines and Valenciennes for guimpe and collar.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

LAPROBES NO LONGER NUISANCE.

Curiously significant is it that it has remained for a woman to devise a method by which the laprobe can be held in place while driving or sleighing. Such, though, is the immutable fact since but recently an application was filed by a Colorado woman. That the thousands who have recourse to the use of the carriage or sleigh as a means of conveyance, either for pleasure or business, have not hitherto thought of such a useful equipment to hold the laprobe in place, is the more to be wondered at. In construction this latest boon to the driver is simplicity itself, being nothing more than an arrangement of a looped strap and clasps by which the laprobe is fastened and securely held in place.

DAINTY LINENS.

Even the heavier linens have lost their tailor-made look, and are annexing the dainty prettiness of the dressmaker's mode. A Dresden blue linen is unobstrusively trimmed in white, the coat-basque fashioned with a chemisette front, the sleeve taking only one semblance of a cape-sleeve, and fascinating little basques added below the waistline. The skirt is built in three tiers, the upper one to below the knee, a scant circular volant next, and finally a full flounce, the fullness graded by fan-shaped groups of tucks. The round length is followed, just short enough to display the extremely smart shiny black kid shoe of novel cut. The parasol is of the linen with smart ruffles of white embroidery at the edge.

Burglars in France, a report says, have formed a trust. This is the real robber organization, all other combinations are counterfeits, the New York Herald declares.

Found Dead in Bed.

Gadsden, Ala.—Thomas Wilson, engineer of the Alabama Great Southern road at that place, was found dead in bed about 5 o'clock Saturday morning by his wife, who had gone to awaken him. Mr. Wilson was in his usual good health Saturday and had a hearty supper and retired in good health apparently. He leaves a wife and grown daughter, Mrs. Eddie Lee, and a brother, Dr. Wilson. THE COMMON HOUSE FLY

Whence He Comes and Whither He Goes.

By HAROLD SOMERS M. A. [illegible]

THE common house fly (Musca Domestica) is a creature of such secretive habits, that although from the very earliest times he has been with us, and the most ancient writers have mentioned and described him, still very little was known of his life and history.

It remained for the eminent Boston biologist, Dr. A. S. Packard, in 1873, to make known its origin, habits and transformations from the egg through the larva state with its two changes to the pupa state, then to the perfect fly.

Near the first of August the female lays about 120 eggs of a dull gray color, selecting fresh horse manure in which to deposit her eggs, and so attractive does she find this that they are laid in [illegible] masses. She takes only twenty [illegible] to [illegible] them to hatch into the [illegible] larva, a white worm-like [illegible] of an inch in length and one [illegible] in diameter. They feed on the [illegible] their environment and [illegible] casting of skins occur before they turn into the pupa state, [illegible] comes very suddenly. The [illegible] from the egg to the pupa state is [illegible] from three to four days. However, [illegible] wanting when in this condition they will eat each other and thus decrease their number. Heat and humidity greatly assist their development, but upon careful computation each female will mature around [illegible] and [illegible] houses develops under favorable conditions over 1000 flies. It is no wonder that where these conditions exist we have such a veritable harvest of the fly pest.

In the pupa state when the fly is about to emerge, the end of the pupal case splits off, making a hole through which the fly pushes a portion of its head, but here it seems to encounter a difficulty, the pupa case is [illegible] and hard to pass through, but nature comes to its assistance, and a sort of bladder like substance forms behind the head, which swells out apparently filled with air; it acts as a means of pushing away the pupa case and releases the fly. When the fly first emerges it runs around with its wings soft, small and baggy, it is pale and the colors are not set, its head rapidly expands and the bladder formation passes away—within a few hours the wings grow hard and [illegible], it is now a perfect fly.

The whole time from the depositing of the egg to the perfect fly is not over ten days in duration. Many persons who observe small flies in midsummer suppose they are the young, but such is not the case; they are flies that are perfectly nourished in the larvae and pupa states, and do not attain their full size, in fact, they are the dwarfs of their race. The male fly differs from the female in the front of the head between the eyes, being at least one-third narrower, though in size the female is rather smaller.

In the pupa state they are often fed upon by the larvae of some of the beetles, notably that of the carpet beetle, whose pupa, the dreaded buffalo moth, will attack the young fly in the pupa case and eating it possess the [illegible] for itself.

Also flies like most other creatures are parasites of infinite size that prey upon them; these eat often to excess, leaving small red specks over the body of the fly.

The fly hibernates in winter but with its usual secret we have it is very [illegible] find them in his winter quarters. With the first chill of autumn the flies leaving the cold, seek temperatures of warmth in houses, and clustering [illegible] form bunches in the corners of rooms and other places. They are then sluggish and not so active as in the warm weather. However they do not make a permanent stay indoors, but on the first mild, sunny day, seek the windows to get out and find their [illegible] winter hiding places, many [illegible] to make their homes in the [illegible] grass or leaves where they [illegible] so effectively that the [illegible] snow of winter does not destroy them in their hibernating state. In the first warm days of spring [illegible] snow is gone and the grass [illegible] is beginning to grow and warm, [illegible] the yellow dandelion [illegible] shows [illegible] standing out still and useless [illegible] they soon acquire the power of life in the warm rays of the sun. A [illegible] like most other creatures [illegible] are parasites of infinite size that prey [illegible] on them; these eat often to excess [illegible] leaving small red specks over the body of the fly.

The fly hibernates in winter but [illegible] has usual secret we have it is very [illegible] find them in his winter quarters. With the first chill of autumn [illegible]

STATE HAPPENINGS

General and Local Interest as They Occur.

Accident at the University.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—A painful and serious accident occurred to A. K. Parker, a student of the University of the barracks. Mr. Parker was in Mr. Lett's room, where the latter was attempting to repair an air gun of the ordinary kind. While so engaged, Mr. Lett accidentally discharged the gun and the shot took effect in one of Mr. Parker's eyes. The accident was very painful, and it is feared by the attending physicians that he will have to lose the sight of this eye. Mr. Parker is a popular student and is one of the editors of the Crimson-White, the college paper.

Sale of Coal Lands.

Montgomery, Ala.—Governor Jelks has been advised of the sale of 200 acres of coal lands owned by the Girls' school at Montevallo and located in Bibb county, to the Galloway Coal company, for $25 an acre. The lands were sold by direction of the Board of Trustees of the school, which met recently at Montevallo. The check for $5,000 to pay for the lands was received at the capitol and the property will be transferred at once.

Shot on Excursion Train.

Montgomery, Ala.—Information has reached the city that Mr. Archie Logan, master of trains of the Southern railway with headquarters at Anniston, was shot by a negro near Piedmont Thursday. The particulars of the shooting are very meager. Mr. Logan was on an excursion train coming from Rome to Birmingham when the negro refused to pay his fare and was put off. The ball went through Mr. Newman's hand, inflicting a painful but not serious wound.

Industrial Association Called.

Montgomery, Ala.—Charles P. Lane president of the Alabama Industrial and Commercial Association, has issued a call for the annual meeting of the association to be held in December in September 12. It is expected that the meeting will be attended by prominent men from all over the state and the membership of the organization includes many of the most prominent citizens. The programme is being arranged for the meeting.

Tried to Burn the Jail.

Anniston, Ala.—James Kenney, a white cripple, incarcerated in the city jail, tried to start a blaze in his cell early yesterday morning, and made things very interesting for Warden Smoot for a while. He set fire to the blankets and other bedding in the cell. When the burning material had been improved he took off his coat and tried to burn it. His intentions, it is believed, were to burn the jail, if possible.

Shooting Was Fatal.

Greenville, Ala.—Last Sunday night at a negro church near Brooklyn, in Butler county, Wade Oliver shot and instantly killed Leander Teagin, and also wounded John Cole, who died Monday. John Cole was a deacon in the church and was endeavoring to get his assailant, who was also, to behave himself.

Electric Road to Be Built.

Selma, Ala.—The Selma Electric Railroad association has been organized here. It was the sense of the business men's meeting that the proposed line from Selma to Marion should be built and the project will be rapidly pushed. The meeting was enthusiastic.

New Lumber Company.

Montgomery, Ala.—The Blount Lumber company was incorporated at Montgomery. The incorporators are John W. Hunnicutt, W. A. Gunn, D. W. Vaughan, Ulysses Vaughan, S. J. Brown.

Several "Wild Cat" Raids.

Birmingham, Ala.—Deputy United States Marshal H. Gibson and Deputy Collector Knox Pugh have raided several blockade stills in Randolph county, this week. The first raid was made Monday and the officers destroyed a still operated by a negro named Sam Carter four miles south of Bowdon. On Tuesday they made three raids and captured and destroyed three stills, one four miles north of Hollis' postoffice, operated by Hollis, one three miles east of Hollis operated by Pat Brooks, and one seven miles north of Delta operated by Charles Smith. Warrants have been issued for all these parties, but no arrests have been made yet.

Fire at Centre.

Centre, Ala.—At 10 o'clock fire was discovered breaking through the roof of the large barn at the residence of Judge Thomas Bradford and in five minutes the whole building was a seething mass of flames. The rapidity with which the conflagration swelled was incredible, the large crowd of eager citizens who quickly assembled being wholly incapable of any effort toward checking the ravages of the flames. Stored in the building were large quantities of corn and hay and other feed stuff, all this, in addition to the tools, farming implements and fertilizers, being a total loss. The vehicles were saved by hard work, though in a badly damaged condition. The doors at one end of the barn were open, permitting the stock, except one cow, to escape. A valuable horse is so badly burned however, as to render his death probable.

Bond Issue Is Urged.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—At a recent meeting of the grand jury, the building of a new court house was strongly urged. It was decided that $75,000 worth of bonds would necessarily have to be issued and a part of an adjacent lot purchased for room enough to erect a new house that would be sufficiently large. Circulars have been sent to every section of the county and it is hoped that the new house and it is hoped that it will be the will of the entire county that the new house in which the county is in such need to give the issue their support.

Order for Box Cars.

Anniston, Ala.—The Western Steel Car and Foundry company has just closed a contract with the South and West railroad, an important Tennessee short line, for 250 box cars and the order will be filled complete at the Anniston plant of the company. Activity at the big plant in this city is increasing constantly, and men are being added all the time. The order mentioned above is but one of the many that are being filled at this plant. The Western Steel Car and Foundry company has made bids on material and equipment for the Panama canal.

Hanging at Seale.

Seale, Ala.—William Vaughan, a negro, who was convicted of murder at the last term of court, was hanged in the jail yard here Friday in the presence of an immense crowd, mostly negroes. Sheriff Bellamy sprung the trap at 11:20 and Vaughn was pronounced dead in about fifteen minutes. His neck was not broken and he died from strangulation. He was apparently unmoved after mounting the scaffold and spoke without emotion. He denied his guilt to the last.

The crime for which Vaughn was convicted was one of the most atrocious ever committed in this county. He killed his wife's grandmother and burned her up in her house. There was a large crowd of negroes here from all parts of the county, though all were very orderly. This is the first hanging in this county in several years.

Postmaster Pleads Guilty.

Mobile, Ala.—In the United States district court, William McDonald, former postmaster at Plateau, Ala., pleaded guilty to embezzlement of postoffice funds amounting to $112. Judge Toulmin fined him that amount and sentenced him to one year and eight months in the penitentiary.

Birmingham, Ala.—Eva Edna, the 14-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Pearson, residing at No. 2013 Twelfth avenue, north, was instantly killed by being run over by an East Lake electric car at Cain station, in Avondale, Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Will Make Tour of the World.

Lincoln, Neb.—William J. Bryan announces that he will make a tour of the world for the study of municipal ownership and railroad problems. His daughter is in poor health and with other members of his family will accompany him.

Mobile, Ala.—The printing house of E. Duval, 59 North Water street, caught fire at 10:45 o'clock Thursday night. The flames soon enveloped the building and spread to the Bush-Hall Shoe company, wholesale, and destroyed two upper floors. The stock on the first floor was damaged by water. Fire walls south of the house protected the big wholesale dry goods house of D. R. Dunlap Mercantile company, and at 11:45 p. m. is apparently out of danger. Loss is estimated: Two stores, 57 and 59 North Water street, damaged, $16,000; stock of J. E. Duval, printer, loss $5,000; Hopkins & Feeks, box makers, $8,000. Bush-Hall Shoe company, loss about $60,000. All insured.

JAPS STRIKE IN HAWAII

The Labor Troubles are Marked by Violence on the Pacific Ocean Islands.

2,300 MEN ARE DESPERATE.

White Population of La Haina, Including Military, Prisoners in Court-house Surrounded by Japs.

Honolulu.—Most of the white population at La Haina, on the island of Maui, including the military, are prisoners in the court house surrounded by Japanese laborers. One Japanese was killed and two wounded by the plantation police during an attack on the plantation mill.

The entire 2,300 Japanese laborers on the island are now on strike, and are showing violent mood. The steamer Kinau left Honolulu Sunday afternoon, taking National Guard Company F, consisting of thirty men, and forty armed Honolulu police to the scene of the trouble.

All Demands Refused.

The strike started a week ago on the Wailuku plantation. The Japanese made a long list of demands, among them being the discharge of the head overseer. All the demands were rejected. On Friday the strike spread to the Pioneer plantation. The plantation immediately began paying off the striking Japanese, who then commenced to stone the mill and resisted all efforts of the mounted police to drive them away. The Maui military, which was called out, restored order temporarily. Everything was peaceful late Saturday when the island steamer Claudine left, but soon after the steamer's departure a clash occurred between the Japanese and the plantation guard, in which the shooting took place. It resulted in a general outbreak, and the imprisonment of the whites and the militia in the court house by the Japanese. Wireless messages were sent to Honolulu asking for aid. A tug was also sent through fear that the wireless telegraph was not working.

Secretary to Pacify Them.

The secretary of the Japanese consul accompanied the forces on the Kinau. He will try to pacify the strikers.

The entire remaining police force of Honolulu is on duty at the police station tonight, although there are no signs of trouble.

Judge Tourgee Dead.

Bordeaux, France.—Judge Albion Winegar Tourgee, of Mayville, N. Y., American consul here, died Sunday morning of acute uraemia, which resulted from an old wound. Judge Tourgee was taken seriously ill some months ago, but his condition afterwards improved and it was believed his recovery was probable. Recently, however, the disease took another serious turn and Judge Tourgee lingered until this morning. He was born at Williamsfield, O., May 2, 1838.

Judge Tourgee was widely known throughout the United States as an author, two of his novels, "A Fool's Err" and "Bricks Without Straw," both dealing with the reconstruction period, gaining him considerable reputation.

Four Shot at Palos.

Birmingham, Ala.—In a shooting affray at a country church two miles north of Palos, on the Frisco railway twenty-three miles west of Birmingham, Sunday, four young men, Oscar Brassfield, Ose Brassfield, Thomas Collier and Charles Milligan, were more or less injured. It is reported that one of the two last named is dead, but this lacks confirmation.

Oscar Brassfield was brought to Birmingham Sunday night at 7 o'clock and is at Brown's infirmary on Nineteenth street. He was shot through the bowels with a pistol ball and is in a critical condition.

Ose Brassfield, a cousin of Oscar, was shot twice in the back. He is at home near Palos and his condition is not known here.

All the men engaged in the fight are white and the difficulty is said to have grown out of bad feeling that has existed for some time. The trouble occurred about noon.

Skirmishes Are Continuous.

Harbin, Manchuria.—An officer who has returned from the extreme left of the Russian army says the Yalu detachment is constantly skirmishing with the Japanese with whom are 5,000 Chinese bandits, armed with captured Russian rifles and officered by Japanese. Little Girl Charged With Murder.

Toronto, Ont.—Josephine Carr, a 13-year-old girl, has confessed to the murder of William Murray, a 9-months-old infant. It is claimed of the Carr girl that she has been in the habit of stealing baby carriages from the front of a department store while the parents were inside shopping. The police have recovered several of these carriages, which had been sold to neighbors. Last Friday the girl went to a department store and found a baby in each carriage in front of the store.

Picking out the best looking baby carriage in the lot, which contained the Murray child, she made off with it. She took the child to the woods near her home at the east end of the city, it is alleged, and stripping it of its clothing threw it over an embankment and caused its death. Later she placed the body in a culvert and buried the clothing. On Saturday she made the announcement that she had "discovered" the child's body in the culvert. She was immediately suspected and when accused of the crime confessed. The girl claimed that she adopted the plan of killing the child from seeing a play at a local theater.

Policemen Charged With Murder.

Birmingham, Ala.—Chief of Police Dink Burrell and Policeman Walter McPherson, of Brookside, are in the county jail, the charge against them being murder. The men were arrested at Brookside Saturday night and brought to Birmingham on warrants sworn out before Judge Dan A. Greene, of the criminal court of Jefferson county, by Coroner W. D. Paris. They are charged with killing Gus Trout, a negro miner, at the mining town several days ago. It is understood that the defendants will enter a plea of self-defense.

Aged Pioneer Found Dead in Bed.

Gadsden, Ala.—Jehu Reece, known to everybody in his neighborhood as Uncle "J," was found dead in bed at his home on Lookout mountain, near Fort Payne, last Thursday morning. He and his family had spent the day before away from home with friends and was in splendid health apparently when he retired that night, but next morning he was found cold in death by those who went to awaken him. Mr. Reece was 75 years old and a pioneer citizen of Lookout mountain. He was a brother-in-law of Postmaster Frazier, of Fort Payne, and wa a splendid citizen.

Bond Election is Deferred.

Gadsden, Ala.—The city officials have called off for the time being the election to be held to decide whether or not the city will issue $100,000 worth of thirty-year 5 per cent bonds for the extension of the sewerage and the paving of the streets. This was made necessary from the fact that the civil engineers could not get together and compile the necessary data to be placed before the people in order that they could know what was intended to be done with the money. An election will be called in a few weeks, but only $50,000 will be needed to accomplish what the city needs.

Fifty Turks Are Killed.

Athens, Greece.—An encounter between Graeco-Macedonian bands and a strong Turkish detachment is reported to have occurred in the district of Langidina in Macedonia. Many insurgents and fifty Turks are reported to have been killed.

Dowie Buys Land.

Mexico City, Mexico.—Gladstone Dowie, son of the Zion prophet, John Alexander Dowie and Judge Barnes, a legal adviser, are in the city completing details for the taking over of 700,000 acres of land for the purpose of establishing a colony in Mexico similar to that at Zion City, Ill.

Storm in Texas.

Fort Worth, Tex.—A heavy wind storm, blowing at the rate of seventy miles an hour, struck this city from the southwest at 6:30 o'clock Sunday night. Part of the west wall of the Texas and Pacific passenger station was blown in, and John Young, a train dispatcher, killed.

More Troops from Poland.

St. Petersburg.—Greatly increased activity is observable in the dispatch of troops to the far east from Poland. Recently picked drafts from various regiments were sent from Warsaw, Lodz and other places.

Railroad Changes Hands.

El Paso, Tex.—The El Paso and Southwestern railroad announces the purchase of the El Paso and Northwestern system. The latter connects with the Rock Island, and has a branch line to the Dawson coal fields. The Alamo Gordo coal fields and timber tracts are included in the purchase.

AGED PROCURATOR

M. Pobedonostzeff Says the Reform Movement is Russia's Downfall.

STRUGGLE HAS BEEN IN VAIN.

Declares Government Mad in Allowing People to Play With Question of State Like Toys.

St. Petersburg.—The power of M. Pobedonostzeff, procurator general of the holy synod, who for the twenty-five years since he induced Emperor Alexander II to overthrow Loris Melikoff and abandon his whole reform policy, has been dominating the reactionary influence of the Russian state, seems shattered at last. He is over 80 years of age, is confined to bed, practically continuously; believes he sees everything for which he fought slipping away, and is dying an embittered old man. Yet, with the threads of life snapping, he still protests with all the fire of his remarkable mentality.

Denominated a Fanatic.

M. Pobedonostzeff has been denominated a fanatic by the west. The secret of his wonderful sway over the minds of two emperors has been his unshaken belief in and devotion to the principles of autocracy and orthodoxy as the twin cornerstones of Russia's future greatness. Holy Russia, he believed with all the intensity of his soul, was destined to dominate the globe, and he was ever fond of asserting as he did to Senator Beveridge, of Indiana: "Russia, Russia is not a state; Russia is a world."

Figuratively, M. Pobedonostzeff spat upon the civilization of the west. Democracy to him was irresponsible despotism, and liberty a license, and he was especially hostile to a free press. For irresponsible editors sitting in judgment on any and everything, and lightly fomenting trouble, and international strife for which a monarch would be dethroned, and responsible officials disgraced, was to him an abomination.

Victories Were Legion.

In the council of the empire for a quarter of a century none of the emperor's ministers could hold his own against M. Pobedonostzeff, and his victories were legion. With all his might and main he struggled in spite of failing health against the new reform government, and in recent months when he was unable to win outright he managed at least to secure the appearance of a draw by inspiring his imperial master to balance the reform rescript with a reactionary manifesto. His last signal triumph was the blocking of the scheme of the Metropolitan Antonius for a church council, and the restoration of the partriarchate, and in having the satisfaction of seeking its author practically banished to the Caucasus. But the crowning defeat of M. Pobedonostzeff came with the imperial ukase striking the shackles from religion, the blow being all the harder because it was delivered on the anniversary of his jubilee as procurator general of the holy synod.

Sees Only Ruin Ahead.

To intimates who are admitted to his bedroom, M. Pobedonostzeff talks bitterly. He says he washes his hands of everything. He sees only ruin ahead for church and state. The government, he declares, has gone mad, and to allow people to play with questions of state, as they would with new toys, is deplorable. The crisis he attributes to the lack of a strong and commanding statesman, and he severely blames the emperor for his weakness in yielding to the importunities of the liberals. On Friday M. Pobedonostzeff said to a friend:

"Ten years ago one of the emperor's subjects would have been exiles to Siberia for what the emperor now proclaims in his imperial manifesto."

Indian Territory Tragedy.

Dallas, Tex.—A special from Cale, I. T., says: "A tragedy occurred near this city in which one person was killed and three badly wounded. Mrs. Terrell, with her son, Robert Terrell, and his wife, were returning home from Durant, I. T., and when passing a small branch one mile north of here, three shots were fired from the roadside shrubbery, at the occupants of the buggy, killing Mrs. Terrell instantly and badly wounding young Terrell and his wife. Near the scene of the tragedy E. W. Whitehead, stepfather of Terrell's wife, was found with a shotgun wound in the abdomen. He will die.

A WORTHLESS LOVE.

'A man prefers the one who makes him laugh;
The cares that he must carry through the day
Are forgotten or diminished more than half
If there's just a chance to laugh along the way!
But woman—ah, God bless her—
How her heart does ever leap
With love—true love and tender—
For the man who makes her weep!

I like the maid who gives me cause to smile,
I love the child that gives me little care;
Men praise the ones who keep them laughing while
They bend beneath the burdens they must bear.
But woman—ah, God bless her!—
Her love is true and deep
For the child that brings her sorrow
And the man who makes her weep.
—S. E. Kiser, in Chicago Times-Herald.

HIS METHOD.

By GEORGE H. EVERETT.

WHY, here's a letter from Tom," exclaimed Peggy Wharton one morning, hastily selecting a foreign letter from among the little pile of envelopes that lay on the breakfast table. "He's coming home on a six months' leave," she continued, glancing over the thin, rustling leaves. "Expects to be in New York before the end of the month. Just think of it, I haven't seen him since he went to the Philippines years ago. You've heard of Major Anderson?" she asked, handing the letter across the table to her husband.

Bob Wharton propped the flimsy note paper against his coffee cup. "Cousin or something, isn't he?" he inquired.

Peggy nodded. "Third cousin on dad's side, and an old sweetheart," she added, laughing.

"Yes?"

"Oh, long ago, when I was at school."

"Well, I hope we shall see something of him," said Bob, rolling a cigarette preparatory to his departure for the day. "By the way, there's something special on to-night, so don't wait up. I'm afraid I shall be late."

Peggy's face clouded. "Very late?" she asked in a low voice. He bent tenderly over the small, dark head.

"Never mind, little girl," he said. "Must make hay while the sun shines, you know."

When he had gone, Peggy glanced through the letter again, and letting it fall unheeded to the floor, lapsed into reverie. Old scenes and half-forgotten memories flitted by her mental vision in pleasant panorama. She recalled the little old-world fishing town where, fresh from school, she and young Tom Anderson had spent so many joyous youthful hours, fishing, climbing the rocks or pulling out against the tide.

"I wonder what he looks like after all these years," she mused. "I don't suppose I should know him now," and she sighed deeply—possibly over her lost youth.

When three years ago the bells had rung for Peggy's wedding, there had not been a happier bride in the world. Bob Wharton, with his clear-cut face and tall, athletic figure, had always been her beau ideal of what a lover should be; and when she had stepped, a new-made bride, from the little ivy-covered church into the sunshine of a glorious June morning the future had appeared bright and beautiful indeed.

But Bob Wharton was a writer—an author of no mean repute, and a rising man in the journalistic world—and the life of a New York journalist is not all that could be desired from a young wife's point of view. The exigencies of this, the most strenuous of the professions, necessitated rather too much absence from home to be conducive to domestic bliss. Bob loved his wife with a strong, unshakable devotion, but ambition is apt to narrow the mental field of vision, and so it happened that the writer failed to notice, as the months merged into years, that his wife was beginning to suffer keenly from his constant, if unintentional neglect.

Bob and his wife occupied a small but attractive apartment in the centre of New York. Returning home one evening rather earlier than usual, some three weeks after the arrival of the letter from the Philippines, he observed that the reception room was brilliantly lighted up.

On entering he discovered the cause to be a tall, dark man in gray, who rose to meet him.

"This is Major Anderson," said Peggy.

* * * * * * *

One morning, about six months later, Bob Wharton stood before his wife with an angry flush upon his face.

"Where, then, do you propose going to-night?" he asked unpleasantly. Peggy leaned back in the low basket chair, laughing softly.

"To the opera," she replied. "Tom has bought the tickets, and Laura is coming. It is Faust to-night. I do love Faust," and she began to hum the "Salve dimora," softly, looking at her husband between half-closed eyes.

"Oh," he said, "how very delightful; you are indeed most fortunate. I should say you will miss Major Anderson rather much when he goes back to his regiment."

She looked up quickly, and the "Salve dimora" ceased. "Is it possible that you are jealous of Jack?" Her widely opened gray eyes expressing unbounded astonishment.

"No, of course not! Don't be absurd. Anderson is one of the best fellows. But at the same time, Peggy, I think you have been going about a great deal too much lately. Why, hang it, I hardly ever see you at all."

"I'm here all day," she argued.

"You are here, but I am not. When I get a night off now, I invariably have to spend it alone, because you have made your own arrangements for the evening. It won't do, Peggy; a wife's place should be at her own fireside." He tramped about the room, virtuously indignant. Peggy gave a little trill of laughter. "Why, you were only telling Tom the other day how very glad you were to have some one to take me about, because you had so little opportunity yourself," she cried.

"Yes, but dash it, Peggy, you are away nearly every night."

"And why not?" she asked. "Tom will be going back to the Philippines soon, and I want to enjoy myself while I have the chance. 'Must make hay while the sun shines,' you know," she quoted with a quick smile at her husband.

Bob glared down at her. "Enjoy yourself as much as you please," he said, "but don't neglect me."

Peggy laughed scornfully. "Neglect you," she rejoined; "that is funny. For nearly three years you systematically neglect me, and then you complain because I take the opportunity of going about a bit now that I have some one to take me."

"Look her, Peggy," said Bob, pulling up suddenly before her, and speaking with great deliberation, "I expect a friend in to-night, and I want you to be here to meet him."

She looked up with the faintest suspicion of a sneer.

"Indeed, and what about Tom?"

"You must telephone him you cannot go."

"I shall do nothing of the kind," she retorted, rising. "Tom has taken the seats entirely on my account, and I am not going to play him a trick like that. Besides, Laura would never forgive me."

"Then you refuse to stay to-night?"

"Most certainly. You should have told me before."

She stood at the window looking out, a picture of offended femininity, with the most resolute of dimpled chins in profile.

"Very well," he said, icily. "You will be sorry for this—bitterly sorry."

There was no meaning whatever in his words, but he felt it necessary to make a good exit. He waited a moment, thinking she would reply, but as she gave no sign, he left the room without another word.

That night Bob Wharton sat before the fire in his study with a thoughtful and clouded brow. From time to time he roused himself from the reverie into which he had fallen to rekindle his pipe or glance impatiently at the little ebony clock which softly ticked its way toward midnight on the mantelpiece. The apartment was very quiet and still, save for an occasional footstep passing the outer door, or crossing the ceiling overhead.

"She is very late," he muttered, getting up and going over to the window. Outside it was beginning to rain. Already the pavements were glistening in the light of the street lamps, and belated wayfarers hurried along under umbrellas.

This sort of thing would have to cease, he told himself; Peggy was becoming more defiant and self-willed every day, and, although he blamed himself for allowing her too much rope in the first instance, he would put an end to it now once and for all. A severe lesson, he concluded in his own mind, would not be out of place. "Something to bring her to her senses," he thought.

For some moments he stood looking thoughtfully at the deserted streets below. Suddenly an idea struck him. "I have it," he said aloud, "I'll let her think I have gone. That's it—gone forever," and he turned back into the room chuckling over what he imagined to be a good joke. It is a curious but well authenticated fact that even the most level-headed men have occasionally their moments of unaccountable foolishness. And Bob Wharton was no exception to the rule, for the trick he thought of playing upon his wife did credit neither to his head nor his heart.

Seating himself at the writing table, he took a sheet of paper from a drawer, and wrote rapidly upon it for some minutes.

It was a note addressed to his wife, and ran:

"Friday Evening.

"By the time you read this I shall be speeding westward, for I leave New York forever. You will soon be free. In the course of a few days you will hear from Messrs. Brown & Smith, who, acting upon my instructions, will remit you a sum of money, which, I trust, you will find adequate to your present needs. Explanations, under the circumstances, are useless and unnecessary. Let it suffice that I am merely carrying out a long contemplated plan which will soon give you the fullest reasons for legally freeing yourself forever from

"YOUR HUSBAND."

Reading it over with a grim, he placed it in a prominent position upon the desk. He had barely done so when the jingle of an approaching cab caught his ear. It came nearer, and finally pulled up sharply below.

"I'll slip into the spare room," he thought, moving swiftly toward the door. And then for the first time it occurred to him that he was about to do a cruel and foolish thing. It was possible that his wife might faint when she read the letter, he reflected. Perhaps he had better not spring it on her after all. He crossed the room again with the intention of destroying it, but at that moment a merry little trill of laughter floated up from below, and then he heard the voice of Major Anderson singing out "Good-night," and the cab jingled away.

Bob's face hardened in a frown. "Let her come," he thought; "perhaps it will teach her a lesson she'll not forget in a hurry." He glanced hastily about the room. "I would give something to see her face when she reads that letter, though," he said aloud. A large screen stood near the writing table. "The very thing," he thought; "I'll slip behind this and watch her."

He heard the sharp click of her latchkey. The next moment she had entered. He could hear the soft frou-frou of her dress.

There was a long pause, and he wondered what she was doing. He dared not move—to do so now would be to court discovery. Suddenly a quick exclamation told him that she had seen the letter, and he looked out cautiously from behind the screen. Peggy was standing at the writing table with the letter in her hand, less than three feet away. The subdued apricot light of the shaded cluster above fell about her like a halo, and Bob, gazing at his wife from the shadow of the screen, thought he had never seen her look so beautiful.

When she had read the letter through she stood for moments gazing fixedly before her. The dying embers clicked softly in the grate and a clock striking in the distance sounded distinct and near in the utter stillness of the room. Then clearly, unmistakably, her words broke the silence.

"Gone—gone forever?—You will soon be free? Free!" She raised her head suddenly, and the light beating down upon her upturned face showed that she smiled exultantly. "Free!—free—free!" her voice rang through the room. "Free to love!—free to be loved!—Oh, Tom, Tom—at last—at last!" The next instant she sprang backward with a smothered scream, for a grip of steel had closed about her wrist and an ashen wace was looking into hers.

"Bob!" she gasped.

He drew her toward him slowly, steadily, until she could feel his quick, hot breath upon her cheek. His face was white, his eyes were blazing, and great drops of moisture glistened upon his forehead.

For some moments he stood before her in silence, but when at length he spake his voice sounded strangely unlike his own.

"So you thought I had gone, did you?" he whispered hoarsely. Peggy had stood motionless like a figure carved in stone, with her gaze fixed steadily upon him, but now her face melted suddenly into a rippling smile, and the old light of mischief that he knew so well came dancing back into her eyes.

"No, Bob," she answered, "I knew you had not"—with a quick movement she held out her hands. "Come," she added, laughing, "hadn't we better cry quits?"

Astonishment for the moment held him speechless. Peggy held a little white-gloved hand upon his arm. "My dear boy," she said, "the next time you want to do this sort of thing I should suggest that you don't stand quite so near a mirror. It is apt to spoil the result."

She nodded in the direction of a tall oak bookcase. A quick glance was sufficient to show that the two strips of mirror which served as panels to the doors of the case, not only reflected the screen and all behind it, but most of the room as well.

Without waiting for him to speak, Peggy continued sweetly: "Of course, I saw you the moment I entered the room. I knew you were playing some sort of joke, though it was not until I read the letter that I understood it all properly. But, Bob," she continued more seriously, "it was a thoughtless trick to play, and it might have ended very differently had I not seen you in the first place. The idea of paying you back in your own coin by pretending to take it all seriously struck me in a moment, and I shall always regard your present dreadful appearance, scared appearance, Bob, as a warm tribute to my histrionic powers—hitherto unrevealed." She laughed gaily, and Bob Wharton, with a sudden sense of immense relief, caught her by the shoulders and laughed too.

"Peggy, you are a little——"

"Hush! but tell me whatever made you try to frighten me like that?"

"Oh, I don't know," he answered vaguely. "You have been neglecting me rather a lot lately, and I meant it to be a sort of lesson, I suppose."

"You silly boy, I have only neglected you because you are always putting your work before me, and I wanted to show you what it felt like."

He put his arm about her. "Forgive me, little girl," he said. "It has been my own fault all along, but things will be different now."

There was something suspiciously like tears in her eyes as she turned up her face to his.

"Kiss me," she whispered, softly.

THE FRENCH MOTHER.

The French mother, as pictured by the author of The Simple Life in the Cosmopolitan is very different from the French woman of popular imagination. The daughter of the Puritans may be a frivolous creature, devoid of the maternal instinct, but it is the chief fault of the daughter of gay France, according to Pastor Wagner, that she is too devoted to her children, placing her maternal duties before other and greater ones.

The French mother, the article declares, does too much for her children, her sons particularly. She weakens their constitution by too much care, and directs their studies to such a degree that when the control is relaxed they find themselves entirely at sea. She does not separate herself enough from her growing sons, and it is very reluctantly admitted by both parents that the time has come for the nestling to use its own wings.

It is a part of this condition of affairs, evidently, that the French mother takes first place over the wife. It is the conventionally correct thing for the mother to love her children more than her husband, and it was the chief regret of one young mother, at whose deathbed the writer once stood, that she had always done the contrary.

Even in the interest of the children themselves Mr. Wagner considers that the union and mutual affection of the parents should be the first thing in the family life. It is not well for the child to feel that he comes first and the parents after him. All education, all discipline, suffer by it.

From this extreme of overzealous maternity French women also go to the other, shirking such duties altogether, but this, says the apostle of simplicity, is "rare among us."

POISONOUS EMOTIONS.

Anger, fear, anxiety are among the emotions or sentiments which literally poison our blood. It has often been said that evil thoughts are poisonous, the meaning being that they corrupt other people, but the real fact is that they poison our own bodies.

By losing control of ourselves and indulging in anger, by yielding to anxiety, fear, and unwholesome thoughts, we cause an irritation or disturbance which, according to the latest sayings of scientists, has the effect of producing a poison in the blood that may have serious consequences.

Naturalists are now declaring that the venom of snakes is generated by anger and fear, that it is rapidly collected in a special receptacle, and thence discharged at the object of its anger or fear; and it is further explained that the same process takes place in the human body, but that we have no special organ to receive it, and it therefore disperses in the blood, acting against ourselves instead of for our protection. Be that as it may, it is generally conceded that we are literally poisoned by the emotions mentioned and by any sentiment or passion which upsets the smooth working of our minds.

This may account for various expressions and notions which have been current for many generations. We sometimes hear of a venomous remark, or speech, the speaker is a prey to some emotion of what we may call a bad class, the poison is generated, it is ejected just as the serpent ejects its venom at the object of its anger.—Home Notes.

NEW COTTONS.

Among the cottons of silk finish there are plain, embroidered and printed surfaces. Wonderful flowered cottons, thin as silk mousseline, lustrous and silky of finish and beautiful of design; heavier mercerized cottons, checked, striped, plaid, figured, embroidered; very heavy mercerized cottons of many weaves—these are all shown and in such variety and beauty of coloring as is unprecedented, says the Philadelphia Telegraph.

A silky cotton, slightly heavier and firmer than china silk, was in very small checks of a true Colonial buff and white, with water dots of white scattered over the checked surface, and another design in the same material was in a yellow, a little deeper than buff, but hardly a tangerine, and white, being figured in half-inch checks formed from blocks of smaller checks in two sizes.

The tartan plaids in a lightweight cotton material of silky finish are very gay and pretty, and are being bought up briskly for children's frocks, although they by no means belong of necessity to the children's province. There are cottons in all the grenading weaves, coarse and fine, figured and plain, some of the coarse mesh cotton grenadines with silk finish and printed flower designs being remarkably effective.

Pique, plain and figured, and softer in quality than the old pique; linen of all kinds, ginghams, cheviots—all of the old favorites are with us in new beauty. The organdies are exquisite in design, and there is a particularly attractive line of printed dimities. Certain plaided white cottons, barred off in [illegible] and heavy lines and with dainty little flower sprigs sprinkled over the latticed surface, are new, effective and heavy enough for service. The flowered percales, too, which had such a run in Paris last summer, are here this season in charming guise.

WOMEN IN BUSINESS.

The economic causes usually assigned for the low wages of the woman worker are the oversupply due to the fact that so few occupations are open to her, the lack of organization among women wage-earners, the fact that women are seldom "brought up to the trade" and consequently are less highly skilled than men, the influence of custom and public opinion and the political disabilities of women.

The most recent and authoritative statement on the subject by an economist of note is to be found in Prof. Nicholson's new Elements of Political Economy. He says: "When large numbers of women were employed in the same industries as men the tendency was for the men to gain the advantage in industrial competition; they were superior in physical strength and still more so in moral coercion.

"Thus women were gradually excluded from the more gainful occupations, and by force of habit they came to be considered unwomanly. Until recently, though half the people in the world are females, there was still a prejudice against lady doctors; and though women are often litigants, they are rarely lawyers, even if the law permits. The exclusion of women from certain occupations increased the supply and thus lowered the wages in employments to which they were admitted. In recent years, however, the great natural economic forces have been working in favor of women."—Edith Abbott in Harper's Weekly.

HEAVY AND LIGHT EMBROIDERIES.

The plain allover eyelet embroidery upon very fine but firm linen makes charming frocks over white or color, and the allover open work embroideries in batistes and lawn are used for some of the very smartest of the sheer lingerie blouses.

These embroidery blouses have, as a rule, little yokes and collars and long close cuffs of Valenciennes in sertion and lace, the line joining between embroidery and lace being covered by a little frill or ruche of the narrow Valenciennes, or by a very narrow band of plain white material stitched flatly on both edges. On the simple allover eyelet embroidery elaborate open work embroidery insertions or bands are used as trimming, with Valenciennes at throat and wrists.

The open work embroidery, though so poular, has not pushed blind embroidery to the wall. Little frocks of sheerest lawn embroidered in trailing delicate garlands, vines and blossoms, and with additional trimmisg of fine Valenciennes, are immensely chic, and the heavy raised embroideries have thier place.

Other beautiful sheer frocks are of the allover open work embroideries on sheer material, trimmed in band insertions and flouncings of corresponding embroidery, with touches of Valenciennes lace to soften the outlines and Valenciennes for guimpe and collar.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

LAPROBES NO LONGER NUISANCE.

Curiously significant is it that it has remained for a woman to devise a method by which the laprobe can be held in place while driving or sleighing. Such, though, is the immutable fact since but recently an application was filed by a Colorado woman. That the thousands who have recourse to the use of the carriage or sleigh as a means of conveyance, either for pleasure or business, have not hitherto thought of such a useful equipment to hold the laprobe in place, is the more to be wondered at. In construction this latest boon to the driver is simplicity itself, being nothing more than an arrangement of a looped strap and clasps by which the laprobe is fastened and securely held in place.

DAINTY LINENS.

Even the heavier linens have lost their tailor-made look, and are annexing the dainty prettiness of the dressmaker's mode. A Dresden blue linen is unobstrusively trimmed in white, the coat-basque fashioned with a chemisette front, the sleeve taking only one semblance of a cape-sleeve, and fascinating little basques added below the waistline. The skirt is built in three tiers, the upper one to below the knee, a scant circular volant next, and finally a full flounce, the fullness graded by fan-shaped groups of tucks. The round length is followed, just short enough to display the extremely smart shiny black kid shoe of novel cut. The parasol is of the linen with smart ruffles of white embroidery at the edge.

Burglars in France, a report says, have formed a trust. This is the real robber organization, all other combinations are counterfeits, the New York Herald declares.

COMMON HOUSE FLY

Whence He Comes and Whither He Goes.

HAROLD SOMERS M. A.

THE common house fly (Musca Domestica) is a creature of such secretive habits, that although from the very earliest times he has lived with us, and the most ancient have mentioned and described him, still very little was known of his life and history.

It remained for the eminent Boston scientist, Dr. A. S. Packard, in 1873, to first make known its origin, habits and transformations from the egg through the larva state with its two changes to the pupa state, then to the perfect fly. It is during the first of August the female fly deposits about 120 eggs of a dull, gray color, selecting fresh horse manure in which to deposit her eggs. It is estimated them that they are rarely over 24 hours, sometimes only twenty-four hours before they begin to hatch into the first form of larva, a white worm one-quarter of an inch in length and one-tenth in diameter. They feed on the decaying matter in their environment, and two changes or moultings of skins occur before they change into the pupa state; this change takes place very suddenly. The entire period from the egg to the pupa state is from three to four days. If moist food is plentiful, eating when in this condition they will not attack each other and thus decrease in number. Heat and humidity greatly assist their development, as by careful computation each pound of horse manure around stables and outhouses develops under favorable conditions over 1000 flies. It is no wonder then where these conditions exist we find such a veritable harvest of the pest.

In the pupa state when the fly is ready to emerge, the end of the pupa, case splits off, making a hole through which the fly pushes a portion of its body; but here it seems to encounter a difficulty; the pupa case is too stiff and hard to pass through, but nature comes to the assistance, and a sort of bladder like substance forms behind the head. This swells out apparently filled with air, and it acts as a means of pushing off the pupa case and releases the fly. When the fly first emerges it runs around with its wings soft, small and crumpled; it is pale and the colors are not perfect; its head rapidly expands and the bladder formation passes away—and in a few hours the wings grow hard and strong, it is now a perfect fly.

The whole time from the depositing of the egg to the perfect fly is not over ten days in duration. Many persons have observed small flies in midsummer and suppose they are the young, but such is not the case; they are flies that are perfectly nourished in the larvae and pupa states, and do not attain their full size, in fact, they are the dwarfs of their race. The male fly differs from the female in the front of the head, between the eyes, being at least one-third narrower, though in size the male is rather smaller.

In the pupa state they are often fed upon by the larvae of some of the parasitic flies, notably that of the carpet beetle, whose pupa, the dreaded buffalo bug, will attack the young fly in the pupa case and eating it possess the case for itself.

Adult flies like most other creatures have parasites of minute size that prey upon them; these can often be seen as moving small red specks over the body of the fly.

The fly hibernates in winter, but as it has usual secretive habit it is very difficult to find him in his winter quarters. With the first chill of autumn he flies feeling the cold, seeks temporary warmth in houses, and clustering in every form; bunches in the corners of walls and other places. They are very sluggish and not so active as in the warm weather. However, they do not make a permanent stay indoors, but on the first mild, sunny day, seek the windows to get out and find their hibernating winter hiding place; many prefer to make their homes in the thatch of grass on lawns where they bury themselves so effectually that the rain and snow of winter does not dislodge them in their hibernating state. With the first warm days of spring, when the snow is gone and the grass on the lawns becomes dry and warm, and before the yellow dandelion shows its head, a close observer may see numbers of flies crawling up on the grass to get the welcome sunshine. They are standing out still and motionless as they soon acquire the power to fly in the warm rays of the sun. In many days, however, elapse before they appear in the houses of men, for they are such [illegible] to other [illegible]

In recent years the medical profession have demonstrated that while the fly does not produce [illegible] one of the most insidious [illegible] disease germs which by contact are carried to his feet, hairy legs and body, thereby infecting them to [illegible] of every housekeeper could know these interesting facts which have never before been brought to their attention they would realize the importance of securing the very best fly exterminator.

COMMON HOUSE FLY

Whence He Comes and Whither He Goes.

By HAROLD SOMERS M. A. f:::

THE common house fly (Musca Domestica) is a creature of such secretive habits, that although from the very earliest times he has been with us, and the most ancient writers have mentioned and described him, still very little was known of his life and history until it remained for the eminent Boston scientist, Dr. A. S. Packard, in 1873, to work out its origin, habits and transformations from the egg through the larva state with its two changes to the pupa state, then to the perfect fly.

About the first of August the female fly lays about 120 eggs of a dull gray color, selecting fresh horse manure in which to deposit her eggs, and so secretive are they that they are rarely seen; the eggs only twenty-four hours for the larvæ to hatch into the first form of maggot, a white worm one-quarter of an inch in length and one-tenth in diameter. They feed on the decaying matter in their environment, and two changes of skin occur before they pass into the pupa state; this change takes place very suddenly. The entire period from the egg to the pupa state is from three to four days. If moist food is wanting when in this condition they will eat each other and thus decrease in number. Heat and humidity greatly assist their development, as by careful computation each pound of fresh manure around stables and outhouses develops under favorable conditions over 1000 flies. It is no wonder that where these conditions exist we have such a veritable harvest of the pest.

In the pupa state when the fly is about to emerge, the end of the pupa case splits off, making a hole through which the fly pushes a portion of its head, but here it seems to encounter a difficulty; the pupa case is too stiff and hard to pass through, but nature comes to its assistance, and a sort of bladder of a soft substance forms behind the head, which swells out apparently filled with air, and acts as a means of pushing off the pupa case and releases the fly.

When the fly first emerges it runs around with its wings soft, small and crumpled; it is pale and the colors are dull. Its head rapidly expands and the bladder formation passes away—within a few hours the wings grow hard and it is now a perfect fly.

The whole time from the depositing of the egg to the perfect fly is not over ten days in duration. Many persons observe small flies in midsummer and suppose they are the young, but such are not the case; they are flies that are perfectly nourished in the larvæ and pupa states, and do not attain any size in fact, they are the dwarfs of their race. The male fly differs from the female in the front of the head between the eyes, being at least one-third narrower, though in size the male is rather smaller.

In the pupa state they are often fed upon by the larvæ of some of the flies, notably that of the carpet beetle, whose pupa, the dreaded buffalo bug, will attack the young fly in the pupa case and eating it possess the case for its...

Air in House of Commons.

In summer time the air used for ventilating the house of commons in London passes through blocks of ice. In winter it is heated. In fog the outer air passes through layers of cotton wool six inches thick. During forty-eight hours of fog, the cotton wool on one occasion was as black as the back of a chimney. Thanks to these precautions, the house has been absolutely free from mist and the atmosphere is in normal condition while a dense fog prevails outside.

Mr. Kipling, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and a few other writers are reputed to have received something like a dollar a word for some of their writing, but this is small enough beside what was paid at an auction in London the other day for a letter by Mary Stuart. It brought $4,500, and the average per word was $3.93. But Queen Mary's letter writing was expensive. It cost her—among other things—her head and her reputation.

Railroads and Progress.

In his testimony before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce at Washington on May 4, Professor Hugo R. Meyer, of Chicago University, an expert on railroad management, made this statement:

"Let us look at what might have happened if we had heeded the protests of the farmers of New York and Ohio and Pennsylvania (in the seventies when grain from the West began pouring to the Atlantic seaboard) and acted upon the doctrine which the Interstate Commerce Commission has enunciated time and again, that no man may be deprived of the advantages accruing to him by virtue of his geographical position. We could not have west of the Mississippi a population of millions of people who are prosperous and are great consumers. We never should have seen the years when we built 10,000 and 12,000 miles of railway, for there would have been no farmers west of the Mississippi River who could have used the land that would have been opened up by the building of those railways. And, if we had not seen the years when we could build 10,000 and 12,000 miles of railway a year, we should not have to-day, east of the Mississippi, a steel and iron producing centre which is at once the marvel and the despair of Europe, because we could not have built up a steel and iron industry if there had been no market for its product.

"We could not have in New England a great boot and shoe industry; we could not have in New England a great cotton milling industry; we could not have spread throughout New York and Pennsylvania and Ohio manufacturing industries of the most diversified kinds, because those industries would have no market among the farmers west of the Mississippi River.

"And, while the progress of this country, while the development of the agricultural West of this country, did mean the impairment of the agricultural value east of the Mississippi River that ran up into hundreds of millions of dollars, it meant, incidentally, the building up of great manufacturing industries that added to the value of this land by thousands of millions of dollars. And, gentlemen, these things were not foreseen in the seventies. The statesmen and the public men of this country did not see what part the agricultural development of the West was going to play in the industrial development of the East. And, you may read the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, from the first to the last, and what is one of the greatest characteristics of those decisions? The continued inability to see the question in this large way.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission never can see anything more than that the farm land of some farmer is decreasing in value, or, that some man, who has a flour mill with a production of fifty barrels a day, is being crowded out. It never can see that the destruction or impairment of farm values in this place means the building up of farm values in that place, and that that shifting of values is a necessary incident to the industrial and manufacturing development of this country. And, if we shall give to the Interstate Commerce Commission power to regulate rates, we shall no longer have our rates regulated on the statesmanlike basis on which they have been regulated in the past by the railway men, who really have been great statesmen; who really have been great builders of empires; who have had an imagination that rivals the imagination of the greatest poet and of the greatest inventor, and who have operated with a courage and daring that rivals the courage and daring of the greatest military general. But we shall have our rates regulated by a body of civil servants, bureaucrats, whose besetting sin the world over, is that they can never grasp a situation in a large way and with the grasp of the statesman; that they never can see the fact that they are confronted with a small evil; that that evil is relatively small, and that it cannot be corrected except by the creation of evils and abuses which are infinitely greater than the one that is to be corrected."

PATH OF PROGRESS.

The horseless carriage whizzes by,
With puff and clash and slam;
Through every breath of ours may fly
A wireless telegram;
The seedless raisin on the plate
We joyfully devour;
Things are perfected while we wait—
Here comes the fadeless flower.

The coreless apple is announced;
The whipless school is here—
No scholar any more is trounced
By teacher kind and dear;
The scentless onion now is grown—
Improvement every hour
Into the scheme of things is thrown:
Behold the fadeless flower!

The jokeless comedy we see;
The tailless horse we drive;
The honey served to you and me
Comes from a beeless hive;
Buckwheatless buckwheat cakes we eat,
And gather strengthless power;—
Some new things every day we greet—
Observe the fadeless flower.

O, would they freeze some meltless ice;
Or make some footless gas,
Or furnish coal without a price—
Fate is unkind, alas!
Henceforth the maiden fair to see
Will grow reserved and sour,
And say: "Bring withered blooms to me—
No cheap old fadeless flower!"

A Useful Life.

The Hamlin family were a reading family. On winter evenings one of them always read aloud, while some of the family industries, sewing or knitting, were going on. Their Sundays were carefully guarded from all unnecessary labor and the reading was in harmony with the sacredness of the day. Every item of missionary news was eagerly sought after. When Cyrus Hamlin gave himself up to missions he resolved to eschew two things: First, money getting. He would live and die poor. Second, that he would never aim at being literary or scientific, except just so far as his work would demand. He paid over $30,000 into the treasury of the American Board. For the benefit of the American Christians who had suffered the loss of everything because of their adherence to the Christian faith, and who would be boycotted in any of the ordinary pursuits or occupations, he established a rat-trap factory and, later a mill and bread bakery. During the Crimean War his baking establishments furnished 12,000 pounds of bread for the hospitals and the soldiers in camp.

THE PULPIT.

A BRILLIANT SUNDAY SERMON BY REV. DR. NEHEMIAH BOYNTON.

Subject: The Meaning of Christian Service

Brooklyn, N. Y.—A large audience greeted the Rev. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, the pastor-elect of the Clinton Avenue Congregationalist Church, Sunday morning, to hear his first sermon in his new pulpit. The subject of the sermon was: "Christian Service." The text was from Mark x:43-44: "Whosoever would become great among you, shall be your minister; and whosoever would be first among you, shall be servant of all." Dr. Boynton said:

Jesus never questioned the proposition that it was a fine thing to be great. He had no small jealousies to nurse. But He continually emphasized the declaration that it was a finer thing to be first, and, to His thinking, greatness and primacy were not synonymous terms.

In our clumsy English it is not easy to indicate the distinction in the text between the "minister," who aspires to be great, and the "servant of all," who becomes first; it is the difference between the mere waiter, who serves with one eye on your need, the other on your tip, and the bodyguard, who has committed himself unreservedly to your interests and who is happy alike in life or death if only, like the Japanese, he can have the honor of serving the Emperor.

So Christian service is the first thing in the world; it is greater than the great thing.

The outstanding characteristic of our age has been and is the realization that the universe is one; it is God's world, it is Christ's world; that the spirit is one; it is God's spirit, it is Christ's spirit; that the Christian service means nothing less or more than taking Christ's spirit out to Christ's world and installing it. All that is involved in this mighty conception we do not yet comprehend, for "the new age stands, as yet, half built against the sky," but it is easy enough to see that the struggle of the day in presence of the mighty and impressive changes which are transforming modern life is to match the growing world and the widening universe, with a genuine, circumferential Christian spirit, putting the noblest Christian science in play "far as the course is found." Beyond this, it is equally evident that the supreme challenge to the church is to accept and to appropriate, faithfully and fearlessly, all revelations and revisions, which the many sided truth of the unity of God's universe illumines and installs, for the church will have lost her mission and her influence when she is content to be a camp follower trailing along in the rear of the advancing legions of the Lord of Hosts.

The peril of small conceptions of the superiority of Christian service is many times most imminent where His presence is least suspected. A brave and aspiring spirit will pray most earnestly for deliverance from this pestilence that walketh in darkness and destruction that wasteth at noonday. One's spiritual ability is bounded by his horizon and his service is intimately related to his sight. The soul which has settled into the comfortable conceit that the faith has once for all been delivered to the saints, that spiritual ministry for to-day is but a reproduction of the type and method of yesterday, may indeed be contented with its conclusion, but its ability to minister effectively to the present day kingdom of God is shorn of adequacy. Little conceptions make little Christians; large conceptions make large Christians. Dr. Peabody is voicing a ringing truth when he declares that a great heresy of modern Christendom is in residence in the belief that life is a ship composed of watertight compartments, in one of which we work, in another study, in another play and in another worship. The great inclusion of life, the permeating power of the divine spirit, the wideness of God's mercy, the depth of His love, the breadth of His interest, the inevitableness of His will, the absoluteness of His law, these furnish a perspective for an attentive spirit, in the vision of which the meager and petty are overlooked and the promised "wondrous things of Thy law" gleam and glisten like the flash of the harbor light against the blackness of the night!

Christian service needs the snap and stimulus of the great idea of the unity of God's world to get it in possession of its comprehensive chance, so that while we feel a kindling sympathy with the wide visioned martyr, praying as the flames licked his feet, "Lord, open Thou the King of England's eyes," it is in order for us to pray for ourselves the heroic petition, "Consider and hear me, O Lord, my God; lighten mine eyes."

If, however, the time of Christian service is related to small conceptions, the prerogative of Christian service is certainly to introduce the same to great and masterful ones, and to teach it to find its choicer fellowship as it does its mightier inspirations here.

Pilate's question, "What is truth?" is pertinent to-day. Is it a mere cunning assembling and formulation of facts? There it is a cold, inert, useless thing. Is it a glowing faith, a vital, personal, obsolute experiepce? There it is warm with a divine fire and instinct with a glowing anticipation.

Henry Drummond marked that day with a red letter when he ceased to store truth as mere propositional wisdom and began to realize it as perceptive wisdom. He declares that he had almost finished his college course before he had any other conception of Christ than that He was a theological conscience in the interests of the Trinity. But the day came when the eyes of his understanding were opened, and he came to know Christ. Not as abstract but as concrete truth. Not as related to life philosophically by a series of dreary propositions, but as implanted in his own life vitality by a personal friendship, which deepened with every trial, widened with every experience and heightened with every aspiration. Then he was recognizing truth as a spirit that Drummond began those tireless, fearless, splendid services which made more than one discriminating observer declare him the towering and outstanding Christian of his generation.

Nor will the Christian service which incarnates the truth be long beyond the quickening influences of sympathy. No man liveth unto himself and when the man tries to be always makes a sorry job of his life. "I want to have something to do with the material world," exclaimed Hawthorne, when by the long and brilliant cultivation of his imagination he began to feel his isolation from humanity. "There is nothing so horrible," he wrote to Longfellow, "in this world as to have no share in its joys and sorrows." The reason why the fingers of much that is called Christian service are all thumbs is because while much is given, little is shared! Sympathy always has something to divide, not merely something to do.

The boy Fichte had a struggle in conscience between his school books and his fairy stories. It was a great day for him! Any boy's first struggle is! But the man in the boy won the fight and in order to establish himself beyond the possibility of a lapse, he threw his book of fairy stories into the brook. His father, a precise, unimaginative, dutiful soul, saw the beautiful book floating away and proceeded to thrash his conquering boy for his wanton destruction. That is about all many fathers appear to know how to do effectively! What a wonder he did not spoil his boy! What a boon a bit of appreciation, of sympathy would have been to the suffering but victorious lad. He needed bread and his obtuse father gave him a stone! The father could do what he thought was his duty, but he had nothing to share with his boy. He was a monumental parental failure!

Large Christian service is always in quest of the joint of sympathy; it makes its alliance with what is, helping it to what it ought to be, and avoids the folly of inverting the divine order! This type of helpfulness may be meager in its ability to do, but is forever finding to its unspeakable joy that it has a boundless store to divide! Sharing sympathy is an infinitely more royal privilege than donating cast off clothing, or stale food, for "if I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, but hath not love it profiteth me nothing!"

Sympathy as an elective of Christian service forever pushes a soul on toward democracy. Surely one may confess with Lowell that while his tastes are with the aristocrats, his convictions are with the people and yet, like Lowell, he forever more and more pushed into the very heart of humanity and glory in the push, too!

The preacher who confessed to a friend that he loved to preach and who was met by the stinging, searching question, "Do you love the men to whom you preach as well as you love to preach?" felt the thrust of the sword between the joints of his harness, which sent him to his study to fall upon his knees and passionately pray that he might be delivered from his temptation to love his sermons better than he did souls, preaching better than persons. The appeal of humanity must outstrip that of homiletics.

Christian service to-day must be immersed in the democratic spirit; its mission is to humanity—humanity as represented by Ellis Island, also by Clinton avenue; by Greater New York, also by the lumber camps of Michigan. Every man is a son of God. Every woman is a daughter of God. Go, find your man; and by the shining truth in your soul, by the sympathy in your heart, by the humanity in your outstretched hand, make him believe that you seek not his, but him.

This—this alone—is Christian service! Christian service after this fashion becomes at once an interpreter. It makes a Gibraltar out of a disadvantageous position; it transforms an ordinary, commonplace ability into a shining angel of privilege and achievement. Everything counts; all things work together. Because the world is one and the kingdom one, nothing is lost, nothing trivial, nothing inconsequential! It makes a man grow tall and strong and confident to really believe the constant assurance of Christian service, that

All men ignored in me
This was I worth to God
Whose wheel the pitcher shaped.

It is to such service, broad, true, sympathetic, humanitarian, Christian, that we commit ourselves to-day; it is in such service that we expect to find our privilege and joy, and from such service that we hope to demonstrate the reasonableness of our united endeavor.

Mute Testimonies.

A little daughter of the tenements, whose mother was done at last with the work and worry that had killed her, was left at fourteen years of age with four younger ones to mother and nurse. And, faithful to her trust, she scrubbed and washed and cooked and mended, until the slender shoulders bent and the thin face grew white, and almost before anyone noticed much the little broken life lay waiting for release. "I haven't been able to do anything," she whispered to her favorite girl friend, who lived just around the corner. "I couldn't go to school because of the work, or to Sunday-school because it took all father could spare to keep the others in clothes. When the minister came to see me, he said I'd soon see Jesus, but I'm afraid I haven't done anything good, and I don't know anything to say to Him." "And you needn't try to say anything," said the other, "not a single word," kissing the pitiful little face. "When you see Him look at you, you just show Him your hands."

Just as We Are.

We have read of an artist who saw in the streets of Rome a beggar so utterly abject and forlorn that he hired him to sit for his picture, as a typical beggar. The next day he came to him, quite transformed. He had hired the clothes of a companion, in which to have his portrait taken. The artist did not recognize him; and on learning that he was the beggar he had hired, he said: "No! I hired a beggar, and him just as he was, or not at all." Christ, for a different reason, founded on the very constitution of our nature, wants us just as we are, without any effort at self-transformation, that the new creation may be "to the praise of the glory of His grace."

The Sabbath Essential.

At a service held by the department of religion at the World's Fair on a Sunday in September a Chicago Jewish rabbi made this statement: "The Sabbath is, and has been, the workingman's salvation. We may differ on the manner of its observance, but its essential importance and its Divine mission in the universal scheme of things cannot be ignored."

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR MAY 28.

Subject: The Crucifixion, John xix., 17-30—Golden Text, 1 Cor. xv., 3—Memory Verses, 25-27—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. The journey to Calvary (v. 17). 17. "Bearing His cross." All the preparations having been made the sad procession started. On the way to the place of the crucifixion it is evident that Jesus became exhausted, because of what He had undergone during the night, and sank under the weight of His cross which He was carrying. The soldiers then compelled a man from Africa, Simon, of Cyrene, who was coming into the city, to assist Jesus. "Went forth." He now goes "even unto death" (Phil. 2:8). "A skull." A bold, round, skull-like hillock; probably the ordinary spot for executions. "Golgotha." Golgotha is the Hebrew word and Calvary the Latin word.

II. The crucifixion (v. 18). 18. "They crucified Him." It was 9 o'clock in the morning, the hour of the usual morning sacrifice of which Jesus, the Lamb of God, was the great Antitype. Jesus was probably nailed to the cross before it was raised. The feet of the sufferer were only a foot or two above the ground—a fact of some weight, as showing that Jesus suffered in the midst of His persecutors. It was at this time that they offered Christ "wine mingled with myrrh" with a view to producing stupefaction. He tasted it, but refused to drink, as it would obscure the clearness of His faculties (Matt. 27:34). "Two others with Him." The two thieves crucified with Him may have belonged to the band with Barabbas. They evidently knew something about Christ. One mocked, the other prayed.

III. The title of the cross (vs. 19-22). 19. "Pilate wrote a title." It was the common custom to affix a label to the cross giving a statement of the crime for which the person suffered. In this case Pilate Himself attended to the title. "King of the Jews." Although written by a wicked Roman ruler, probably as an expression of contempt for the Jews if not for Jesus, yet it told the exact truth—Jesus was "the King of kings." 20. "Written in Hebrew." For the Jews. "Greek." For the foreigners and visitors. "Latin." For the Romans. Power, culture and piety in their noblest forms pay homage at the feet of Jesus. 21. "Then said." The chief priests felt that they and their nation were being insulted by the Roman governor.

22. "What I have written." The Roman laws forbade the sentence to be altered when once pronounced.

IV. "Christ's garments divided (vs. 23, 24). 23. "The soldiers." They were Romans, four in number. They probably knew nothing about Jesus, and were acting merely as executioners. "Took His garments." The clothes of executed criminals were the perquisites of the soldiers on duty.

24. "Rend." Which would, of course, ruin the garment. "Cast lots." Gambling was a favorite pastime of Roman soldiers. "The Scripture." The Scripture referred to is Psa. 22:18. This is one of the seven Messianic Psalms. "Fulfilled." What the soldiers did was of their own free will, but in doing what they did they unconsciously fulfilled the Scriptures. God does not control free will, but He uses it. There were seven sayings of Christ spoken from the cross. His first saying was a prayer for His enemies (Luke 23:34). His second saying was spoken to the dying malefactor.

V. Jesus provides for His mother (vs. 25-27). 25. "His mother." It is generally supposed that she was a widow at this time. She was there watching her Son and suffering with Him. "Mother's sister," etc. It is uncertain whether there are three or four women referred to here. "Wife of Cleophas." Called also Alphaeus. "Mary Magdalene." She was the first to see Jesus after His resurrection.

26. "Saw His mother." He saw and recognized His mother and arranged for her future. "Disciple—He loved." This was John, the author of this gospel. "Woman." This was a customary form of address and was not spoken with any lack of love. "Thy Son." Accept from Him the care and protection that a mother would expect from a son. 27. "Thy mother." Establishing a sympathetic bond. This was Christ's third saying from the cross.

VI. The closing scene (vs. 28-30). 28. "After this." From the sixth hour (noon) there was darkness over all the land until the ninth hour (3 o'clock). Toward the close of the darkness Jesus uttered His fourth saying from the cross: "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" (Matt. 27:46). "All things—accomplished." He had the full consciousness that His work was completed, that the prophetic words were fulfilled, and that He had now only to surrender His spirit to God the Father. "Fulfilled." "Connect this clause, not with 'I thirst,' but with the first part of the verse." All that the Scriptures had foretold had been accomplished. "I thirst." His fifth utterance from the cross. Another evidence of His humanity.

29. "Vinegar." Sour wine which we are told was the common drink of the Roman soldiers. "Hyssop." The sponge was fastened on a hyssop stalk.

30. "Received the vinegar." The first drink of vinegar and gall Jesus refused, but this, unmixed with any drug was accepted. "It is finished." The sixth saying from the cross. This is one word in the Greek and has been referred to as the greatest single word ever uttered. The work which Christ had come to do was now complete. Immediately afterward came the seventh and last utterance, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit." "Gave up the ghost." "He dismissed His spirit." He gave up His own life.

King Edward says, after inspecting the precious gem, that if he had seen the Cullinan diamond lying in the road he would have kicked it aside as a lump of common glass. What has become of that instinct of royalty that used to detect rose leaves under the mattresses and give other such tokens of superior understanding? asks the Boston Transcript.

LOMAX.

Mr. Editor:

Please allow me space to answer Mr. Jones' questions, and then I'm willing for him to close the argument, as I had the opening, and then we are ready for the decision. Yes, Mr. J., I paid $1.00 for my stock trespassing just before I left Chambers, and that is all I've any remembrance of paying during the many years I lived in stock law, and it was just and right that I should pay that dollar. I've no remembrance of saying that I came from stock law, and would move again if it came here, but I'll not deny it. I may have said it. I moved to this county during the winter of 1901, to a place near a large swamp and wilderness. This place was recommended to me as being in a good range, and of course I believe it, as I'd never had any experience in a range. I thought I'd got to a place where I could raise stock, and didn't need stock law. I bought me a sow and pigs from one of G. W. Jones' brothers, got me a herd of goats, and also paid $30.00 for a cow, by and by the time of year rolled around and I began to look for my returns from the range. The first surprise came was my pigs, they were all dead, and the sow nearly so, and my $30.00 cow giving little milk and that of a poor quality. I sold her for $16.00, as I thought it must be her fault. I bought another cow for $24.00; that had been recommended to me as a fine cow, and I tried her on the range the next year and the biggest results I got from the range was ticks, and the next year I moved to Lomax and thought I'd try the range there with my $24.00 cow, and the result was she came very near dying. Now, I fed both of these cows some, but depended largely on the range, and during those 3 years I had the poorest cows and got less milk and butter than I ever did before. An opponent of stock law said to me today that last year he would not have given me 25 cents for my $24.00 cow. This year I said to myself, I'm going to have good stock or none, and that I would not depend upon the range any longer, but just attend to my stock as though we had stock law and if my cow isn't giving more milk I'll make you a present of her, though I've been offered $50.00 for her. I've another cow that will give her first milk in a few weeks, and a man asked me a few days ago if I'd take $40.00 for her, and I said I did not want to sell. It took about three years to convince me that we hadn't any range here, and that if we wanted to keep stock that was much good we'd have to have stock law or adopt the stock law plan. Mr. Jones thinks I'm a traitor because I thought when I first moved here that stock law wasn't needed, and now after three years' experience with the so-called range, I've made up my mind that we need stock law. Mr. Jones didn't I hear you say not long since that the range here was very poor and a cow could hardly live on it, but back in the hills and on the river they have a good range? If they don't need the law in the hills and on the river, I haven't a word to say, but here in Beats 4 and 9 if the majority want it, I think they're entitled to it, and should you see that it would be best and decide to vote for it, I don't think any one would say you was acting the traitor. As to your brother's hog getting in my wheat, and his proposition to pay damages, yes, he proposed to pay me, and I told him I wanted no damages, and that in case a man wanted damages, under the present law, he couldn't get it; and then you say that is sufficient to show that if the law was so fixed, I'd charge as much as I could. I can't see why you conceive such an idea as this. Have you ever known me to overcharge any one on anything? If so, please bring them up and show me where I have and I'll gladly make it right. On the other hand, don't it look reasonable that if I was after all I could get, I'd have taken what he offered me? So can't you see that you have the wrong idea, that instead of making a point for yourself, that you made one for me? You speak of a $14.00 3-4 gallon cow. I know nothing of such an animal, but I do know that my $20.00 cow gave 3-4 gallon and even less than that while I was depending on the range. But since I became convinced that the range was no good, and have abandoned it, and given my cow the attention that I would under stock law, my cow has been giving from 2 1-2 to 3 1-2 gallons per day. I don't say there isn't any good cows in Chilton county. I've seen several good ones here, but they belong to people who don't depend upon the range as a rule. When a man has good stock he prefers to keep them up, and is in favor of stock law. The opponents of stock law will tell you to build fence, and that such and such a man is too lazy to split rails if he advocates stock law. Now I've 43 acres of land, and I know I can take 3 acres of that land and prepare it for pasture, and it would be all I'd need for my cattle. Don't you see I'd save fencing 40 acres? Can't you see where the economy is? I want to ask all of my opponents, how can an honest man contend for me to fence 40 acres to protect my crop from my fellowman's cattle? When I'd have no need of fencing if it were not for the other fellow's cattle? Can't you see you are not willing to allow me the right to do with my land as I would like? Wouldn't it look more like "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none" if we had a law requiring every man to look after his stock only, and to fence against his stock only? Hasn't Mr. Jones special privileges, as he has all of his land fenced and runs his stock on the other fellow's land during the spring and summer and shuts the other fellow's stock off of his during the remainder of the year? Let us not depart from this doctrine of "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none," but practice it in every respect. I was surprised to see that "Dad's Plow Boy" was turned against stock law, but I don't think he has acted the traitor. I heard a man say while reading his conversion that he would like to get one look at that "Boy" that would let such arguments (?) as feeding cows on pine stumps and knots and brush and other such arguments as have been set forth by Mr. Jones and others change his views. Now, "Boy," tell us the point that convinced you against stock law. I'd be glad to know just what it was. I'm willing to reason with you on the high plane of reason and sound argument. Let us stick to the subject. Would it be economy to have stock law and why it would. Or would it not and why it would not. Yours in favor of the economical laws.

Plenty of rain and grass in this community. Our Sabbath school is in a prosperous condition. Jasper Dennis has been very sick, but is improving now. Messrs. B. B., J. D. and L. L. escorted their best girls home from S. S. Sunday evening. "Don't you hear the ringing of dem bells."

ONE IN THE GRASS.

JEMISON.

Dear Union:

Just a few lines to let you know how we all are. General Green is giving us farmers a lot of trouble. It looks like the Lord is taking a hand in cutting down the cotton crop. Well, brother farmers, the stock law seems to be the issue now. I don't see as much in the law as some do, though I think it would give us better stock in our county. What is the use of keeping three or four cows when one good one will give as much milk? Stock law won't hurt me a bit, so let all the legal voters express their views in the proper way. Consider P. C. Smith's letter in THE UNION. I heard a man say the other day that a cow could be kept on one acre of land by the proper care of the land. We tend too much land now. We ought to make more stuff on less land. With best wishes to THE UNION and its many readers, yours.

T. M. DRIVER.

RANDOLPH.

The grass prospect continues fine. We think the cotton crop is reduced without the aid of organized effort, and if it should rain very much during the next few days the reduction will still be greater. There is a prospect of two more mail routes coming into Randolph. Elder Abernathy, of Prattville, was in town Saturday en route to New Prospect to hold the quarterly meeting. Mr. and Mrs. Helton attended church at Shady Grove Sunday. Mrs. Z. J. Jones and daughter spent some days in Jemison last week. Major Howison's saw mill boiler bursted Monday evening with a terrific noise, fortunately no one was hurt. Commissioner Glasscock and family were among our visitors last week. Mr. Glasscock is one of the best known officials in Chilton, having filled the office he now holds for several terms. This continued endorsement by his people speaks volumes for Mr. Glasscock and in addition to his official work for the public he has been the faithful superintendent of his Sunday school for a long time, having served in that capacity nearly all the time since 1889, having never been absent but very few Sundays from his Sunday school during all this time. E. Bearden was in town Monday. Wednesday of last week the south-bound mail from Birmingham was well filled with the girls returning home from the Montevallo Industrial school.

thur Crawford went to Kalona last week. Miss Pearl Crumpton, of Macedonia, was in town Saturday. We are pleased to note that the Union does not devote a great lot of space to non-sense. The great cause the Union represents does not subsist on non-sense. No, give us truth, common sense and facts. Quint Meroney came down Sunday on a visit to his mother and sister. Those numerous letters to the Union are interesting. "Observer, Jr.," is nice.

Editor Union:

posed to stock law. Hurrah for all its posed to stock law. Hrrah for all its opponents. The majority of Chilton people are able to split rails yet, so boys, don't let laziness overpower you. Talk about Observer's promised land as he calls it, I expect there would be a good leave the wilderness and go where there is no stock law. I'm getting plenty of milk and butter and not the blue john, either.

BIG BILL.

MARS HILL.

Editor Union:

Crops are looking nice, some of the grass is getting wilted by the hoe and plow, which every one is using every chance they get. Sunday school is progressing under our faithful supt., J. M. Gothard. Stock law is a warm subject, we're going to have a public discussion at our church soon, hope everybody will come and hear it. Scotland played Providence Saturday afternoon. Score 14 to 7 in favor of Scotland, that makes two games on Providence this season. Come again, boys.

"DAD'S PLOW BOY."

THORSBY LETTER.

Mr. Edw. O'Grady, Secretary and Treasurer of the Denison Lumber and Manufacturing Co., spent several days in Birmingham last week. Miss Susan Horn entertained a number of her lady friends in honor of her birthday on the afternoon of the 17th. Friends of Mr. Riberg sympathize with him in the loss of a valuable horse which he had purchased from Mr. A. Malmgren only a few weeks ago. Rev. Clark, who spent about one week in Thorsby, left on the 18th. He will be with us on Sunday and will speak at the college hall. Mr. P. W. Peterson entertained friends from the north on Thursday last. Several of our most prominent citizens spent several days in Clanton last week. Marion Mims has returned home from college. Several Thorsby parties were recipients of beautiful May baskets on Friday night. Owing to the inclemency of the weather we had no preaching on Sunday night. Mr. V. G. Hanson and family, who have been pleasant visitors here for many months, have returned to Kewanee, Ill. Mr. G. Berlin has just received a fine steam engine which he will use for the purpose of supplying his house with water as well as to irrigate his land. Miss Neal entertained several friends at her home on Sunday. A most elaborate supper was served in honor of Miss Howard and Miss Gerald, who will leave for the north in a short time. Mr. G. H. Gerald spent Sunday and Monday in our capital city. Mr. Sanders Ogletree, of Ensley, is visiting here. Mr. A. Horn spent Monday in Clanton. Our first shipment of peaches was made on the 22d. Before purchasing a new pair of shoes be sure to look over the new stock recently received by George Freeman, our obliging young merchant. He handles the Hamilton & Brown shoe and the wear and tear of one pair will convince you that they are the best in the market. Don't forget that Mr. Freeman serves cold drinks every day and on Saturday's he sells ice cream. Mr. S. E. Norton is still setting out strawberry plants. He will complete setting out 20 acres in a short time. The ladies' auxiliary met for the first time Tuesday in their club rooms. Mr. Johnston has returned north for a short visit.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION.

Department of the Interior, Land Office at Montgomery, Ala., May 19, 1905.

Notice is hereby given that the following settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before Clerk of Circuit Court, at Clanton, Ala., on July 7, 1905, viz.: William L. Burnett, Homestead entry, No. 33807, for the N 1-2 of Ne 1-4, N 1-2 of Nw 1-4, Section 6, Tp. 23n R 15 e.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz.:

Moses Brewer, Richard M. Porter, James L. Burnett, Charles H. Lowery, all of Cloddy, Ala.

Editor Union:

We notice in THE UNION that "Little Bill" of Center Hill wants to know the price of our hogs. Our advertisement in THE UNION says "write us for prices," but for his benefit and perhaps others, will say that we sell a single pig at $5.00, pairs at $10.00 at 8 to 10 weeks old. We have some cherry red fellows now that he would like to look at. At ten days old they weighed 15 to 16 pounds each. Mr. Editor, it seems that "Observer" is having quite a hard time. If he has no water, grass or timber, I'd suggest that he sell or give away his land and come over in West Chilton, where there is plenty of those three articles, and cows that give milk with cream in it. Over here there are hundreds, yes, thousands, of acres of land in a body where "Old Brindle" can run at will, and get her fill, without having to climb a fence. Hurrah for the opponents of stock law.

Interview With Thompson Seton.

"I cannot talk to interviewers," said Mr. Ernest Seton-Thompson-Seton.

Sadly I left the room.

Suddenly an idea struck me a heavy blow.

Bending down to the keyhole, I made a noise like a hyphen.

Quickly the door opened, and Mr. E. S.-T.-S. appeared.

"Come in," he said; "I am always glad to add to the list of Wild Hyphens I Have Met and Made Mine."

"You know," continued the great medicine man, "I can't bear human beings. The only kind I can stand are the Boy Woodgrafters, as they have been called. Now a wild animal is so respectful—distant, as it were—whereas men! Well, some men actually think that animals don't think! If such an idea became common, what would become of me, the great animal psychologist? Men are insufferable creatures. To think that they should think they can think about animals thinking when I do all the thinking the animals think!"

And with a wild, loon-like cry, Mr. E. S.-T.-S. tore his mane with his claws.—Portland Oregonian.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

We had a bunch of pleasant visitors the past few days, among whom were T. M. Driver, John Cobb, H. M. Busbey, A. E. Teel, J. L. Waldrup, Jr., T. J. McDonald, J. B. Northcutt, I. B. Martin, D. H. Hudgins, A. Z. Bean, J. B. Killingsworth and Jasper N. Glasscock.

Felix Eiland and Fate Vineo were in Clanton last week.

J. P. Cost was in town Monday.

'Squire S. E. Waldrop is a juror this week.

J. P. Robinson, a prominent merchant of Lomax, was a pleasant visitor Thursday.

Z. S. Avery was a welcome caller Monday.

A debate on stock law will be held at Lomax the first Saturday night in June, and a big crowd is expected.

W. H. Bean was in Clanton Tuesday. He says he has a mighty good mule for sale.

J. M. Robinson, of Beat 10, was in town Tuesday.

A. Horn, of Thorsby, was in Clanton Monday.

Postmastre J. Bice, of Thorsby, was in town Tuesday.

D. M. Apperson was in Clanton Wednesday on special jury duty. Mr. Apperson says his son Charlie, who was kicked several weeks ago, is improving now, though it has been a close call.

Judge Reynolds entertained Judge Brewer and Solicitor Bowling at dinner Wednesday. So far these gentlemen have won general praise from our people.

J. A. Skaggs was in Clanton Tuesday.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The first or civil week of court was a busy one, a number of cases being disposed of. The ones that attracted the popular attention seemingly were: J. M. Robinson vs. V. O. Campbell, better known as the dog case, which was an appeal from a justice's court. The decision of the justice was reversed and Robinson was awarded the dog. Mrs. Goggans, of Cooper's, got a verdict of $150.00 damages against the L. and N. R. R.. Smith & Middleton were the successful attorneys in both the above cases. The following list shows the other cases on the docket: Gregory-Coe Lumber Co. vs. Ed Daniels, ejectment; dismissed by plaintiff. Twin Tree Lumber Co. vs. G. W. Middlebrooks, attachment; continued. G. W. Middlebrooks vs. Twin Tree Lumber Co., damages; continued. W. L. Campbell vs. R. H. Martin, damages; continued. W. T. Manning vs. Jesse Wood, ejectment; dismissed by plaintiff. G. W. Crumpton, appeal; continued. L. Patillo vs. Martha S. Chandler, appeal; continued. Joseph Speigner vs. W. M. Adams, damages; continued. G. W. Gore vs. C. M. Littleton, ejectment; continued; R. M. Martin vs. Southern R. R., damages; continued. Mrs. C. A. Hill vs. L. and N. R. R., damages; dismissed. Rankin Snyder Hardware Co. vs. J. C. Dennis, debt; dismissed. A. J. Wilson vs. L. and N. R. R., damages; verdict for defendant. Geo. B. Dobson vs. L. and N. R. R., damages; continued. Lavinia Harrison and, Amanda Billups vs. Merritt and Margaret Brown, detinue; dismissed. Roberta A. Mullins vs. W. E. Bolding, note; judgment by default. The same vs. J. M. Walker, note; continued. The same vs. W. E. Christian, note; judgment by default. Tipton Mullins vs. C. M. Littleton, note; settled, plaintiff paying costs. J. W. Franzen vs. S. A. and A. S. Thorson, note; dismissed. S. A. Thorson vs. Matilda Franzen, damages; dismissed. N. L. S. Lunsford vs. L. E. Gullahorn, note; verdict for defendant. W. M. Broadhead vs. M. and O. R. R., appeal; quashed. F. A. Gulledge vs. G. F. Harris, appeal; continued. Collins & Co. vs. Thorson Bros., contract; judgment for plaintiff for $1,783.02. Frank Oden vs. Southern R. R., damages; dismissed. Milner & Kettig Co. vs. Denison Lumber and Mfg. Co., note and account; continued. City of Thorsby vs. Concordia L. and I. Association, note; verdict for defendant, plaintiff allowed 60 days to file bill of exceptions. Town of Clanton vs. E. M. Pinchard, account; settled. Elledge & Norman vs. T. A. Curry, note; judgment for plaintiff. Town of Clanton in its cases against John W. Davis, Wm. E. Lowe, Tom Howell, Will Howell, S. E. Welch and Will E. Lowe, on appeal; continued by plaintiff.

COURT SECOND WEEK.

Circuit court opened up for the criminal docket Monday. The following are the regular petit jurors for the entire week: J. M. Huff, Thos. McCormick, G. C. Kemp, S. H. Driver, E. N. Wilson, J. T. Cooley, D. S. Robinson, J. F. Anderson, W. R. Lowery, H. W. Giles, Henry Splann, D. F. Jacks, W. A. Poole, W. D. Z. Foshee, S. B. McCary, H. W. Varden, J. P. Cost, Jr., W. F. Deshazo, W. F. Maddox, R. J. Williams, Wm. Bearden, R. F. Caffee, B. L. Martin, John Cobb, R. C. Middlebrooks, H. A. J. Harris and S. E. Waldrup. Owing to the illegality of our last Grand Juries, nolle prosequis were entered in the following cases, viz.: Tompkins Littleton; Anderson Bailey; Wm. Broadhead; D. Bryant; Russell Brown; C. W. Wilson; Paul Shelton; Will Smith; John Hines; Green Williams; Critty Tyus; J. W. Fulmer, 3 cases; Henry Mallory; Henry Killingsworth, 2 cases; Oscar Martin; Onnie Martin; Sam Avery; Sam Glasscock, 2 cases; John Martin; Tom Heath; Jim Lightsey; Jake Lightsey; Charlton Armstrong, 2 cases; Alvin Lowery; Jonathan Huckabee; Joe Daniels; W. C. Robinson; Major Oden, five cases; Henry Bearden; G. A. Lundene; Henry Esco, two cases; Will Culver, 4 cases; Walter Lawrence, 2 cases; Tom Robinson; Bennett Williams; Will West; Ben James, 2 cases; Lucinda Brown; Tol Marcus, 2 cases; T. M. Cates, 2 cases; Wm. Melton; J. B. Logan; Bailey Miller; Wes Lanier; Robert Martin; Calvin J. Johnson; Oce Holmes; Tom Klinner; Frank Fuller, 2 cases; John Pearson; Ed Popwell; anders Ogletree; Wm. Jones; Cone Johnson, alias John Williams, three cases.

State vs. Lint Jones, continued; State vs. Jody Mims, dismissed and costs put on Millie Mims; State vs. George Hilson, acquitted; Tompkins Littleton, charged with "disturbing public worship," verdict of guilty, $20.00 fine. On the case of Johnson, charged with the murder of Rawlinson, being killed, he was reported as being too sick to leave the jail, but finally came into court. His counsel, Messrs. Stallings, Smith and Middleton, and W. M. Adams, then moved to quash the special venire of 40 jurors drawn for this case, alleging certain errors in dates, etc., as to the venire, and their motion was granted. Judge Brewer then ordered up the jury box and started a new venire of 50, but only ten names were in the box, so he ordered the sheriff to summons the remaining 40 from any eligible citizens of the county, and set Thursday, the 25th, as the day of trial. No other cases being set for Tuesday, the court adjourned till Wednesday morning. The Grand Jury adjourned Tuesday about 4 p. m., having been in session 8 working days. They seem to have done their duty in the premises and set a good example for future Grand Juries; Brother C. F. S. Neal. The president their report follows. It is to be hoped that the Board of County Commissioners will carry out the various recommendations without delay.

Wednesday morning the special jurors summoned for the McCullough case were on hand, but the same flaws existing as in the Johnson case, the venire was quashed and it looks now as if this case will not be tried this court term. Some months ago W. J. A. Melton, of Dixie, killed a negro for which he was committed on his preliminary trial, but habeas corpus proceedings were had before Probate Judge Deason, who let him out on $500.00 bond. This Grand Jury found a bill against Melton for "murder in the first degree" and he was arrested Tuesday and lodged in Clanton jail.

Report of Grand Jury.

To the Hon. S. L. Brewer, Judge of the 5th Judicial Circuit of the State of Alabama:

We, the Grand jury empanelled by your Honor for the Spring Term, 1905, of the Circuit Court of Chilton County, State of Alabama, beg leave to submit our final report.

We have investigated 105 cases and examined 249 witnesses, and as result thereof submit to your Honor's Court 50 true bills.

Through our several committees appointed for that purpose we have examined the offices and books of the different county officers, and the County Poor House, and find as follows: The several offices and the records required by law to be kept therein are clean and neatly kept. The inspection of the County Poor House was very satisfactory, everything that can tend to alleviate the lot of these unfortunates being done for them. We as a body inspected the county jail, and find it clean, and that none of the prisoners had any complaint to make; certain repairs necessary have already been contracted for and this we heartily approve. Looking to the best interests of our county, we would respectfully make the following recommendations:

That an addition be built to our Court House without delay sufficient to accommodate the various juries, etc., so that the necessary administration of justice may be had under fairly comfice is too small to comfortably accommodate the juries and an ordinary crowd attending court. That the Tax Assessor and Tax Collector be assigned the room in the Court House now ostensibly occupied by the County Treasurer, it being necessary to the best interests of our people that the Tax officers be near the county records.

That our Board of County Commissioners take immediate steps to put some of the older county records, as, for instance, the "Field Notes," into new and substantial books; and have the "Tract book" written up to date, that duty having been neglected for a number of years. From the Treasurer's report we find that the financial condition of our county is good.

That our Board of County Commissioners engage an expert accountant to examine into and report upon the accounts of the various county officers for the past few years with the county, the state having looked after its interests only.

We wish to thank our Solicitor, the Hon. W. B. Bowling, for the very able assistance rendered us by him at all times.

We thank your honor for the plain explicit instructions contained in your charge to us, the same having materially assisted us in performing our duty, and beg to be discharged.

Respectfully submitted,
J. W. LITTLEJOHN,
Foreman.

The Bright, Sweet Way

For all the storm and the trouble—
For all the hope and fear—
To a rosy land
Still hand-in-hand,
Let us walk the bright way, dear!

Over the hills the sunshine
And the sky is bending clear;
Out of the strife
To a glad, sweet life
Let us walk the bright way, dear!

What is a little sorrow,
And what a falling tear?
The storms will cease;
There'll be joy and peace
Going the bright way, dear!

Tuesday.

Dear Billie:—Your letter of June 26th reached me ages ago at St. Petersburg, but I have been so very busy that I have had no time for reply.

It is very good of you, I am sure, to think of me.

So you are settled in your quiet, married life. Requiescat in pace.

What a rover I have become! Now here, now there. The Wandering Jew is a veritable stay-at-home in comparison with my peregrinations, and I marvel now how I was ever content in the monotonous rut in which I lived when I loved you. That was before I knew anything of life or of men, and when you vowed you loved me and would love me always, and I believed you, how my very credulity must have bored you. Gullibility is so very unattractive—so very gauche.

You were indeed self-sacrificing to give me so much of your time, and so many of your kisses. The contact of your lips, the warmth of your caresses and the electric bond that united us constituted my heaven and I could not tell you how deeply I loved you, nor could I make sacrifices enough for you. How very bourgeois. You were very patient to tolerate me so long as you did. But then, first love is always foolishly sincere, and its very honesty and depth bring their own reward—desertion.

I see myself as I was then—half-formed, undeveloped. And how lonesome I used to be. What fool things I did and said and believed. And when you left me without one moment's warning, I wanted to throw away this life—to speed it to unknown worlds. How cruel. I know now that life is full of interest, ever changing, ever new scenes. I have run the gamut of all known emotions, and out of the conflict has come power.

Knowledge, experience, contrast—what a trinity of power. How splendid to have the world at one's feet—to chose where one was once a supplicant. This freedom, 'tis glorious. What power has a woman o'er the whole world after she has awakened. I thank you, dear Billie, for having awakened me.

Truly, it is the unexpected that happens and you wish to become a part of my life again. My cher ami, you are too late. Much too late. I have something more interesting to do just now, besides the husband of another woman can never attract me.

'Tis strange how many things come to a man after he is married. You have gained your ambition—you have married wealth and position and yet you say your heart aches, you sigh for love and that memories of happier days haunt you. I will turn counselor—marvelous the change in me, is it not?

Hearts are but encumbrances to be cast aside when ambition beckons. Do not allow your heart any hearing.

As for love. What is love? Meaningless signs relegated to femmes des chambres and valets. For people of knowledge, love does not exist.

"Dear Billie:"

As for memories, pooh, they are but the nightmares of a disordered brain. Take a tonic.

We learn all these things after the disenchantment of reality has come.

You were amused, and for two years—so you told me—what more can you ask? Amusement comes not back again, and old toys, even though they be regilded, show their dents here and there. So let the old toys remain in the dust heap of departed yesterdays.

Then trot along, Billie, dear; enjoy all the happiness and comforts marriage has brought you. Stray not back again o'er the days of old—days of lost illusions, days when we dared be sincere; days before the refinement of advanced civilization caused us to wound and wound and wound.

One is so foolish to remember. The opening of closed eyes may have caused pain at the time of the operation, but when the vision becomes clearer and the brain can analyze and contrast, we thank God for having made the operation necessary and we can forget or remember, just as we choose.

I have chosen forgetfulness. Do you likewise. Do not let remorse bother you. I had to learn and you were a very proficient teacher. I have long since written finis to our chapter, and the school books have been sold to a second-hand dealer in experience.

Memories refuse to be silenced.

I am in excellent health, thank you. Every moment of life reveals new joys. I am never ennui.

Yours very truly,
BETTINA.

Tuesday.

Dear Jack:—Days and nights have I sat here alone endeavoring to convince myself that I could grant you the wish of your heart, but I cannot.

Did I know less of love—its possibilities and its disappointments, I might accept your offer and become your wife.

"Wife." How sweet sounds the word. Time was when I would have bartered my soul for the tiny hoop of gold the few words of a priest entitled woman to wear. How I loved in those days, and I experienced those exquisite emotions revealed only to those who can love but once.

The memory of that love is upon me now. I dash away the tears that arise unbidden to my eyes. Tears, ah, dearest of friends, how scalding are the tears born of love unrequited. Memories refuse to be silenced, and some thoughts are wounds that can never heal. Go where I will, do what I will, his face is ever before me, and even though he married another, my thoughts are all of him.

I tell you this, because I know that you will understand. I feel that you love me and are sincere in your wish to try to make me happy. Would that you could, but 'tis so long since I have been happy, that I have forgot the word's meaning.

The world considers me a flirt—a coquette. I care not, but I could not bear the thought of your joining in that opinion, so I have opened the wound and now night and day shall I pay an added penalty.

In those days of love I imagined that a great love would attract and hold a great love. But I have learned the sad lesson of life. Love tarries just so long as there are sweeter depths to discover, newer delights to enjoy. Pardon me, dear friend, for my candor, but I can but speak of love as I found it.

Lord Byron knew the heart of woman. Read what he says:

"Alas, the love of woman! It is known
To be a lovely and a fearful thing;
For all of theirs upon that die is thrown,
And if 'tis lost, life hath no more to bring

To them but mockeries of the past alone.

"They are right; for man so oft unjust,
Is always so to woman; one sole bond
Awaits them, treachery is all their trust."

I am capable of but one love. For your sake I wish it were otherwise. I know what it is to love and to long for a loved one—to stretch out one's arms and to clasp thin air. But better thin air than the body of flesh, to later discover deceit and treachery.

There are other things I wish to say to you, but I cannot. These love memories strangle all other thoughts—my eyes burn and refuse to perform their duty—my hands are as ice, and I must sit here a prey to mockery of the past.

You are a man—it is given to you to forget. A woman never forgets.

I thank you for the great honor you have tendered me. May God bless you, and may you love and marry a woman who can love you as you deserve to be loved.

Yours most sincerely,
BETTINA PERCIVAL.

SPOKE AS A FRIEND.

Doctor's Invitation Had Nothing to Do With Advice.

McLaughlin likes a "wee dhrop," but he likes it often. His heart grew weaker as his thirst grew stronger. Finally there came a time when he felt the need of a doctor's advice, and so he called on one of his friends who was a physician.

He found the doctor in his study, with a cannel fire at one side and a decanter of liquor on the table at his left. The doctor reached for his stethoscope, and the patient unfastening his coat, cast an envious eye at the decanter. The test being over, the doctor placed the stethoscope on the table near the decanter, and said:

"Mac, you have a bad heart; a very bad heart. Nothing organic, my boy, but you will have to let liquor alone. That is my advice as a physician."

McLaughlin reached for his hat. His fears were realized. He tried to listen to a "good story" the doctor was telling. But he was in no humor for joking and he edged his way toward the door.

"Have a little drink before you go," said the doctor, as he poured out some of the contents of the decanter into a glass.

"What do you mean?" demanded McLaughlin. "Didn't you just tell me that if I didn't stop drinking it would be the death of me?"

"Yes, I did," said the doctor. "But that was the physician's advice. As an old friend, however, I insist on you taking a nip now and then. Here's your good health."

Mrs. Blank's Club Paper.

Ever since young Mrs. Blank joined the Mutual Culture club the prospect of some day having to read a paper there has hung like a pall over her. When, after evading her duty as long as possible, she found herself set down for a thesis on Neo-Platonism or Babism, or something equally beyond her ability, she nearly resigned from the club.

There are ways, however, of managing these things, and Mrs. Blank found one of them through the kindness of Miss Jinks, a fellow member who writes for her living. Mrs. Blank arrived at the club on the appointed day in a new gown. She had, indeed, spent the time that ought to have served to make her more familiar with her paper in having that gown fitted.

The paper, however, was neatly typed, and Mrs. Blank read it most impressively till she came to the bottom of the first page. There a word seemed to be lacking. Mrs. Blank hesitated, re-read the line, and hesitated again.

Miss Jinks popped up eagerly.

"The word is 'syllogism,'" she said.

Why He Passed.

One of Assistant Attorney General Beck's stories was especially appreciated by law students. A general in the civil war applied at the close of the conflict for admission to the bar of the United States.

A committee of three examiners reported that he had answered correctly two-thirds of the questions put to him. A judge, astonished at the general's success, asked the chairman of the committee what the questions were. "Well," he replied, "the first was, 'What is the rule in Shelly's case' and the answer was 'Writing poetry.' That was not correct.

"Then we asked him what was a contingent remainder' and a 'vested interest,' and he said he did not know. That was correct, and we admitted him.—Chicago Law Journal.

Reliance.

Not to the swift—the race;
Not to the strong, the fight;
Not to the righteous, perfect grace;
Not to the wise, the light.

But often faltering feet
Come surest to the goal;
And they who walk in darkness meet
The sunrise of the soul.

A thousand times by night
The Syrian hosts have died;
A thousand times the vanquished right
Hath risen glorified.

The truth the wise men sought
Was spoken by a child;
The alabaster box was brought
In trembling hands defiled.

Not from my torch, the gleam,
But from the stars above;
Not from my heart life's crimson stream,
But from the depths of love.
—Henry van Dyke, in The Atlantic.

Aged Minister to Carry Mails.

Rev. J. N. Crane, a Methodist minister of Flatlands, near Riverhead, L. I., has contracted with the government to carry the mails on the Riverhead-Flanders "star" route. He is nearly 70 years old. Previous to preaching there he was stationed in a small Connecticut town.

FIVE A LUCKY NUMBER.

Universal Favorite With Those Who Throw the Dice.

"Dice seems to have a fancy for fives," said a clerk in a cigar store. "We get sets of them frequently that show many more fives than any other number. We call it running to fives. The players seem to know this, and they nearly always select fives when they begin to roll. I have never seen the dice show partiality for any number other than fives, and I do not understand why this is. It is a fact, however.

"The five and six sides of a dice should be the least frequently thrown, for they are lighter, having more holes, but this does not seem to make any difference. The fives keep on coming the same.

"Of course, if one number shows oftener than another it means that the dice are not properly made; but it does seem curious that this irregularity should always make the five side come up instead of some other. Since I have been here we have had a number of sets of dice that ran to fives.

"Another peculiar thing is that nine men out of ten who roll the dice in this game choose fives or sixes. It is the rarest thing that any one takes one of the smaller numbers. It may be superstition, but if so almost all men are superstitious, for they will have nothing to do with aces or twos. And those who win almost always win with the larger numbers. Fives are the favorite, and are selected most often."—Louisville Courier Journal.

At the Captain's Table.

As the liner cleared the heads and the heavy swell of the open Atlantic became noticeable, dinner was served. The twenty-six places at the captain's table were filled and as the soup appeared the captain addressed his table companions.

"I trust that all twenty-five of you will have a pleasant trip," he said, "and that this little assemblage of twenty-four will reach port much benefited by the voyage. I look upon the twenty-two smiling faces as a father upon his family, for I am responsible for the lives of this group of nineteen. I hope all fourteen of you will join me later in drinking to a merry trip. I believe we seven fellow passengers are admirably suited to each other, and I applaud the judgment which chose from the passenger list these three persons for my table. You and I, my dear sir, are—"

The captain chuckled. "Here, steward, bring on my fish, and clear away these dishes."—Puck.

Why Women Never Age.

The women, God bless them!
They're never at rest;
Ah! resting brings rust
To corrode and molest.
They're always caressing, or pressing or dressing,
Pursuing their sewing or doing
Their best.

The women, good cheer to Their restless delight!
They shop all the day
And they dance all the night,
They always are tripping, or snipping, or clipping,
Pursuing their fadding and gadding,
But bright.

The women, God keep them!
They're truer than gold;
They're warm in the winter,
In summer they're cold.
And that is the reason, and it isn't treason,
To say why they never, ah! never Grow old.
—Horace Seymour Keller, in New York Sun.

Cortelyou's Recreation the Piano.

Postmaster General Cortelyou is one of the finest amateur pianists in the country. Indeed, at one period in his life he seriously considered making music his profession. Whenever the cares of his office have proved unusually heavy he goes to his den and sits down at the piano in the dark. Mrs. Cortelyou knows when he is beginning to forget his official troubles, for then he ceases the minor strains with which he always begins and passes to more lively music, generally finishing with a triumphant march. Mr. Cortelyou finds the same stimulus and refreshment in music that other men find in drink, drugs or long walks.

Princess of Wales as Art Patron.

The most regular visitor to the art galleries of London is the Princess of Wales, who makes a point of seeing all the proprietary exhibitions as well as the "one man" shows. The princess takes a genuine personal delight in these little visits, which are made as much for her own pleasure as for the sake of giving encouragement to the native artists. As a general rule her highness makes purchases of water-colors for the adornment of her own homes and she is a constant patron of several miniaturists, who have produced for her quite a large number of portraits of her own children.

Chinese Woman Popular in Society.

Mrs. Moy Kee, wife of a wealthy Chinese merchant in Indianapolis, is a popular figure in the most exclusive social circles of the hoosier capital. She is a mandarin's daughter and her husband is a nobleman in his own country, being a distant relative of the late Li Hung Chang. Mrs. Moy took Indianapolis by storm when she first appeared there. She and her husband have initiated many social friends into the mysteries of epicurean Chinese cookery. At one dinner they gave the menu was composed or Oriental dainties exclusively.

Greatest Living Painter of Gardens.

George S. Elgood, the English artist, is acknowledged to be the greatest living painter of gardens. He has furnished a series of fifty water colors, which are said to be the best work he has ever done. A noted operatic tenor said of them that "each one strikes high C."

"Jap" Spy System Thorough

Here is a recent story in regard to the system of espionage employed by the Japanese, says a writer in the London M. A. P., which I find in a letter from St. Petersburg published in one of the French papers.

It is a vivid picture of what these wonderful soldiers are willing to do in the interest of their country.

Toward the end of 1898 a Japanese from Kiu-Siu arrived in St. Petersburg and opened a tea warehouse on the Nevsky prospect. Shops of this kind simply swarm in the Russian capital, but all the same the Japanese prospered exceedingly. In view of the big business he anticipated at the Easter festivities during the following spring, the tea merchant got over five of his fellow countrymen as assistants. These were all extremely agreeable, tactful young fellows, who quickly ingratiated themselves with the aristocratic clientele of the shop.

But, despite the prosperity of their business, the Japanese did not seem happy. Their melancholy was noticed and at last they confessed their secret. They did not in the least mind leaving Japan; they were delighted with Russia. What they did not like was to remain foreigners on the soil of their adopted country. Their dearest wish, they said, was to become naturalized Russians, and to be admitted to the orthodox church.

The idea appealed to the democratic customers of the tea shop, and in due course they were received into the orthodox church as Russian citizens.

Shortly after this the Japanese Russians wanted to get married found families. One of the customers interested themselves in their behalf. Brides were found in the shape of pretty young Russian girls, dowries provided by subscription and the marriages ceremony duly performed. Time went on, children were born, and everything in the various menages seemed to be perfectly satisfactory, when suddenly war broke out. Two days later the Russian-Japanese teacher disappeared, leaving their families behind them in St. Petersburg society aghast. The confidence unfortunately imparted to them went to Tokyo in the hope of reports to the Japanese government, while the heroes of the tea shop, captains or lieutenants in the army, went back to their regiments.

Dives' Gifts to Charity

Once upon a time, and not so very long ago, says the New York Press, a certain rich man, whom we may call Dives, received from a certain poor man, whom we may call Lazarus, an application for the crumbs that fell from the former's table. And Dives said: "Certainly. Help yourself." And Lazarus thereafter was a frequent applicant for crumbs.

Whereupon a representative of one of the organized charities, having heard of the case, called upon Dives and remonstrated with him for his injudicious conduct.

"Why not do the thing properly?" he said. "Capitalize the crumbs and send us a check for the amount. Then refer this person Lazarus to us, and we will investigate him. We have a corps of the ablest and highest-priced investigators in the charity business. If they find Lazarus a worthy person he will get his share of whatever may be left of the crumbs after deducting the expenses of the management. It will save you a lot of bother, and if you have no objection to letting your right hand know what your left hand is doing you will see your name in the papers. Of course, if you prefer to contribute anonymously, that is your own affair."

Dives thought it was a good scheme and sent a check accordingly. Lazarus was duly referred to the organization and being investigated was found guilty of chronic aversion to manual labor and was turned down.

Dives did not contribute anonymously and in consequence was often discussions of his generosity in various public places. One plain citizen in a street car, perhaps, would say to another plain citizen:

"I should think he would contribute something! Why, he won't miss what he gave any more than I would miss a nickel for a glass of beer. He's got so much money he doesn't know what to do with it, and I suppose he has to get rid of it somehow. And what's your consider how he got it?"

The other plain citizen, not agreeing with his friend, would proceed to criticise the manner in which Dives had disposed of his money and would state that he would do if he had lots of money and was going to give away some of it.

And Dives would be in a very amiable mood and say:

"You can't satisfy some people even if you give away the earth."

Tipple of the Presidents

From the standpoint of the prohibitionist, none of the presidents has been strictly a "temperance man." Grant was fond of whisky punch and champagne. Johnson preferred Robertson county, Tennessee, whisky. Jackson drank rum, brandy, whisky or applejack.

All of the presidents up to Van Buren indulged in liquors and Madeira wine. Polk, Hayes and William Henry Harrison used liquors less than the others; yet all three knew good grog when they tasted it. The later Harrison, like Presidents Arthur and Grant, was appreciative of John Chamberlin's famous apple toddy.

Garfield was fond of fine wines and once in a while indulged in brandy and ice. Lincoln also took a "snifter" of Bourbon occasionally and enjoyed a glass or so of sherry or port. Buchanan took to Monongahela whisky and was fond of fine wines. Pierce enjoyed a glass of rum, brandy or whisky and was happy over a mint julep on a hot summer afternoon.

Arthur was a connoisseur and partook generally of all good liquors, wines. Taylor and Fillmore were of a glass of good Madeira or [illegible]

All of the presidents were good players, although Polk, Hayes, Lincoln and Johnson cared only for square meals.

Last Moments of Molière

There is a pathetic account of Molière's last appearance, which shows the supreme courage which sickness could not dissipate and which was a part of him till death. His health had long been failing and he had suffered for years with a distressing cough, which rapidly became worse. On the day of the third presentation of "Le Malade Imaginare," 1673, he was so ill that his wife and friends entreated him not to perform. But he was deaf to their appeals. "What can I do?" he said. "There are forty workmen who have only their daily pay to live upon and they will lose that if I do not act. I should reproach myself if I neglected to give them their bread for a single day."

Though more than usually ill he composed he went through his part with great difficulty. Once during the performance the company could not see that he was convulsed, but passed it off with a forced laugh. When it was over he [illegible] saying to his friends. "The [illegible] killing me." He was wrapped warmly and his chair was set [illegible] convey him to his home. No sooner was he in bed than he was seized with a violent fit of coughing which [illegible] on a hemorrhage, and he died [illegible] his wife could reach his side. His words were to assure his friends that the hemorrhage was not alarming in any way and urging them to take

The World's Beverages.

The United States leads the world in the consumption of coffee; Great Britain and her colonies lead in the consumption of tea; Germany leads in the consumption of beer; Russia in the consumption of whiskey and other distilled spirits, and France in the consumption of wines. This is the showing made by statistics just prepared by the department of commerce and labor. The United States consumed in 1904 some 961,000,000 pounds of coffee, as against 397,000,000 for Germany, 168,000,000 for France, 108,000,000 for Austria, and so on down to 29,500,000 pounds for the United Kingdom, which stands seventh. Clearly we earn our right to be called the world's greatest coffee drinkers by a wide margin. Our annual per capita consumption of coffee is 11.75 pounds, against 6.65 pounds per capita for Germany, our nearest competitor. The most striking, though natural, contrast in these statistics is afforded by the 34.73 gallons of the average wine consumption in France, and the 0.39 consumption in the United Kingdom.

Pay of a Rose Grower.

"A good rose grower—that is, one who can show good results," says a well known florist, "receives as much pay as a college professor. As a rule his knowledge has cost him about as much. By a rose grower I mean a specialist who can produce heavy-headed beauties with strong, yard-long stems. Growing roses in pots or in the open is another matter. It requires skill to grow them well, but it requires something more to show cut flowers of the quality that has some to be considered the first grade. That is a business by itself. Good rose growers get from $2,000 to $5,000 a year, and some of them receive much more, notably a few who cater to the New York market."

Oddities of the Human Body.

The two sides of a person's face are never alike. The eyes are out of line in two cases out of five, and one eye is stronger than the other in seven persons out of ten. The right eye is also, as a rule, higher than the left. Only one person in fifteen has perfect eyes, the largest percentage of defects prevailing among fair-haired people. The smallest interval of sound can be distinguished better with one ear than with both. The nails of two fingers never grow with the same rapidity, that of the middle finger growing the fastest, while that of the thumb grows slowest. In fifty-four cases out of 100 the left leg is shorter than the right.

Pistol Which Killed Lincoln.

The derringer pistol used by John Wilkes Booth in assassinating President Lincoln is in a safe in the office of the judge advocate general of the army in Washington, having been in the custody of the judge advocate general since the trial of the conspirators. This has been brought out by the recent sale in Philadelphia of a pistol with which the crime was said to have been committed. The purchaser wrote on to the war department and learned that he had been victimized.

GREAT CHANGE
From Change in Food.

The brain depends much more on the stomach than we are apt to suppose until we take thought in the matter. Feed the stomach on proper food easy to digest and containing the proper amount of phosphates and the healthy brain will respond to all demands. A notable housewife in Buffalo writes:

"The doctor diagnosed my trouble as a 'nervous affection of the stomach.' I was actually so nervous that I could not sit still for five minutes to read the newspaper, and to attend to my household duties was simply impossible. I doctored all the time with remedies, but medicine did no good.

"My physician put me on all sorts of diet, and I tried many kinds of cereal foods, but none of them agreed with me. I was almost discouraged, and when I tried Grape-Nuts I did so with many misgivings—I had no faith that it would succeed where everything else had failed.

"But it did succeed, and you don't know how glad I am that I tried it. I feel like a new person. I have gained in weight and I don't have that terrible burning sensation in my stomach any more. I feel so strong again that I am surprised at myself. The street noises that used to irritate me so, I never notice now, and my mind is so clear that my household duties are a real pleasure."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Now why was this great change made in this woman?

The stomach and the brain had not been supplied with the right kind of food to rebuild and strengthen the nerve centres in these organs. It is absolute folly to try to do this with medicine. There is but one sure way, and that is to quit the old food that has failed and take on Grape-Nuts food, which is more than half digested in the process of manufacture and is rich in the phosphate of potash contained in the natural grain, which unites with albumen and water—the only three substances that will make up the soft gray filling in the thousands of delicate nerve centres in the brain and body. Grape-Nuts food is a true road back to health in all such cases.

ITCHING SCALP HUMOR

Lady Suffered Tortures Until Cured by Cuticura—Scratched Day and Night.

"My scalp was covered with little pimples and I suffered tortures from the itching. I was scratching all day and night, and I could get no rest. I washed my head with hot water and Cuticura Soap and then applied the Cuticura Ointment as a dressing. One box of the ointment and one cake of Cuticura Soap cured me. Now my head is entirely clear and my hair is growing splendidly. I have used Cuticura Soap ever since, and shall never be without it. (Signed) Ada C. Smith, 399 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Troubles of Translators.

The difficulty of avoiding "howlers" when one is translating from English into such a language as that of the Micmac Indians of Nova Scotia must be very great, says the London News. We hear from the Bible Society of a curious case. In the first edition of St. Matthews in Micmac the translator found, when he came to revise it, that in chapter xxiv., 7, instead of "Nations shall rise against nations," he had written, "A pair of snow shoes shall rise up against a pair of snow shoes." And yet there was only one letter misprinted—nacoktukumiksijik (a nation), having been misplaced by nacoktakumiksijik (a snow shoe). If the Micmacs have a word that long for "nations," what a mouthful their word for "empire" ought to be! But probably they haven't any word for it. It would be of no use to them, for they are a small people and probably ardent nacoktukumiksijikalists to a man.

Climate and Good Voices.

Some one asked Caruso why there were so many more good Italian tenors than American. He thought for a moment and then replied: "It is, I think, largely the climate. Every little village in Italy is full of good voices. But it is also the language, in which the vocal cords are used more easily as they should be. Of course there is no reason why English should not be spoken as naturally as Italian, but it is not. In fact, there are not more good singers in Italy than there are elsewhere. There is only more good material. Good singing is a matter of brains and cultivation everywhere."

For the first time in history, it is said, one of the pyramids has been struck by lightning. A Great Combination Offer!

THE UNION and "MADAME" Offer You

$6,000.00 IN PRIZES

MADAME is a magazine for women who think and is the only magazine in the world endorsed by OVER THREE MILLION WOMEN, being adopted as the Official Organ of the National Council of Women. It is full of bright stories, clever articles on art, music, literature, with beautiful pictures galore.

TEST OF SKILL. This is not a lottery, guessing or estimating contest. It is absolutely a test of skill. There is no trick or deception about this, whatsoever. The dots are visible to the naked eye and can be counted. If you can count the dots correctly and give a good plan of counting them you should win. Your chance of winning is as good as any one's.

Money must accompany all subscriptions otherwise your count will not be registered. If you are now a subscriber to either paper your subscription will be extended.

If this map gets destroyed, another printed on heavy paper will be sent you upon receipt of 2 cent stamp for postage.

$50.00 IS OFFERED AS A SPECIAL PRIZE TO THOSE SENDING IN THREE COUNTS (SEE CONDITIONS)

A TOTAL OF 757 PRIZES

CONDITIONS—$1.00 pays for six months to MADAME and six months subscription to THE UNION and entitles you to 1 free count. $2 pays for one years subscription to Madame and one year's subscription to THE UNION and entitles you to three free counts and makes you eligible for the $50.00 prize given to winners of the first prize if they have three counts. See below.

$50.00 PRIZES—We believe every one should have three counts so they can have one on each side of what they think is correct, to be more sure to hit it. To encourage this we will give $50.00 extra to winners of first prizes if they have three counts. Remember if you have one count you get first prize ONLY, BUT IF YOU HAVE THREE COUNTS AND WIN YOU GET $50.00 EXTRA,

AWARDS will be made as follows: The person giving correct or nearest correct count will get first prize. Next nearest correct, second prize, etc. In case of a tie for any prize it will be awarded to the person giving best plan for counting dots.

JUDGES. The awarding of prizes will be wholly in the hands of disinterested judges. The Hon. John W. Holtzman, Mayor of the City of Indianapolis, is chairman of the Committee of Judges. We are bound our contests must be ABSOLUTELY FAIR.

OUR FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES—As to whether we are abundantly able to do as we say, we refer to any bank or trust company in the city of Indianapolis. Our offer will be carried out to the letter

In the event of more than one person submitting the same plan and it being considered the best plan by the judges each person so tying will be asked to tell in fifty words how best to improve MADAME. The one making the best suggestion gets first prize, next best next, etc. UNDERSTAND THIS IS ONLY IN CASE OF TIE IN PLAN, WHICH IS NOT AT ALL LIKELY. No one connected with Madame or The Union will be allowed to compete. Contest closes July 1, 1905, but get your counts in at once. Anybody having THREE COUNTS entered may enter additional counts at 25c each. Be careful to give your plan of counting, as the best plan used will decide all ties.

PRIZES GUARANTEED—We will guarantee to give a prize worth one dollar at least, to every person who sends a correct count and $3.00 for a year's subscription to Madame and The Union.

THE DOTS—Good counters can coin dots into dollars. The contest will not last long. Make hay while the sun shines. There is fun in counting and money besides. Of course, you know how to count. Any child can count. The dots are puzzling because there are so many. That is why $6,000 in prizes will be given away free to the best counters. The better you count and plan, the better your chances for getting one of the 757 Prizes.

The more counts you register the surer you are of winning one of the big free prizes. Anybody having three counts entered may enter additional counts at 25c each.

The list of prizes is large. They are worth working for. You have 757 chances. You are as likely as anybody to get first, but if you don't get first prize there are lots of other prizes worth having. It all depends upon you. If you can count and think up a good plan you are likely to win.

PRESIDENTS IN RETIREMENT.

Only Ten Have Lived Longer Than Mr. Cleveland After Leaving Office.

Only ten men who have held the office of President reached or surpassed Mr. Cleveland's present age of 68; only six exceeded it by so much as ten years, and none exceeded it by quite twenty years. Only ten Presidents have survived their retirement from office longer than Mr. Cleveland, and four of these lived to a great age.

Washington, who survived his retirement less than three years, thought himself an old man when he was first made President at the age of 57. John Adams survived his retirement a quarter of a century, and his son, John Quincy, who outlived his retirement nearly twenty years, was the only President who had nearly as conspicuous a public career after occupying the Presidency as before.

Monroe's six years after his retirement from office were passed in comparative obscurity as a resident of this city, and his dying hours were embittered by scandalous accusations in connection with Jackson's seizure of Spanish forts in Florida during the first Seminole war.

Polk outlived his retirement less than a year, and there is every reason to suppose that had Arthur compassed his ambition of an election to the Presidency in 1884 he would have died early in his term, for he outlived his retirement less than two years.

Tyler, who outlived his retirement twenty years, emerged from obscurity near the end of his life to preside over the vain peace convention on the eve of the Civil War. He afterward served in the Congress of the Confederate States.

Buchanan lived more than seven years after his retirement, and took the opportunity to write what was in effect a defense of his administration.

Jefferson and Jackson were the only Presidents who exercised a really powerful influence over party councils after their permanent retirement from public office, though Van Buren was an active politician as long as he had hope of renomination at the hands of any party.

Johnson was the only retired President to enter the United States Senate, and the younger Adams was the only one to serve in the House of Representatives.

Cleveland and Harrison have been the only retired Presidents to be conspicuously successful in private business. It is not generally known that Mr. Cleveland still serves as consulting counsel in law cases, in which his experience in the office of President may be supposed to have given him special qualifications as an adviser. His fees in such cases are large, as were those of Mr. Harrison as a legal adviser and a lecturer on constitutional law.

Deer, Trolleys, Cows.

Farmers, among others living along the line of the Berkshire street railway between Coltsville and Cheshire, report a large number of deer during the last few months, and the animals in several cases herding with cows.—Pittsfield correspondence of Springfield Republican.

The Poor Idle-Rich

By Henry Waterson.

The millionaire, whether he has a title or not, must follow the fashion if he would keep in the swim; and to keep in the swim is the objective point. For him the year is subdivided, laid out in regular parterre, like an Italian garden, and he must even fulfill his destiny as a gentleman of wealth and leisure; the world to him six seasons—Paris, London, Switzerland, the shooting box in Scotland, the country house in England, the south of France. He buys a palace, lives in it awhile and goes away. "So awfully dreary, doncherknow." He buys a yacht, tires of it, sells it and buys another. "Nothing like the water, doncherknow." The automobile craze caught him where he was weakest—for fast, fast, faster is the word—and he is now scudding and scorching over Continental byways, having found a new and costly toy—which perhaps accounts for some of the absentees from Nice. In a word, fortune's favorite is never happy except when he is giving proof that he can spend more money than his rival, yet wretched when he finds how little it brings him either of distinction or diversion.

To tell the truth, the women get on much better than the men. They still love to dance. It shows their faces. It parades their gowns. The men despise dancing. "Too fatiguing, doncherknow." It is so much easier to gamble and to flirt. Your professional beauty, on the other hand, has a deal to engage her—herself, to begin with; then clothes; then diamonds; ropes of pearls, and, finally, the men. If hard put to it, she can amuse herself of a rainy afternoon before her looking-glass; selfish and vain, and a philosopher. When the men are tired of one another or get broke they will come after her. She knows that, and she knows them—only too well. She has learned all their tricks and their manners, and can talk slang and scandal with them, smoke and drink with them, and often beat them at bridge or bacarrat.

For my part, I would embezzle no man of his happiness; not even his money; though sometimes I want to take one of these blase youngsters of two or three and twenty, who fancies he knows the world, and that outside the titles and the dollars there is nothing in it, and tell him what an ass he is, and put him in a Keeley cure for simpletons.

The British war department is alarmed at the horse outlook. The development of the auto is diminishing the horse-breeding business, the class of horses demanded for war purposes is deteriorating, and foreign purchasers are draining the available supply.

The farmer does not know his power and seems slow to recognize his importance, declares Up-to-Date Farming. These will both dawn upon him one of these days—in fact, he has recognized them already, and then he will take his proper position among the people of the world—will come to the front.

Human nature is much like it was centuries ago, when the poet wrote of the very rich of the Augustan era of Rome: "The covetous man is always in want." He is in want, he has the longing of the beggar, though he is the possessor of tens of millions. And thus did Horace, ignorant perhaps of the Sermon on the Mount, picture in satire a trust magnate of the American republic of our day, relates the Washington Post. Solomon would have added some of our trusts to the things that "say not it is enough," if they had existed in his day.

An Austrian statistician publishes the results of curious examinations he has made as to the frequency of crime on the several days of the week. His investigations extended over several years and several provinces of the Austrian Empire. Of the 723 cases examined this is the result: Sunday, 254; Monday, 125; Tuesday, 69; Wednesday 62; Thursday, 62; Friday, 48; Saturday, 103. On Sundays, continues the New York World, when public houses are most frequented and most alcohol is consumed, most crime occurs; on Monday people are still under the influence of their Sunday potations, and the number recedes until Saturday, which is pay day. Saturday does not reach the figures of Sunday because the public houses are frequented only in the evening.

Contrary to the experience of Chicago and Buffalo after their expositions, St. Louis, to quote The Globe-Democrat, "has a building boom, a boom in postal receipts and a business boom generally." As one of the incidents of this booming spirit and the rejuvenation of the city by the big bridge, a Million club has been organized, whose object, as its name implies, is to increase the population of the city to the million mark, and the time limit set for this accomplishment is that of the next decennial census of the United States, says the New York Tribune. To achieve this aim, which seems a desirable thing to ambitious and enterprising St. Louis people, The Globe-Democrat says only two things are necessary: "Make the advantages of the city known and make the city worthy of its advantages."

Commandant Jan Louw, the Boer officer, who refused to lay down his arms when his fellow-countrymen surrendered to the British, and who fled to the Longberg mountains on the borders of German West Africa with his band of burgher fighters, has been successfully resisting the combined English and German forces in South Africa for more than two years. In June, 1902, when the Boer army capitulated, Louw fled with only about 300 men. Within the first year, however, this number was increased to 2000, and today he is said to have a combined force of 8000 sturdy warriors under his command. Many Boers still believe that their country can be reclaimed, and many of them look to Louw as the man who will start the next rebellion, the Argonaut states. There exists an understanding among the Boers and their sympathizers that the next uprising will be in 1906, and it is also stated that 15,000 men have agreed to respond to the commandant's call.

King treasurer and general [illegible].

Murdered and Robbed.

Woodlawn, Ala.—Isaac Whitten Walker, a prominent citizen of Woodlawn, was held up, robbed and shot to death at 12:30 o'clock Friday morning within twenty yards of his home, on Fifty-fourth street.

His body was found in a pool of blood near where he was shot. The indications are that Walter resisted the highwayman and fired one shot at him. A desperate struggle ensued, the man who fired the fatal shot escaped, leaving his revolver and cap near the victim, taking with him the dead watch and a sum of money from the body of the deceased.

Aged Man is Beaten to Death.

Opelika, Ala.—A special from Auburn says: Edgar Hurt, an almost helpless old man was cruelly beaten to death in his own yard here about 9 o'clock Wednesday night.

Mr. Hurt made his home with the family of his brother, Walter, and last night about 9 o'clock stepped out in the back yard. Soon a groan was heard and a brief search discovered Mr. Hurt with his skull crushed in by blows on the head over the right eye. He was tenderly borne to the house. Suffering and anxious friends begged him to tell them who had done the deadly deed.

Opposed to Foreigners.

Decatur, Ala.—The Business Men's league at an enthusiastic meeting here has denounced in resolutions the plans of flooding the South with foreign immigrants. The resolutions set forth that white labor is badly needed in the whole Tennessee river valley of North Alabama, the farmers are opposed to the promiscuous importation of [illegible] and uneducated foreigners. The resolutions call for men from the North and Northwest to come South instead of going to Canada and that the settlers will be welcomed with open arms.

Serious Shooting Near Hobson.

Vernon, Ala.—Last Sunday evening [illegible] shooting took place near Hobson, on the Southern railway, in this county. It seems that [illegible] got into a quarrel when [illegible] Williams shot Mr. Dock Young. Mr. Young died Tuesday morning from the wound. The parties all lived near Hobson and had formerly been good friends. The particulars of the tragedy are not given. Mr. Williams left soon after the shooting and is still at large.

Injured by a Train.

Birmingham, Ala.—Friday morning [illegible] was run over by a train at Keener station on the Georgia Southern railroad. His left arm is badly crushed, and it is thought amputation will be necessary. He was brought to the city, and by the Gaudin Undertaking Company's ambulance and taken to St. Vincent's hospital, where arrangements had been made for his reception.

Receiver Appointed.

Cincinnati, O.—H. P. Boyden, former city auditor, was appointed receiver for Holseman & Co., bankers and brokers, Friday by United States Judge Thompson, bond being fixed at $50,000. While no regular statement has yet been issued, Mr. Holseman says the firm's liabilities are about $[illegible], and that the firm can eventually pay all claims in full.

Change of Venue Denied Williams.

Cullman, Ala.—The change of venue asked in the Williams murder case was refused. Court will convene Tuesday morning, when the case will be taken up again.

Stores Are Flooded.

Gadsden, Ala.—The heaviest rainfall known in this section of the country fell in Attalla late Thursday afternoon, which flooded the streets, stores and churches, drowned hogs and did considerable damage to stocks of goods. The rain fell in torrents for an hour and all the stores on Fourth street were flooded to a depth of a foot or more, while the basement of the new Methodist church was badly flooded. Both Wills and Black creek are out of their banks, and Coosa river rose over five feet in a short time and is still rising.

From Ball Play and Ewing's mill comes news of a fearful rain, and the farmers state that what crops they had up are ruined. The rainfall in this section the past three weeks has been the heaviest known for years, and the farmers are far behind. Very little cotton has been planted, and it is now too late to put in any more, consequently the cotton crop in this section will be greatly reduced.

New Cocaine Ordinance.

Ensley, Ala.—The judiciary committee of the board of aldermen and city attorney, Capt. Romaine Boyd, held a meeting last night and prepared an anti-cocaine ordinance which will be up for adoption at the next meeting of the council on June 1st.

There is barely any chance of its failure to become a law, as the need for some sweeping ordinance has been noted a long time. The board worked on the cocaine evil for some time last year, but no real good has been accomplished. The increase of the evil among the large negro population of the city has caused the council to adopt stringent laws. The new ordinance will prohibit the sale of cocaine in the city and a violation of the ordinance will result in a very heavy fine.

Runaway Accident.

Cullman, Ala.—In a runaway Thursday afternoon about 6 o'clock, near Logan, a small town in the western portion of this county, Dr. B. M. Kinney, leading druggist at this place, was badly bruised up and a Mr. Dunwoody, traveling representative for Parke, Davis & Co., of New Orleans, had the misfortune of having his jaw broken and otherwise seriously injured.

The two gentlemen mentioned were out on a business trip and were driving at a rapid rate down a hill to avoid a heavy and fast approaching rain, when the horse became frightened, ran away and smashed the vehicle to pieces. At present the injured parties are resting easy, and while their injuries are exceedingly painful neither is likely to prove fatal.

Money Subscribed for Bridge.

Decatur, Ala.—Almost all of the subscriptions for stock in the new wagon, electric railway and foot bridge has been raised, and the people here are now waiting for a representative of the bridge people to come here to close up the matter and start to work. There is some talk of building an electric railway to Huntsville, twenty-five miles east of this city, on the Southern railway.

Lost An Arm By Accident.

Cullman, Ala.—By an accidental discharge of a gun Thursday afternoon a young man by the name of Herman Warnkey, living two miles north of this place, lost his right arm just above the elbow. The young man was out hunting and had set his gun up against the fence and rested his gun arm on the rail, when through some cause the weapon discharged with the above result.

Fertilizer Factory Increased.

Florence, Ala.—At a meeting of the directors of the Tennessee alley Fertilizer Manufacturing Company, at East Florence, the enlargement of the plant was decided upon and steps will be taken immediately to increase its capacity 300 per cent. The old Florence Roller Company's plant adjoining the fertilizer factory has been purchased and to this large brick building additions will be made. The fertilizer factory will be one of the largest in the state.

Married at First Sight.

Decatur, Ala.—Having never seen each other before their wedding day, William C. Holland, of Arlington, Washington state, and Mrs. Belle Parish, of Wright, Morgan county, have been married at the home of the bride. Courtship was carried on solely by mail. After an exchange of photographs, the groom came 3,000 miles to claim his bride. They will return to the Pacific coast.

FLEET ANNIHILATED.

In a Desperate Battle in the Korean Strait, the Russians are Bodily Defeated.

THREE THOUSAND PRISONERS.

Captures Rear Admiral Nebogataff. Nineteen Warships Are Captured or Sunk. Gloom in Russia.

Washington, D. C.—A cablegram received here from American Minister Griscom, at Tokio, dated Monday, great victory. It says Admiral Togo reports that the result of the fighting of the fleets Saturday afternoon and evening were one battleship of the Borodino class sunk, and four other large vessels sunk, and two or three more vessels captured. All the large vessels of the Japanese fleet escaped injury.

Washington, D. C.—According to advices received by the navy department from Tokio the Japanese, in addition to the ships already named, captured the Russian battleship Sissoi Veliky, and the Russian flagship was seriously damaged.

Flower of Russian Navy Sunk.

Tokio.—In the battle fought Saturday in the Straits of Korea the Russian battleships Borodino and Alexander III, the armored cruisers Admiral Nakimoff, Dmitri Donskoi and Vladimer Monomach, the coast defense ironclad Admiral Oushakoff, the protected cruisers Svietlana and Jemotchug, the repair ship Kamtchatka and the cruiser Irtessin were sunk.

The battleships Orel and Nicolai I and the coast defense ironclads Admiral Seniavin and General Admiral Upraxine were captured.

The Borodino was a first-class battleship, completed in 1904, of 13,516 tons displacement and 16,000 horsepower, giving her a speed of about 18 knots. She had an armored belt of from four to nine inches of Krupp steel and from six to ten inches of armor over her gun positions and bulkheads. Her armament consisted of four 12-inch guns, twelve 8-inch guns and over forty small and rapid-fire guns. Her crew numbered 740 officers and men.

The Alxeander III was a sister ship of the Borodino and was also completed in 1904.

The Admiral Nakimoff was an armored cruiser of 8,524 tons displacement and 9,000 indicated horsepower, giving her a speed of sixteen knots. She had eight inches of compound armor over her gun positions, carried eight 8-inch guns, ten 6-inch guns and about twenty smaller rapid-fire guns. She had a complement of about 567 officers and men.

Dmitri Donskoi.

The Dmitri Donskoi was an armored cruiser of 6,200 tons sheathed, of 7,000 indicated horsepower, and having a speed of about sixteen knots. She had an armored belt six inches thick and had ten inches of armor over her bulkheads and heavy gun positions. Her armament consisted of six 6-inch guns, ten 4.7-inch guns and sixteen quick firing guns. Her crew numbered 510 officers and men.

The Vladimer Monomach was a sheathed cruiser of 5,593 tons and 7,000 indicated horsepower. She was completed in 1885, had a belt of compound armor six to ten inches thick, a protected deck of two inches of steel and carried five 8-inch guns, twelve 6-inch guns and eighteen quick-firing guns. Her crew consisted of 550 officers and men.

The Admiral Oushakoff, a coast defense ironclad, was of 4,649 tons displacement and 5,000 indicated horsepower. She was completed in 1895, had an armor ten inches thick, a protected deck of three inches of steel, and from seven to eight inches of armor over her heavy gun positions. Her armament consisted of four 9-inch guns, four 6-inch guns and six 1.8-inch guns, in addition to a number of smaller rapid-fire guns. Her speed as estimated at sixteen knots, and she carried 318 officers and men.

The Svietlana was a protected cruiser of 3,862 tons displacement; had 3,828 indicated horsepower, was completed in 1897 and had a speed of about twenty knots. She had a two-inch protected deck of steel and four inches of armor over her gun positions. Her armament consisted of six 5.9-inch (Canet) guns and ten 1.8-inch guns. She had a complement of 360 officers and men.

The protected cruiser Jemotchug was of 3,106 tons displacement and 17,000 indicated horsepower, giving her a speed of about twenty-three knots. She was completed in 1903, had a protected deck of two inches of steel and carried six 4-7-inch guns, six 1.8-inch guns and two 1.4-inch guns. Her crew numbered 340 officers and men.

The Repair Ship.

The repair ship Kamtchatka was a most important unit of Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet. She is understood to have been fitted up with every scientific appliance available for the repair of warships, and was described as being a "floating work-shop." She was launched at the new Almiralty yard, St. Petersburg, November 1, 1902. She was of 7,200 tons displacement, was capable of carrying 3,500 tons of coal and mounted six small quick-firing guns. She had transportation accommodations for thirty-two officers and 1,000 men.

The Irtessin was probably an auxiliary cruiser, but her name is not given in any of the naval lists available.

The battleship Orel is a sister ship of the Borodino, and carried the same complement of officers and men.

The battleship Nicolai II is of 9,672 tons displacement and 8,000 indicated horsepower, giving her a speed of about fourteen knots. She is sheathed, and although completed as far back as 1892, was thoroughly overhauled in 1900. She has a compound armor belt four to six inches thick, has a steel protected deck two and one-half inches thick and has six to ten inches of armor (compound) over her gun positions. Her armament consists of two 12-inch guns, four 9-inch guns, eight 6-inch guns and twelve quick-firing guns, in addition to a number of small rapid-fire guns. Her complement is 604 officers and men.

The coast defense ironclad, Admiral Seniavin, is a sister ship of the Admiral Oushakoff.

Annihilated.

Tokio.—It is officially announced that Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet has been practically annihilated. Nineteen warships have been sunk or captured, and two transports and two torpedo boat destroyers have been sunk.

Nebogatoff Captured.

Tokio.—Rear Admiral Nebogatoff (former commander of the fourth division of the Pacific fleet and recently commander of the information squadron, composed of scouts and merchantmen), with 3,000 other Russians, is among the prisoners captured by the Japanese. Vice-Admiral Rojestvensky appears to have escaped.

The battle began Saturday morning and the Japanese are still in pursuit of the Russians.

Many Sunk.

Washington, D. C.—An official telegram from Tokio states that Admiral Togo reports to his government that the total losses sustained by the Russian fleet Saturday and Sunday were: Two battleships, one coast defense armor clad, five cruisers, two special service ships and three destroyers—all sunk. In addition there were captured two battleships, two coast defense armor clads, one special service ship, one destroyer and over 3,000 prisoners. Admiral Togo adds that the Japanese squadron was undamaged.

Eight Captains Drowned.

London.—A dispatch to the London Evening News from Tokio says eight captains of Russian warships were drowned during the naval battle of Saturday in the Straits of Korea.

Despair Settles Over Russia.

St. Petersburg.—At the admiralty Monday absolutely nothing was known of the naval battle in the far east except the news contained in the dispatches of the Associated Press. The general impression produced by the cable message undoubtedly was extremely gloomy. While Admiral Rojestvensky was expected to pay the price for reaching his haven at Vladivostok, the complete loss of two of his four best battleships, besides several other warships, with heavy damage to other ships which such havoc indicates, is admitted to spell disaster unless the Japanese suffered correspondingly. For this reason news from Vladivostok, where the first communication with the Russian fleet will be established, is awaited with intense anxiety. The admiralty calculates that wireless communication with Vladivostok may be established as early as this afternoon or tonight, but as all dispatches must first go to the emperor, the news is not likely to reach the public until tomorrow. It is a matter of general comment that the most reliable information received up to the time the official announcement was sent out from Tokio came by way of Washington.

Used Torpedoes.

Some of the foreign press dispatches were very confusing, but everything seems to indicate that Togo delivered a series of desperate torpedo attacks during Saturday night with the support of his heavy ships. The reported sinking of so many ships, it is believed, might also be partially due to mines sown ahead of the advancing Russian columns. The belief is also strengthened that Rojestvensky was forced, in order to secure homogeneity in speed and fighting power, to divide his fleet, only a single division passing the straits of Korea, the other going around Japan. The Straits of Korea division, however, evidently included the pick of the Russian fleet, the Borodino and Orel being two of the four best battleships. It is possible that Admiral Rojestvensky transferred his flag from the battleship Kniaz Souvaroff to the Borodino or Orel before the fight, in order to prevent the concentration of the fire on his own ship. Captain Sreberlanikoff, of the Borodino, and Captain Ignitieff, of the Orel, are regarded as extremely capable officers.

Black Pessimism.

Owing to the decision of the newspapers to suspend Monday publications, only telegrams are being printed on fly sheets. The Novoe Vremya alone comments editorially on the battle, under the caption, "The Hour of Fate Has Struck." The paper says:

"Russia has been reproached with putting too much trust in God, sending too many ikons to the war and not enough men. The result is now, in the language of the Americans, in the hands of 'the men behind the guns.' We Russians will be patient until the full results are known."

Black pessimism reigns among the public.

Victory Is "Overwhelming."

Washington, D. C.—Mr. Takahira, the Japanese minister here, has received a cablegram from his government relating to the naval engagement of Saturday and Sunday, which, he said, while lacking in detail, conveyed the information that the Japanese victory had been "absolute and overwhelming."

Judge Randolph Killed.

Montgomery, Ala.—Judge Francis C. R. Randolph, former probate judge of this county, was shot and killed Saturday afternoon by his cousin, John Randolph, in front of the latter's office. Two shots were fired from a pump gun, both taking effect. One went in the heart and the other in the neck. Either would have proven fatal. John Randolph was arrested and is now in jail.

It is understood by the friends of John Randolph that the judge had threatened his life and rumor has it that he has been living in dread of trouble for several weeks, if not months. One rumor is to the effect that Judge Randolph had written John Randolph, of whom he had demanded $500, saying that he would call on him for it and if he did not get it he would know the reason why.

This afternoon he called at the time appointed and when he made his demand with threats John Randolph drew his pistol. The judge began retreating from the office, attempting at the same time to draw his pistol. As he reached the sidewalk John Randolph fired twice, both balls taking effect. John Randolph refuses to talk.

American Yacht Won.

The Lizard, Eng.—The American yacht Atlantic was the first to cross the line in the great international race across the Atlantic ocean. As the Atlantic passed the line south of The Lizard lighthouse, at 9:15 p. m. Monday, a gun was fired from the German cruiser Pfeil, the stakeboat which arrived early in the evening, while rockets were sent up from Lloyd's signal station and fog horns were blown at the lighthouse.

Choate Says Farewell.

London, Eng.—Mr. Choate, the retiring American ambassador, and Mrs. Choate called at Buckingham palace to bid farewell to the king and queen. The visit was made at the special request of their majesties, who desired to say good-bye to Mrs. Choate as well as to the ambassador.

Two Kentuckians Killed.

London, Ky.—News reached here from Otter Creek, Clay county, that A. E. Ewars and Thomas Frederick were killed in a fight over the rent of a house. Ewars shot and killed Frederick, whereupon James Jackson, a son-in-law of Frederick, shot Ewar through the heart. All parties are prominent and a feud is feared.

The Willow

Willow, leaning with your fingers
Soft on face that never lingers,
Ever changing, ever flowing
To a bourne beyond your knowing;
Bending joyfully yet plaining,
As you wooed him to remaining
With the aspect of the minute
You caress, forever in it!
Willow lithe, you seem to capture
Passion in its utmost rapture,
All the joy of lover's presence,
All the charm of evanescence!

A PLAN WITH TWO EDGES

BY J. C. PLUMMER

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"You see," said John Pegley, "luck is dead against me. I've had it on my tongue's end to ask Miss Phipps to marry me for six months. I've polished up the words so that I'm sure she would say 'yes,' if she could only hear 'em, but I can't get a chance. The moment I get alone with her and get my mouth open to say those words some one always breaks in, either her mother or that fool Dempsey who's dangling after her."

"Why don't you write 'em and send 'em by post?" asked the Captain.

"Because they were made up to be spoken, and it took six months nearly to get 'em together. They wouldn't go well written. They must be spoken."

"There never was a head wind," remarked Captain Holly, impressively, "but what, with a right handlin' of the braces and the wheel, some sort of progress can be made. I can rig a plan to have those words of your'n spoke as easy as twistin' a line over a belayin' pin."

Mr. Pegley looked at his friend admiringly.

"Now," said the Captain, "suppose I ask Miss Nora Phipps to go sailing in my boat down to Crane Island. She'd go in a minute, for no one has a better boat in the harbor. Suppose, as we go down to the boat, we should happen to meet you and ask you to go along. When we gets to the Island I may walk up and look at the rocks, and you and Nora could walk along the beach—"

"Captain!" cried Mr. Pegley, "you're a genius."

"My conscience isn't clear, my lad," retorted the Captain. "I'm no marryin' man myself, and I'm not anxious to get other people to make fools of themselves. No wife for Thomas Holly, my lad."

"Thank you for the plan," cried Pegley, wringing his hand. "It's grand."

In a new pea jacket Captain Holly walked down the wharf in company with Nora Phipps, the prettiest girl in Redham. Suddenly from behind a pile of goods appeared Mr. John Pegley looking as little like a man taken unawares as possible.

In response to the cordial invitation of Captain Holly to accompany them on a sail to Crane Island, Mr. Pegley, with a clumsy feint of doubt if business would permit him the outing, consented, and the party were about to embark, when Nora asked them to wait a few moments.

"Why, we are all ready," expostulated the Captain.

"Mother's going," said Nora, innocently, "and we must wait for her."

The Captain looked at Mr. Pegley with consternation written legibly on his bronzed countenance, and Mr. Pegley looked seaward with all sorts of expressions on his face.

A tall, somewhat bony female came

"Captain!" cried Mr. Pegley, "you're a genius!"

rapidly down the wharf, and joined them.

"We're very much obleeged for the hinvitation, Captain," said Mrs. Phipps, "hit's so 'ot and dusty in the town."

Captain Holly said nothing, though the muscles of his throat worked curiously.

Probably with a view of making the boat sail better, Captain Holly, having seated himself in the stern, piled lunch baskets and wraps in such a way as to form a barricade between himself and Mrs. Phipps, but that lady's somewhat rasping voice easily overleaped this obstruction and kept the Captain busy on the trip to the Island.

When Crane Island was reached the Captain ran his boat alongside a small wharf and the occupants disembarked. Mr. Pegley at once led Miss Nora along the beach, and Mrs. Phipps expressed a longing to visit the rocks in the center of the Island.

Now, the expedition had been undertaken for the express purpose of affording Mr. John Pegley an uninterrupted opportunity of telling Miss Nora Phipps that he loved her. It was a plan of the Captain's, and he felt a laudable pride in it. The instincts of self-preservation told him plainly not to be alone with the dangerous Mrs. Phipps, but to keep with Pegley and Nora meant a wreck of the plan. Captain Holly walked towards the rocks with Mrs. Phipps.

For three mortal hours did Captain Holly and Mrs. Phipps parade the beach.

"Nora's a lot of hadmirers," said Mrs. Phipps, "heverybody runs hafter a pretty face. My husband who's dead and in 'eaven never cared for beauty."

"Billy Phipps was a man who was easy pleased," said Captain Holly, doing justice to his dead acquaintance.

Mrs. Phipps looked darkly at the Captain.

"'E looked for deeper wirtues than a pretty face," she retorted, with acerbity.

"When Nora gets married Hi'll be hall alone," continued Mrs. Phipps, in depressed tones.

The sweat came out on the Captain, and he looked anxiously towards the beach. He could have weighed anchor in this time, and surely a man could ask a woman to marry him within the same space.

As they debouched from behind the rocks, to the Captain's confounding, he beheld Pegley and Nora in the boat some distance from the shore, the former plying the oars.

"Ahoy," bellowed the Captain, "what are you about?"

"Be back in a jiffy," yelled Pegley, in return, "only a little row."

"Look out for the tide," shouted the Captain anxiously.

Pegley promptly sought to return to the Island, but the tide was too strong for him and the boat drifted rapidly towards the town.

"Hoist sail and come back, you can't make it rowing," halloed the Captain.

But Mr. Pegley knew nothing about sailing, and he valued his life, so, with a despairing wave of his hand towards the Island, he allowed the boat to drift with the tide.

The Captain said something which made Mrs. Phipps place her hands over her ears.

"My 'usband never swore," she said reproachfully.

"We're marooned," growled the Captain.

"What's that?" asked Mrs. Phipps.

"Why, we're left on the bloody Island, and I don't know when we'll get off of it."

Mrs. Phipps screamed.

"What will the people say? They'll say Hi've heloped with you."

"No they won't cried the Captain, desperately, "they'll know nobody would run away with you."

"Hi can never face the people again unless—" but Mrs. Phipps was speaking to the air. Captain Holly was running down the beach.

Arriving at a nook in the rocks he sat down and wiped his brow.

"What made you run so fast?" gasped Mrs. Phipps, appearing at the mouth of the nook.

The Captain adroitly changed an expression on his lips to, "I was hunting for a ship to take us off."

"Hit's real cozy in here," said Mrs. Phipps, seating herself by the Captain, "hit'd be a nice place for a 'oneymoon."

"I'll go down to the beach," exclaimed the Captain, "there might be a ship in sight."

"Hi'll go with you," said Mrs. Phipps, "Hi'm tired of sittin'."

For three mortal hours did Captain Holly and Mrs. Phipps parade the beach until a passing tug spied them and bore them to the town.

"Captain," said Mr. Pegley, the next morning, addressing the Captain, who was wrapped in Cimmerian gloom," your plan was a first rate one; there was only one thing made it not work. Nora had accepted Dempsey the night before."

"The plan worked all right," groaned the Captain, "my plans always have somethin' in 'em. I'm engaged to Mrs. Phipps."

HOW TO EAT A SEED ORANGE.

No Spoon Is Used According to the West Indian Method.

"When I was in Jamaica," said a New York man just back from the West Indies, "a native got to talking to me about their oranges.

"I asked him if they raised navels. He said no, not to any extent, and that he considered the navel an inferior orange, anyway. I maintained that there is nothing better in the way of a fruit than a good California or Florida navel orange. I said that the seeds and the thick fiber in a seed orange make it disagreeable to eat and spoil the flavor.

"The trouble is,' he answered, 'you do not know how to eat a seed orange.'

"Then he showed me, illustrating with some of his own seed oranges. You peel the orange, taking care to pare just inside the white inner skin. When that is done you have laid bare the outer wall of each of those little sections of which an orange is composed.

"Then you divide these sections, one by one, and, putting this peeled edge in your mouth, suck. You get the juice and some of the pulp, but none of the fiber and none of the seeds, which hang close to the inner wall of the section.

"This is better than eating it with a spoon for two reasons. In the first place, after you have had the spoon in your mouth once or twice it grows warm and spoils the coolness of the fruit. In the second place, the spoon method has a tendency to make the juice fly, and that is disagreeable for your neighbors as well as yourself.

"I learned to eat the native orange in the native fashion, and now I think that the seed orange and not the navel is the king of fruits."

Traced Through Photograph.

Justice B. Nathan of Alton, received a letter recently from Mrs. H. T. Robinson, of Richmond, Mo., containing his photograph, which the sender inclosed to the postmaster at Alton, directing him to deliver the letter to the original of the photograph, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Mrs. Robinson wanted to ascertain the relatives of a Mrs. Elizabeth Tunnbridge Jepson, who died at Richmond, Mo., and was buried on her birthday, Christmas day. Mrs. Jepson and Justice Nathan were born at Kent, England. She had frequently spoken to friends of her fellow townsman in Alton, but her friends could not recall his name, and Mrs. Robinson depended upon the postmaster at Alton to deliver the letter to the original of the photograph.

Mrs. Jepson left an estate to her blood relatives in England. Justice Nathan was asked to supply their names and addresses, which he readily did.

Lazy Jim.

He was lazy, truly lazy,
Full of sloth and indolence;
His ideas weren't hazy,
But he couldn't see the sense
In a ceaseless round of labor,
So he shirked upon his neighbor.

"Lazy Jim," the neighbors called him,
And he answered to the name,
Often o'er the coals they hauled him,
Cared he not nor did he blame
Any one for carping, chiding—
What to him was their deriding?

Only at their trouble laughing,
Caring naught for hardships, he;
Of the golden sunshine quaffing,
Lying prone beneath a tree,
Watching birds and bees together
In the pleasant summer weather.

"Tain't no use in allers fretting,"
He'd remark in lazy drawl,
"All the sun an' shine forgetting;
Mebbe we won't live till fall;
So let's lie and take it easy
Where the air is sweet and breezy."

To a Hat Thief.

You cannot steal a hat with impunity in New Zealand. Someone has dared to venture upon an exchange of headgear in our furthermost Colony, the result being the insertion of the following "agony" in the local press:

"A Brand-new Felt Hat was 'exchanged' at a local hotel last Thursday, and has not been returned. If the present owner should escape hanging, it is the late owner's devout wish that the lightning may strike through the hat into his miserable skull, and convince him that he is a low-down thief and a disgrace to an honest hat."—London Answers.

From Appearances.

In a certain home where the stork recently visited there is a six-year-old son of inquiring mind. When he was first taken in to see the new arrival, he exclaimed:

"Oh, mamma, it hasn't any teeth! Oh, mamma, it hasn't any hair!"

Then, clasping his hands in despair, he cried: "Somebody has done us! It's an old baby."

WOULD NOT BE KISSED.

American's Objection to Osculation Astonished Foreigners.

This is the true story of how a certain pianist who has been amusing New York with his music and his manners, got possession of his muffler. He saw it first—the muffler that became his own—on the neck of a man to whom he had just been introduced.

"I like your muffler," he said, by way of conversation. "I give you a dollar for your muffler."

"Extremely flattered, I'm sure; but I don't care to sell out just at present," replied the American.

"I give you a dollar," reiterated the pianist serenely. "The muffler will be second hand. A dollar is a good price."

The American pulled the muffler from his neck. "Accept it with my compliments," he said, wearily. "Keep your money, and be—so good as to accept the muffler."

The pianist was overjoyed. "Generous man," he exclaimed with tears in his voice. "I kiss you for that." Spreading out his arms he rushed on the American.

"I'll be hanged if you do!" cried the intended victim, who proceeded to grasp the piano pounder by the shoulders and shake him until his teeth rattled.

The musician recovering his breath as the American was vanishing out of the door.

"Men of your country are so cold, so very cold," he remarked to a bystander.

Depth to Plant a Tree.

As to the depth to plant a tree, it seems to be the general idea that the future prosperity of the tree is proportionate to the depth and firmness with which it is placed in the ground, and the percentage that plant too shallow is almost too insignificant to be worth considering, for the sinning is all in the opposite direction.

Look for the mark made by the earth on the trunk of the tree when it stood in the nursery, and going by that, you will make no mistake. The roots want warmth, light and moisture, such as they receive when placed properly, but when hermetically sealed two to three feet in the ground, it is impossible to develop any vigorous root action while contending against the terribly handicaping conditions. Give your tree plenty of feeding ground, plenty of good, fibrous earth, and if the place of planting is not naturally suitable, dig it out deep and put in what is needed.—Suburban Life.

Success.

Success is not for him of folded hands,
Sitting with slothful limbs beside life's gate,
Yielding his strength to pleasure's silken bands,
With ease and idleness for bride and mate,
Nor yet is it for him who takes each hour
And robs it of such joy as it may hold—
Then slumbers by the path that leads to power,
Till age creeps on him thus, and finds him old.

But rather is success for him who comes
Full of high purpose and with soul elate,
Strong set to riddle out life's tangled sums—
And passed thus through work's wide open gate;
Putting aside the weakening foible—ease;
Passing his slumbering brother on the way;
Treading beneath his feet the lures that please—
To stand at last where night gives place to day!

Vast Increase in Immigration.

Immigration into the United States will rise this year to astonishing proportions if the record for the first quarter of the current year be maintained to its close. Over 11,000 foreigners arrived in New York in two days in March, an unprecedented showing. The number of arrivals during the first quarter of 1905 has never been exceeded during a like period in former years. It is probable that the immigration this year will be double that of 1904. Extraordinary efforts are being made to furnish transportation. Ships hitherto engaged in other service are in demand for the transportation of the coming hosts from Europe and steerage accommodations are booked ahead for several months. —Philadelphia Ledger.

Boasts of Her Ugliness.

Up to the present time Mlle. Polaire, the French actress, held the distinction of being the only woman in the world who boasted of her uglinoss. The divorce courts of New York have developed a full-sized rival. On the stand Mrs. Martha Pierce exclaimed: "I know I am ugly—that is why I lost my husband's love!" This experience is quite contrary to the dictum of the great French sage, Balzac, who said: "The ugly woman who has won the love of a man keeps it always." It also was contrary to the dictum of the now celebrated John Hoch, who asserts that the homeliest woman may be made lovely by the man who makes up his mind to consider her so.

Sassafras Tea His Tonic.

The odor of the sassafras tea circulates around the private office of Acting Secretary Adee in the state department, Washington, these days. Two months in the year Mr. Adee drinks tea, but in March and April he brews sassafras by way of spring medicine. He has a tiny brewing outfit tucked away in his desk and when the thirst comes upon him he boils a little water and makes him a cup of tea. And no matter what weighty international problem is under discussion Mr. Adee sets it aside for a few minutes when the time for such refreshment arrives.

Toboggan on the Grass

One-half the world's coasters doesn't know how the other half coasts. The Canadian has his toboggan, the mountaineer his ski, the rustic easterner his home-made sled for ankle-deep snow in zero weather, the city boy his wheeled coaster for paved streets, but here, on the hillsides of suburban San Francisco, a boy may coast without snow, without a cement walk or an asphalt street—without even a coaster. All he needs is to mount a piece of board on the top of a hillside where there is a vacant lot covered with dry "sticker grass," and away he goes like a sandbag out of a balloon, whooping, screeching in wild excitement and boundless joy.

It is a dangerous sport, but no boy loves it less for that. Even full grown men have been known to break faith with life insurance companies, forget their duty to housemates given them to keep their trousers in order and throw themselves for a mad hour into this intoxicating frolic.

Took Payment in Live

Chief among the stock owners was John Chisholm, whose brand was on thousands of range cattle. Billy worked for Chisholm a short time, but soon he had his inevitable quarrel with his employer. It was over a question of wages, Billy claiming that Chisholm had not squared their account. Only the fact that Chisholm was surrounded by a guard of hard-fighting cowboys, with reputations as "killers," kept him from assassination when he and the young desperado parted. As it was, Billy managed finally to exact a terrible penalty from Chisholm. It is more than likely that the Kid swore his vendetta against Chisholm and other cattle owners simply as a matter of course instead of a punctilious affair of principle.

Billy would naturally take sides with the rustlers, who were making life miserable for honest men in Lincoln county. How "Jap" Soldiers Figh

In the grand assault commencing Aug. 19, the immortal Ninth regiment of the Japanese army was ordered to cross the field to the foot of the slope on which lay, dead and dying, many of the men of the regiment which had gone before. The colonel, Takagagi, surveying the task set for his regiment, sent back a report that it was not feasible. The brigade-general, Ichinobe, replied hotly that one regiment was enough to take one battery. Takagagi stepped out of the ravine, in which he had been seeking shelter, at the head of his command. Before, he had been marching, as colonels usually do, in the rear, while his line-officers led the advance. Now, he leaped forward up the slope, out in front of his men. A dozen paces from the ravine he fell with four bullets through his breast. The lieutenant-colonel took up the lead and was shot a few yards farther on. The majors were wiped out. Northward

Under the high unclouded sun
That makes the ship and shadow one,
I sail away as, from the fort,
Booms sullenly the noonday gun.

The odorous airs blow thin and fine,
The sparkling waves like emeralds shine
The lustre of the coral reefs
Gleams whitely through the tepid brine.

And glitters o'er the liquid miles
The jewled ring of verdant isles,

Of ripened bloom and sunny smiles.

Encinctured by the faithful seas
Inviolate gardens lend the breeze
Where flaunt like giant-warders plumes
The pennants of the cocoa-trees.

What It Is to Live

The grapple fate as I fearlessly
Do wage with stubborn, stern decree
Let me be armed, the terror lies
Beneath our feet; recoils and dies;

To look beyond, content to wait
And dignify our low estate
By bending lower, e'er to seek
To help the fallen, lift the weak;

To take no backward step—to-wit,
Be sure that each ascends a bit,
To love the best, the best to give—
This is the meaning solved, to live.

CONFESSED

By NELLIE CRAVEY GILMORE

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Ashleigh glanced questionably across the table at his wife. That "lucky star," who for the last year had been the faithful guardian of his Lares and Penates—of his loyal heart—answered with smiling eyes.

"What are those white butterflies above you?" she queried, her soft hands clasped.

Ashleigh did not reply at once, and Francesco leaned coaxingly across the table. Presently, and a tiny, dawn-like shadow coming into her face, "I have done anything unpleasant——"

"Not exactly; not in the way you mean." Ashleigh laughed, leaning back in his chair in a little quizzical way, and regarding her with a curious expression. "I was wondering," he pursued, "whether you would rather go to that ball or remain at home with me, for I shall be somewhat disappointed if Mrs. Kendrix——"

"Oh!" Why, you silly boy! You'll never outgrow your indifference. Which do you suppose I would prefer?"

"Guess it then. I was a bit afraid you might be disappointed."

A little laugh that sounded to Ashleigh like the music of gurgling water came to her lips.

Francesco left her chair and, going over to where he sat, rested two soft, white hands on his shoulders. "I don't believe there are any two people in the world as happy as ourselves," she said, letting her hands fall until they touched his cheeks. Ashleigh rose and kissed her tenderly. A servant came in to clear the table, and they went back into the cozy little sitting-room, where Francesco, pretty, rose-skirted cannot show to warm and mellow.

Ashleigh gave his attention to some papers he had brought up from the office, and Francesco went to the piano. Taking her seat, and tiring of her music, she cast over to the fireplace where she curled herself into a prodigious chair that almost swallowed her. She stretched out the tips of her slippered feet to the brass fender and watched the sleepy bed of pink coals with musing eyes.

Ashleigh put aside his papers and, lying upon a hassock, sat looking up at her, her hands over her dainty head, her feet crossed enticingly on the fender.

Presently the latter spoke. Pressing her fingers a playful moment on his lips, for your thoughts, smiling up into his face, "I hope it isn't anything unpleasant to matter so long as it is the one real love?"

"I hope it isn't anything unpleasant?" matter so long as it is the one real love?"

Francesco had drawn a little away from him, and looking at her closely, he noticed that the brightness of tears was in her eyes, and the pink quite gone from the delicate curving cheek. He had never seen her that way before, and a wave of apprehension swept over him.

"I wish you would tell me what it is is worrying you to-night?" He leaned toward her suddenly, touching the loosened heap of shining brown curls with gentle, persuasive fingers. "What is it, Francesco? What is the trouble?"

There was complete silence for a moment. An almost imperceptible glow overspread her face, losing itself abruptly in a quick rush of pallor. She winced involuntarily, but forced a smile to disguise the deep shadows that clung insistently to her eyes. "Nothing," she returned, "nothing at all—unless, perhaps—I am a little out of gear." Her voice broke, but he did not appear to notice her emotion. She sat very still and silent for a long time. Once or twice she drew in her breath in a little sharp way, and averted her head, lest he should see, and read some of the tragedy of her face.

A long time passed. When she looked toward her husband again there was a certain bitter determination in her eyes. "I have been thinking of a story," she said mechanically. "Shall I—do you think you would care about—hearing it?" She gave him a quick, tentative glance. "Don't—don't look at me that way, Dick. You—you vex me. I'm nervous and—and silly, I suppose." She tried to smile at him through stubborn tears.

Ashleigh drew a deep sigh of relief, answering her with obvious interestedness.

"Not many years ago," she commenced in a low tone, to hide its meaning, "there lived a girl who was young—very young, and innocent and credulous. This girl had a mother who was all that was devoted and kind, but—ambitious, and withal, perhaps a little bit unwise. After one or two attempts, she managed to—marry her daughter to a man with a stolen title—no name at all. When the money—the girl's money—was all gone, the man disappeared. A short time after, there came on the scene, another woman—his wife. She—the girl—was crushed, but still self-respecting. She tried to put it all out of her life forever. Everyone—everyone has a right to a little happiness in the world. Two years later, she married—someone else who loved her for herself alone—who—he——" She broke off miserably and covered her face with both hands. But in a second she pulled herself together and looked up with her old brave expression.

Ashleigh drew a deep sigh of relief, strangely and something queer stirred in his heart. "Well?" he asked gravely.

"It occurred to me," she began reflectively, "that most of the married people I have seen, seem—after a time—to grow weary and indifferent, if not actually discontented or unhappy and——"

"Don't talk that way," he interrupted somewhat impatiently; "it's foolish and—and not natural. You are not yourself. Of course we shall always be happy, happier and happier as the years go by."

"If things were always what they seemed," she persisted absently.

"Well, and if they are not? What do appearances—what does anything matter so long as it is the one real love?"

Francesco did not reply at once, and he shook it seemingly as he looked for corroboration.

"That is all—except that he—the last one—never knew." She had risen and was leaning listlessly against the mantel-piece, her face the color of ashes.

He looked up at her slowly, wonderingly, comprehendingly, and all at once his eyes filled.

"Do you think she did wrong?" she asked, trying hard to keep her self-control. Her voice quivered suddenly, under its veneer of calm.

Ashleigh rose quickly and drew her into his arms. He felt her sobs against his coat, almost convulsive. "What does anything matter," he repeated, "so long as it is the one real love?"

THRIVE ON VEGETARIAN DIET.

Wild and Domestic Animals Grow Fat and Intelligent.

Although carnivorous animals are capable of marvelous feats of strength they have nothing like the endurance of the herbivorous animals, nor are they so long-lived. The animals of greatest service to man on account of their strength, fleetness or endurance—the horse, the elephant, the camel, the ox—are all vegetarian animals.

The gorilla, which is said to be, for his size, the strongest and most intelligent beast in the forest, is frugivorous. He has often been known to beat a lion to death with a club, and it is said that he will even kill an elephant in like manner.

Dogs are in much better condition in every way when confined to a strictly vegetarian diet. Every dog-trainer knows that meat spoils a dog's wind, and also his scent. On this point an old hunter out West said: "I have a dog that can scent a bird two hundred feet away; but when I feed him meat he can't scent a bird half a rod off. Besides that, when I feed him meat he has no wind; he can't run."

That cats also can be kept in perfect condition on a vetarian diet many a vegetarian family can testify. The mistress of a handsome pair of kittens says of them: "These beautiful Maltese kittens are vegetarians. They have never eaten meat of any kind. Their favorite dishes are protose, nuttolene, potatoes, green corn and baked beans. In disposition they are gentle, affectionate and unusually intelligent. My children have taught them to run a race, try to catch a rubber ball, and play a game of hide-and-seek. Fat, healthy and happy are these vegetarian kittens."—Exchange.

The Road.

There is no new pathway that is not rough,
Yet who would walk in a well-worn way?
The warden of life is aged and gruff,
But nevertheless he is guard to-day.

What would you do? Would you stop to rest
Or argue the question of go or stay?
Better pass on in an untried quest
Than beg for a crust in a well-worn way.

Stumble you will, in the tangled turn,
Where the vines have grown and the sweet brier spread;
But the fountain you find and the lessons you learn
Will be newer and dearer than those oft read.

Then smile at the warden and pay his fee,
For Life has demands that are somewhat bold;
He has weighed the soul of a you and me,
And he knows our strength when he points the road.

Henry Clay in His Prime.

An Englishman who traveled in the United states in the early part of the last century visited Washington and describes Henry Clay as follows: "He is tall, thin and not a very muscular man; his gait is stately, but swinging, and his countenance, while it indicates genius, denotes dissipation. Though there is want of rapidity and fluency in his elocution, yet he has a great deal of fire and vigor in his expression. When he speaks he is full of animation and earnestness; his face brightens, his eye beams with additional luster and his whole figure indicates that he is entirely occupied with the subject on which his eloquence is employed."

Rush of Modern Life.

A well-known artist thus comments on the rush and hurry of our modern life: "Man's business requires haste. The average business and professional man eats in a hurry and gets dyspepsia. He walks in a hurry and gets apoplexy. He talks in a hurry and gets the lie. He does business in a hurry and becomes a bankrupt. He reads in a hurry, and is superficial. He marries in a hurry and gets a divorce. He trains his children in a hurry, and develops spendthrifts and criminals. He gets religion in a hurry and forgets it in a great hurry. He makes his will in a hurry and leaves a legal contest. He dies in a hurry and goes to the devil."

Leisure of Japanese Generals.

During the winter just past Japan's generals along the Shaho spent their time variously. "Gen. Nodzu," according to Japanese newspapers, "studied calligraphy. Gen. Kuroki kept barnyard fowls. During the Heikautai engagement Gen. Kodama scarcely slept at all for a whole week, but did not seem one whit the worse for his experience." Gen. Oyama was reported as being "the same robust, merry-hearted gentleman as ever."

Ought to Stay Dead.

A physician in St. Louis, by a solution of salt infused into the veins of a woman who was supposed to be dead, so revived her that she is now believed to be on the high road to recovery. This was all right in the case of this good woman, but there should be some restrictions placed on such physicians. There are some people should be allowed to stay dead when they die.—Mobile Item.

FORESTS DUE TO THE FOGS.

Peculiar Conditions Found to Exist in the Congo Valley.

A peculiar climatic feature exists in the southern part of the Congo valley for 10 degrees south of the equator. The rivers and lakes are found to be bordered with a dense vegetation, which extends out from the water a distance proportioned to the extent of the water surface. Adjacent hills and mountains are often covered with dense vegetation on one side and are bare on the other. Beyond this bordering vegetation there are plains, almost treeless or with small scrub growth and thin grass.

The explanation is given as follows: From May to October there is a dry season, with hot days and fairly cool nights (often 50 degrees Fahrenheit.) The evaporation of the daytime is followed by condensation into fog at night. This fog moistens the country adjacent to the water surfaces and causes a luxuriant growth of vegetation. The morning winds blow the fog against the exposed sides of hills and mountains and up the valleys of tributary streams. Wherever the fog is not carried the country is dry.

The natives reflect this characteristic of their hills by shaving off their hair from one side of their heads. Dense forests are found where the fogs prevail, while out of range of this moisture there is only a sparse vegetation.

Has Million Butterflies.

Walter Rothschild, Lord Rothschild' elder son, has in his enormous museum, at Tring Park, England, says the Detroit Free Press, a collection of more than 1,000,000 butterflies, the biggest private collection in the world. Besides butterflies it contains stuffed specimens of a great number of rare animals and birds, including the great auk, with two eggs, valued at $1,700 each; a sable antelope and a Mongolian wild horse. There are 160,000 specimens of birds.

The stories of extravagant prices paid by Rothschild for rare butterflies are commonly made up out of whole cloth. Nor was there, as reported, any special mission to arctic regions for rare fleas. Some whalers in the arctic circle were simply instructed to look out for certain seals, and Mrs. Rothschild gave instructions that the skins were to be searched for any rare insects. A New York journalist boarded the whaler on its return to America and the tale of the arctic flea went around the world.

The People's Schools.

The schools belong to the people and will be what the people make them. It is a mistake to suppose that school officers and teachers are the only ones that have to do with the making of the schools. The people set the pace for the teachers and school officers. If a school officer does not meet the ideals of the people he is turned out at the first election. If a teacher does not meet the ideals of the people the teacher is quickly reached through the school officers. So it gets back to the people in the end. The man that thinks the schools are not good enough should set himself about having them improved. It is astonishing how much one person can do to improve the schools when he sets himself about it.—Henry F. Thurston.

President Johnson Poor Writer.

The letters of President Taylor are rare, but perhaps those of Andrew Johnson are the rarest, as he did but little of his own writing. His son conducted most of his correspondence and signed his father's name to the letters. It is related that one reason why President Johnson wrote so little was owing to an accident which happened to him when he was working at his trade as tailor. One day a tailor's heavy iron goose fell on his arm, so injuring that member that he found it extremely difficult to indulge in penmanship thereafter. Andrew Johnson was the poorest writer among the presidents as well as the rarest. His handwriting was very much of a scrawl and can scarcely be deciphered by the average reader.

Young Rockefeller's Training.

At Brown university, where John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was graduated in the class of 1897, tales are still told to show how his father impressed on him the same scrupulous regard to detail that made the Standard Oil Company successful. One day when John Jr., was down in the city of Providence with a couple of girls, he took them into a convenient drug store and treated them to ice cream soda. After he had paid the checks and before he left the store he surprised his fair companions by pulling out a pocket memorandum book and entering: "Three ice cream sodas, thirty cents."

The Miracle of the Raindrop.

The lightning kissed a brooding cloud,
And moved her bursting heart to showers—
The mellow tear-drops of the rain
At random fell upon the flowers!

One filled the chalice of a bud
Where lilies bathed beside a rill;
And when the bud a lily bloomed,
The silver rain was water still.

But one upon the passionate rose
A moment in the sunlight stood;
And when that bud had blown, the drop
Of water was a bead of blood!

—Aloysius Coll.

Appointment Recalls Brave Act.

Capt. Harry Leonard of the United States Marine Corps has been ordered by President Roosevelt to the Chinese capital as military attache of the American legation. During the Tien-Tsin campaign he risked his life by going to the rescue of a wounded comrade, carrying him to safety on his back across a fire-swept field, and lost his arm as a penalty for his achievement.

Few Seconds of Horror

A miss may be as good as a mile in some cases; in others the agony of suspense which precedes a narrow escape is almost as disastrous to the nerve as if the result bore out the apprehension. An incident of the nerve-racking kind is thus related by a young man who was employed by a large clock firm, and one of whose duties was to superintend the putting up of steeple and tower clocks.

"There isn't much chance for adventure in the placing of a clock. It is prosaic business, although it does take one up to the heights; but now and then some little thing will occur which shows one how near the line of everyday living lies to that of tragedy.

"I was in one of the large Western cities, seeing to the construction of a clock which was being placed in the tower of the city hall. The job was nearly done when, one afternoon, I was standing on the roof beside the tower, inspecting the great dial face above me.

"I have become accustomed to heights which a few years ago would have made me ill to think of, and I had stepped near the slightly guarded edge of the building without any more thought than if I had been on the sidewalk. Far below me were the brick pavement and the busy people of the street.

"I was holding in my hand a screwdriver, a ponderous instrument used in adjusting some of the larger portions of the clock, and as I stepped near the cornice rail in some way I let the heavy thing fall from my hand. It struck on the rail and then bounced out of sight. The sickening thought of the passers-by flashed over me and I grasped the rail with both hands and leaned far over in my attempt to follow with my eyes the fall of the implement.

"A young lady was passing in front of the building, just in line with the falling screwdriver. I held my breath in an agony of suspense. It seemed hours instead of seconds before the screwdriver fell on the bricks only a few inches behind the girl, who was so unconscious of her danger. The noise of the fall caused her to jump and look about her, but she never knew what had caused the mysterious sound nor how near she had come to death, for the instrument bounded off the bricks and landed harmlessly on the green sward that bordered the pavement. No damage had been done, save to my own nerves, but never shall I forget the horror of those seconds of suspense."—Montreal Herald.

Morgan as a Financier

One who is held to be a master of the art of judging men and projects with incredible swiftness is J. P. Morgan. "He knows to the last degree the psychology of meeting and dealing with men," says Ray Stannard Baker in a story of this financier.

"The man who sits in his office a citadel of silence and reserve force and makes his visitor uncover his batteries is impregnable. That is Mr. Morgan's way—the way he dealt with a certain owner of coal lands in Pennsylvania, who knew that Mr. Morgan must have his property, and so had come down to exact a good price, to 'thrash it out with Mr. Morgan.' Mr. Morgan kept him waiting a long time and then came out, bulky, cold and impressive, looked the coal man in the eye and only broke the silence to say, 'I'll give you $—— for your property.' And there the bargain closed.

"Until recently any man might walk up to his desk, which stands in plain view from the outer office, without the formality of presenting a card; but, while approachable, it would be an intrepid man, indeed, who would call upon him without definite business in hand.

"He is a man of few words, always shortly and sharply spoken. When a man comes to him Mr. Morgan looks at him keenly, waiting for him to speak first, and his decision follows quickly.

"A young broker who had never seen Mr. Morgan before went to him not long ago to borrow $1,000,000 for a client. He told Mr. Morgan what he wanted in half a dozen words, and handed him the list of securities to be deposited as collateral. Mr. Morgan looked sharply at his visitor, 'looked at me as if he saw clear through me,' as the broker expressed it, then glanced swiftly down the list. 'I'll take the loan,' he said, and passed the borrower on to one of his partners. That was all. The whole transaction, involving a loan larger than the yearly business of many a small bank, had taken a minute and a half, and Mr. Morgan's side of the transaction had consumed not more than a dozen works."

Bearers of Famous Names

When Senor Don Emilo Ojeda, the Minister from Spain at Washington, sails away to his new post as under secretary of foreign affairs at Madrid, the American capital will lose an attractive figure. He is one of the strong links which reach back to unite present history with the most fascinating annals of the past, for he is the lineal descendant of that gay cavalier Manuel Ojeba, the companion of Columbus. But it is interesting to note that a man bearing a name equally romantic comes to succeed him—Senor Jacinthe de Coligny, who is of the noble line from which sprang the brave and chivalrous Huguenot, Admiral Coligny.

Many of the diplomats who are now serving in Washington are bearers of names which mean much to the student of history. The Viscount de Chambrun, whom rumor credits with a hopeless affection for Miss Alice Roosevelt, is the great-grandson of Lafayette, and he belongs to a family which figured in stirring episodes of French history long before the gallant marquis came on his errand of chivalry to America.

There is another member of the French embassy who bears a name revered in ecclesiastical and secular history—Count Antoine de Sala. He comes from the same line of Northern Italy which produced that gentle saint Francis de Sales, Bishop of Geneva, beloved by all, whether orthodox Catholic or merely admirer of noble attributes of character and mind. St. Francis de Sales is the model of the perfect Christian gentleman, and ecclesiastically he is as much revered as Chesterfield in the more worldly sense. His modern kinsman is a credit to the name.

There are other diplomats who bear historic names. Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador and the dean of the corps, is the last of the Counts Cassini du Thury, ennobled in the early years of the seventeenth century for their astronomical achievements. The family name will live in history as having produced the greatest number and most erudite of modern readers of the stars.

Old Times in Washington

Dr. Edward Everett Hale in an article on "Washington Then and Now," in the Outlook, discourses pleasantly of the capital as he first knew it:

"The city has grown, in those sixty years, from a mud-hole which had 30,000 people, perhaps, within its borders, to a city of 250,000 inhabitants. The only part of this common (not far from the corner of I and Seventeenth streets) which was fenced in must have been near where the British embassy is now. We called it the gymnasium, I think. That was the high-sounding name for a bowling alley which the young men kept up. I remember one afternoon we persuaded Mrs. Madison, who was still alive, to visit us there, and with great effort she got a ball down the middle of the alley and was complimented on her knocking down the king. President Tyler came over and played with the young gentlemen sometimes. Everything had the simplicity and ease, if you please, of a small Virginia town. Whenever the weather would serve, a great many of the southern members of the House or the Senate rode to the Capitol on their saddle horses. There were thirty or forty posts in front of the Capitol near where the statue of Washington now stands. You rode up to one of those posts and hitched your horse. You left him while you went in and attended the meeting of the House; you came out and unhitched him and rode him to your 2 o'clock dinner."

Melodies and Mysteries

Couldst thou know what the blithe bird pipeth,
High in the morning air?
Wouldst thou know what the bright steam singeth,
Rippling o'er pebbles bare?
Sorrow the mystery shall teach thee,
And the words declare.

Wouldst thou find in the rose's blossom
More than thy fellows find?
More in the fragrance of the lily
Than odor on the wind?
Love Nature and her smallest atoms
Shall whisper to thy mind.

Wouldst thou know what the moon discourseth
To the docile sea?
Wouldst hear the echoes of the music
Of the far infinity?
Sorrow shall ope the founts of knowledge,
And heaven shall sing to thee.

Wouldst thou see through the riddle of Being Further than others can?
Sorrow shall give thine eyes new luster
To simplify the plan;
And love of God and thy kind shall aid thee
To end what it began.

To Love and Sorrow all Nature speaketh;
If the riddle be read,
They the least can see through darkness
Each divergent thread
Of its mazy texture, and discover
Whence the ravel spread.

Love and Sorrow are sympathetic
With the earth and skies;
Their touch from the harp of Nature bringeth
The hidden melodies;
To them the eternal chords forever
Vibrate in harmonies.

Two women dead from the exertion of climbing "L" stairs, and two children dead from excessive rope-skipping. The human heart is a patient and long-suffering organ, comments the New York Evening World, but its protest against over use, when made, is final, and there is no appeal. With regard to stair-climbing, its practice in moderation has been recommended by one of the nation's most distinguished specialists as beneficial to the heart. Since the elevator came, habits of this kind have undergone an enforced change, making more dangerous than before, in all who are past their youth, the hasty rush up an "L" stairway for a train.

When put to a practical test against Western styles of wrestling, jiu-jitsu signally fails to justify the claims made by its press agents, declares the New York World. Not long ago a West Point cadet threw a jiu-jitsu wrestler over his head and fractured the Jap's collar-bone. In a match at New York an American catch-as-catch-can wrestler won from his Japanese opponent in straight falls. A man expert in jiu-jitsu can easily master one who is not expert in any form of wrestling, but so can any other wrestler. To be effective the tricks of the jiu-jitsu system evidently presuppose clumsiness on the part of the opponent. And as for its effectiveness in rough-and-tumble fighting, there is probably a great deal yet to be said in favor of the good old American plan of swinging straight for the jaw before the other man has time to close in.

CENTER HILL.

Editor Union:

"Observer" says that he can take three acres of pasture and that would be all he'd need for his cattle. Now, brother renters, we haven't got the three acres, and the land owner won't prepare it for us without charging for it. As far as good stock is concerned we could get them now as well as under stock law, though not many renters are able to buy $50 cows. So let Big Bill come on, and weaken not in well doing. I wish everybody would take THE UNION.

LITTLE BILL.

BEAT NINE ITEMS.

Farmers are awfully behind with their work on account of so much wet weather. Messrs. Florence and Willie Mims have returned from Hamilton, where they've been attending the district agricultural school. Rev. Joe Gibson filled his appointment at Cedar Grove church Saturday and Sunday. New Salem S. S. is invited to meet with Cedar Grove S. S. next Sunday to perfect plans to have a children's day service at Cedar Grove in the near future. I'd like to hear from any of your readers who bear the name of Waggoner, as I think I can give them information concerning some of their lost relatives who are anxious to hear from them.

Editor Union:

I must say for one that I don't favor stock law for many reasons. I don't think it is for the interests of the county. Now, friends, let's use common sense and sound judgment and cast our votes for freedom and liberty. While stock law might benefit one-third the farmers, it would be against the other two-thirds. So, don't let's do anything that would be against our neighbors' interests. We learn by the past that "united we stand, divided we fall." Why can't we get improved stock without stock law? Don't try to force men to do something against their wills, and have the county in a wrangle half the time. If we are farmers, let's be free ones. Ask the Georgia farmers, ask Buck Whitaker, who lives near Jemison. He'll tell you facts about stock law. Look at those who favor this law and you will see the big land owners, not little farmers like me. Let's be careful how we disturb the existing order of things. Wishing THE UNION and old Chilton success, I am one of the grassy farmers.

There was an ice cream supper at Tom Cole's Saturday night, and a big crowd were there. Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Moore were visitors at R. L. Barrett's Sunday. Miss Nolier Bates has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Dora Barrett, for a couple of weeks, and every one was pleased to meet her. Mrs. Wiley Harris spent Sunday with her son, Jim Johnson. It did seem as if our entire neighborhood went to court last week. With good wishes to all,

SINGING AT CANAAN.

The program of the annual singing held with Canaan Baptist church the fourth Sunday in May, 1905: At 9:40 a. m. opened with prayer by W. L. Price. J. J. Grant was elected chairman for the day. J. S. Jones, Sr., G. G. Calloway and E. L. Jones were appointed committee on arrangements. The first lesson of 30 minutes was led by J. S. Jones, Jr., in the "Class Choir." J. L. Hurst led 30 minutes in "Our Thankful Songs." Ten minutes' intermission, after which T. M. Pyron led 30 minutes in the "Christian Harmony." S. B. Culpepper led 30 minutes in the "Sacred Harp," and "Our Thankful Songs." One hour and a half for dinner. At 1:30 p. m. class called to order by H. J. Thomas, who led 25 minutes in the "Star of Bethlehem." L. A. Henderson led 15 minutes in "Our Thankful Songs," and "Gospel Gleaner." A. C. Rogers led 20 minutes in the "Star of Bethlehem." Ten minutes' intermission after which P. J. Boxley led 30 minutes in "Gospel Gleaner." J. L. Hurt 30 minutes in "Our Thankful Songs." The organists were the Misses Martha, Lena and Vina Pyron, Daisy Baxley and Lizzie Johnson, and Mr. J. T. Lena and Vina Pyron, Daisy Baxley and Lizzie Johnson, and Mr. J. T. Henderson.

Editor Union:

The farmers in this community are in pretty good spirits now that the sun shines, and we can kill the grass. A few words about the meeting of S. C. A. on June 3 (the first Saturday). Brethren, let every one that can turn loose his crop come out on that day, we expect some good speakers, so don't disappoint them. Come out and hear them and talk about the rally on the Fourth of July. It's time we were doing something if we expect to make a success of it. I think it would be a good thing for our farmers if we can get some good speaker on agriculture to come and give us a lecture on "Diversification of Crops." About stock law, I think it would be a good idea to table the question, as tolerable well is hard to beat, and well enough should be let alone. Everybody come to Clanton on the 3rd. Success to S. C. A., THE UNION and its readers.

Respectfully,

J. W. SORRELL.

CANE CREEK.

Mr. Editor:

Please allow me a little space in your pages about stock law. I'm a 10-year-old plow boy, and have never written a piece to the paper before, but I want to encourage Mr. Jones and Observer. Boys, never let such a thing as Dad's Plow-Boy scare you. He's only a disfranchised democrat, like all the rest that are against stock law. I lost all my schooling but 31 days on account of having to stop and split rails to fix the fence to keep stock out of the fields, and if I'd been in stock law I'd have gotten the benefit of the six months school. The orphan children had better be deprived of a little milk and butter than to be deprived of an education, which would be a benefit to them in the future. Anybody can fence a pasture much easier than fence a crop. I know some of you will say, "What does this boy have to do with stock law?" but I can't help it, or it will be too late for me to get an education after fencing Chilton county. Let the community help the poor widows. We've nine widow women in 2 1-2 miles of Cane Creek church, and they get along all right. The only fellows that don't help them are those that voted for Cleveland. Stock law will make better stock. Some will say, "Oh, my hogs!" Well, how many hogs did you ever raise without feeding them? We are milking three cows and not getting but about four gallons of milk a day, and in stock law we'd get that much from one. Such fellows as "Dad's Plow Boy" haven't got any boys to educate, and they don't care for the boys that want an education. I am glad to see people sign their names to their letters. It shows they are not ashamed of their names. So, boys, all sign your names to your letters. I'm for stock law, and boys, let us all go that way. Success to THE UNION.

THORSBY LETTER.

The Norwegian Ladies' Society was largely attended at Mrs. Lefsted's on last Thursday. Mr. G. W. Phalin returned from McHenry, Ill., on the 25th, where he attended the funeral of his father. A number of our young folks were entertained at the Norton home on last Friday night. Everybody is glad to see our depot being enlarged. Mr. Schive's new residence is under construction. Mr. R. J. Kelley, of Birmingham, was in town Saturday and spoke at the public school building that night. He is the president of the Mutual Benefit Association and was here for the purpose of getting members. Messrs. Gerald, Bice and Villadsen were in Clanton last week. Rev. Clark conducted services at the college hall Sunday morning and evening. A large audience attended both meetings. The Union Protestant church, of Thorsby, was organized in the morning with about 40 members. We trust the church will increase in membership to such an extent that they will be able to have a good preacher who will reside in our midst. Miss Hatty Horn, who is employed in the leading store of Montgomery is here on a short vacation. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson left for North Dakota on the 29th; they will be gone for the summer months. Miss Dora Thorson is home for a few days. Miss Daisy Davis, of Clanton, was a guest of Miss Howard's on Sunday.

"CHATTERBOX."

RANDOLPH.

Everybody busy. News scarce. J. P. Atchison, the popular merchant of Macedonia, was in town Monday. Mr. John Payne and family were in town Sunday. While we are not yet in the stock law discussion, still we must admit that for reason, kindness and freedom from hash language, "Observer" still wears the laurels of victory. We are not discussing which is best, stock law or no stock law, but in reading the arguments from each side we are pleased to find any indication of kindness and good will and reason on either side, and for those qualities we find none that have excelled "Observer." Miss Emma Hubbard and Mrs. W. D. Nix, of Hubbard, were in town Saturday. Miss Sallie Crumpton, who has been at the Randolph hotel for several weeks, has returned to her home near Macedonia. Mr. Frank Martin, assistant mail carrier, says Mr. L. G. Posey has the nicest crop on route No. 1. People are battling hard with the grass. A few more bright days and the noble farmer will again be in the ascendancy. Among the people's leaders and those who are true to the people's cause in Chilton, we find none more favorably known than E. G. Rollins, twice elected by the people to the office of tax assessor, then he quietly withdrew. He is an honest man, and if he had entered the last campaign for some office would doubtless have been hard to beat. Mr. Rollins does not possess greed for office, and today, after several years since he was first known to the people as a candidate, he is still dear to his people. All honor to Mr. Rollins. B. V. Washburne was a welcome visitor Monday. Dr. William Sellers, of near Birmingham, dropped in last week for a short time with his cousin, Mrs. C. W. Brand. We hope THE UNION will never allude to little things, or to the misfortunes of any one in order to make a fling at any opposing political party or faction. The beautiful month of May with its showers and flowers will soon be in the past. Let us still trust a kind providence over the untried way.

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JUNE 4.

Subject: The Resurrection, John xx., 11-23—Golden Text, I Cor. xv., 20—Memory Verses, 19-21—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. Mary and the angels at the tomb (vs. 11-13). 11. "Mary." This was Mary Magdalene, out of whom Christ had cast seven demons, a physical rather than a moral disorder. She was a native of Magdala, a town on the Sea of Galilee. She must be distinguished from "The woman who was a sinner" (Luke 7:36-50), and from Mary, the sister of Martha. "Stood without." The other women and the disciples had left the tomb and Mary was alone as she supposed. "Weeping." Christ had done much for her, and she had great love for her Lord. "Stooped down." She stooped in order to obtain a view of the interior of the tomb. "The sepulchre." The sepulchre seems to have been a square room hewn out of rock, partly above ground, its roof being as high as the top of the door.

12. "Two angels." Peter and John did not see the angels. They were ministering spirits to comfort those who were in such great sorrow and need, and they gave explanation of what had been done, no one else being able. Matthew says there was one angel, Mark says a "young man," while Luke says "two men." "In white." This was an emblem of purity (see Rev. 19:8).

13. "Why weepest thou?" Are you quite sure that this empty tomb does not show that you ought to be rejoicing?

II. Jesus appears to Mary (vs. 14-16). 14. She turned to go again with the other women to Jerusalem, who had already departed, but she had not as yet gone so far as to be out of the garden. 15. "Jesus saith." This was His first appearance. He afterward appeared on this same day to the other women returning from the sepulchre (Matt. 28:9, 10), to Peter (Luke 24:34), to two disciples going to Emmaus (Luke 24: 13-31), and to ten apostles (vs. 19-25). "Why weepest thou?" She had cause sufficient to rejoice instead of to weep. "Gardener." And therefore a servant of Joseph of Arimathea, who owned the tomb, and who, of course, would be friendly. "Borne Him hence." Thinking that perhaps Joseph had ordered His body taken to some other place. "I will take Him away." She would be responsible for His removal to a proper place.

16. "Mary." Jesus stirred the affection of the weeping woman at His side by uttering her own name in tones that thrilled her to the heart and created the new sublime conviction that He had risen as He had said. "Rabboni." My Master. "A whole world of emotion and devotion in a word." As Mary uttered the word she must have fallen down at the feet of Jesus, embracing them.

III. Jesus commissions Mary (vs. 17, 18). 17. "Touch Me not." Cling not to Me. The translation "touch Me not" gives a false impression; the verb does not mean to "touch," but to "hold on to" and "cling to." "I am not yet ascended." Mary appears to have held Him by the feet and worshiped Him. "Go to My brethren." First servants, then disciples, then friends; now, after the resurrection, brethren. "I ascend." I am clothing Myself with My eternal form; I have laid down My life that I might take it again and use it for the blessedness of My brethren. "My Father," etc. Father of Christ by nature and of men by grace.

18. "Mary—told the disciples." An apostle to the apostles. Mary was the first to see Jesus and the first to proclaim His resurrection.

IV. Jesus appears to the apostles (vs. 19-23). 19. "At evening." The events of the day had been many and important, and the apostles, except Thomas who was absent, were probably talking over what they had seen and heard. "Doors were shut—for fear." There is nothing to show that the Jews designed to molest the disciples, but because Christ had been put to death they had reason to fear for their safety. "Jesus—in the midst." In verse 26 John refers to the fact that the doors were shut in a way to leave but little doubt that he intends to convey the impression that Christ entered by His own power while they were shut. "Peace be unto you." His usual salutation and benediction. 20. "He shewed." Luke makes mention of several other things that took place before He showed them His hands and side. See Luke 24:37, 38. Jesus proceeded to convince them that He was indeed a real person. "His hands and His side." Luke says hands and feet. This leaves no doubt that Jesus was nailed to the cross and not tied on as many were. Jesus told them to handle Him (Luke 24:39), which they probably did. "Glad." They were terrified at first, but when they knew Him they were glad. "When they saw." It was at this time that He gave to them another proof that He was the same Jesus whom they had known. He called for food (Luke 24:41-43) and did eat before them. Afterward the apostles called attention to what now occurred as a proof of their Lord's resurrection (Acts 10:41).

21. "Hath sent Me." As I was sent to proclaim the truth of the Most High so I send you for the very same purpose, clothed with authority and influenced by the Spirit. 22. "Breathed on them," intimating by this that they were to be made new men. "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Out of His fulness their minds and hearts were to be filled, and thus they would be prepared to carry on the work after He had left them. 23. "Ye remit," etc. The Revised Version renders this, "Whose soever sins ye forgive, they are forgiven unto them; whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."

Money Made Nowadays by Care Being Taken That Nothing Be Allowed to Go to Waste

By William Conger Morgan.

THE chemist examines and scrutinizes every kind the factory puts out, in search for something made of use. Three-fourths of the prepared products market today owe their existence wholly or in part by-products of the petroleum industry. Carload load of dynamite comes from the glycerine recovered the "sweet waters" of the candle-manufacturer's waste of the soap maker. The myriads of buttons speak of their rise from the hoofs and horns of house floors.

The by-products, having been thus called to the aid of the industries grown to such proportions as to outrank some of the older interests, was formerly waste is today the staple article produced, the former tured product having become the by-product. Some are still with the old method of "burning charcoal," in which the wood was heaps, covered with turf, and set on fire. The smoke rose lazily week, while the pile was watched day and night lest the fire should and consume as well as char. Finally the mound was torn apart and obtained. By this method three-quarters of the weight of the peared. An investigation proved that an amount of fuel gas equal the charcoal produced was lost, besides about 1 percent of wood acetic acid. One percent seems a small fraction, but in this products are of prime importance. Today the process is entirely The wood is piled on steel cars and run into huge masonry chambers by furnaces. Here a few hours accomplish the work of the same weeks in the older process. The charcoal stays on the cars while portions pass off. Lime takes the acid out of the mixture, the densens, and the gas is piped around to the furnaces and burned. gas furnish insufficient fuel, the charcoal is burned also, and thus wood furnishes the means of heating the next.

The process then becomes, not one for the production of charcoal the manufacture of wood-alcohol and acetic acid. This 1 percent cohol made in the United States alone in one year is worth $4 acetic acid another million, while the whole amount of charcoal would sell for less than this last figure.—Harper's Magazine.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

Tam Miller was in Clanton Thursday.

J. A. Poole, G. A. Keen, R. P. Kendrick, A. D. Rawlinson, Mr. and Mrs. John Roberts and J. F. Johnson were in town in attendance on the Johnson trial.

J. H. Henley and son, Jake, were in Clanton Thursday.

Dr. E. Knight was in town Monday.

'Squire J. S. Dennis was a visitor Monday.

Judge Reynolds went to Montgomery Sunday evening and expects to visit Tampa, Fla., before he returns home.

Prof. Ross, chemist of Auburn Institute, and Hon. Wm. H. Seymour, president of the Alabama Cotton Association, have been invited to address the cotton meeting on Saturday, June 3.

Wiley Littlejohn visited Montgomery Monday.

Miss Nell Mullins returned from Marion Friday, she having been a pupil at the Judson Institute for young ladies.

Mrs. E. A. Matthews, who went to Marion a few days ago to visit her daughter at the Judson Institute, returned Friday bringing the Misses Marion and Emmett with her, and also Miss Helen Patrick as a visitor. Miss Patrick is the daughter of Dr. Patrick, the distinguished president of Judson.

Clerk H. I. Honeycutt was awakened out of a peaceful slumber Sunday night, or rather Monday morning, it being between one and two o'clock by visitors who said they must see him. Poor Henry, not knowing whether it was a fire or a fight dressed and went out and found a couple who wanted a marriage license. Henry, who also holds Judge Reynold's well known views about promoting matrimony, went over to the court house, issued a license and then married them. The happy couple was W. T. Patterson and Miss Charlotte Jones. May they be ever happy and prosperous.

The L. and N. has changed time on some of the trains. The accommodation that formerly went south at 8:19 a. m. now goes at 7:35. The evening accommodations pass at Clanton at 5:32 p. m.

John Pierce Wade visited the business part of Clanton on Tuesday. He is interested in the ice house.

The committee of the S. C. A. having the matter of the warehouse, etc., in hand have invited the mayors of all the towns in Chilton county to submit to the meeting on June 3 what inducements their respective towns will offer to have the plant located there.

A protracted meeting was inaugurated at the Methodist church Sunday by the pastor, Rev. J. T. Eckford. The Rev. S. W. Williams, of Citronelle, came Monday to assist in the good work. Meetings will be held every day at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m., and it is to be hoped that success will attend the effort to revive and stimulate Christian work in this town, and a general awakening result.

On Saturday, June 3, Calera has a big picnic, under the charge of the Confederate Veterans. It's an all day affair, with speechmaking and games of all kinds, and a baseball game in the afternoon between Montevallo and Calera.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The following criminal cases were disposed of in the last few days of our court: Cone Johnson, 3 charges of burglary, 9 years in all. Major Oden, 4 cases of grand larceny, 12 years in all. John W. Davis, selling liquor, continued generally. The same, forgery, 2 years. Lige Long, assault with a weapon, $10. Anthony Golden, 2 cases of assault with intent to murder, 10 years in all. Jesse Benson, abusive language, nol pros. The same, carrying concealed weapon, $50 fine. Lee Hubbard, carrying concealed weapon, continued generally. The same, assault to murder, 2 years. W. J. A. Melton, assault, $10. The same, murder in the first degree, continued. Wiley Williams, selling liquor, $50 fine. Tompkins Littleton, D. R. W., $20. The general interest centered in the trial of Henry Johnson for the killing of Ace Rawlinson. McCullough was indicted for the same offense, but the cases were separated by request of his counsel, and as his case could not be reached this term of court, he is let out on $1,000 bail. After much delay a jury was got on Thursday, viz.: F. A. Gulledge, foreman; J. M. Grant, W. F. Deshazo, N. N. Martin, W. R. Dawson, J. M. Barnes, Henry Splann, T. J. Griffin, J. C. Grimes, Joseph Raines, W. J. Lambert and G. W. Armstrong. The battle was long drawn out, Johnson's counsel, Messrs. Jess Stallings, Smith and Middleton, and Adams, fighting every inch of ground. It was remarked by several gentlemen who were regular in their attendance at this trial "that Mr. Stallings went deeper into the general law for a case of this kind than they had ever heard in this county in a criminal case." The medical fraternity of the town were out in full force, Drs. Matthews and Johnson being called by the state, while Drs. Hayes, Campbell, Goggans and Hopkins were put up by the defense. The evidence was in and both sides rested by noon Saturday, and the afternoon session was consumed by the summing up and Judge Brewer's charge to the jury. An hour and a half was allowed each side, Solicitor Bowling making the opening address, followed by Attorney Stallings, Lawyer Collier closing. The court house was fairly well filled, many ladies being in the audience, in fact, there has been a number of lady spectators during the trial. No doubt if their crops had not kept them at home our farmers would have been out in full force, for they dearly love a good speech, and would have got one from the Hon. Jess. At 6 o'clock the jury retired, bringing in their verdict of "guilty of murder in the second degree," and 13 years in the penitentiary. The case will be appealed to the supreme court, something like 300 exceptions having been taken during the trial. Mr. Stallings is an ideal criminal lawyer, never losing a point through losing his temper, and has a very gentlemanly manner in examining a witness, which is refreshing to see when so many lawyers hold to the opposite course. There were 29 witnesses for the state and 30 for the defense summoned. Johnson has elected to go to the state farm pending the supreme court's decision on his appeal, as if the verdict is against him, he will have so much time served. W. J. A. Melton is the only prisoner left in the jail, but an attempt will be made to get him out on habeas corpus shortly, otherwise he will have to stay there until the fall term of court.

FARM AND GARDEN

THE FARM HOT-BEDS

A hot-bed consists of a rectangular frame made of boards ten inches wide in front and fourteen in back, placed on their edges and nailed together, the end pieces being bevelled off and the whole covered with sash, such as old windows.

The beds are made in a convenient location facing the south, as on a hillside. If sheltered at the north by a hedge or fence much more heat will be available.

A sufficient quantity of fresh horse droppings containing the long straw or leaves is piled up under cover, wet down occasionally if necessary, and turned every day for ten days or two weeks. Then it will be ready for the beds if the odor is sweet and agreeable. This material is to furnish the heat, through decay, for three or four months.

The frame-work is set on the ground at the desired place and the enclosed space is dug out to a depth of 3½ to 4 feet. The soil thrown out can be used to advantage in banking around the frame. The manure is then placed in this excavation, layer by layer, until within six inches of the surface of the ground, each layer being packed down till firmland level. A layer of three parts good garden loam to one part of rottened manure follows, deep enough to bring the whole to a level with the ground. The sash is put on and the bed is left until sticks left thrust in, show on being held in the hand, a diminishing temperature.

The bed may be planted at any time after this, doing it on bright, hot days, at the brightest, hottest time. There is a great variety of things that can be grown. Lettuce plants may be started, or those previously started in the hot- may be put out; radishes sown between, or lettuce seed for a second crop. Strawberries may be forced in them. Dwarf beans, celery, parsley, early peas, herbs, etc., can be started, and even brought to maturity. But for the farm it provides a means of starting cabbage and tomatoes, two very necessary crops.

When these plants are off, the bed will still furnish heat enough to mature a crop of mushrooms, or better, some cucumber or melon seeds planted will give an abundance of fine early fruit.

Careful watering and care to leave a crack of air always on to take off the "sweat" is all the care necessary other than careful ventilating on bright days so that the temperature will not rise so high that it is unfavorable to the crop in them. Wooden shutters and straw mats are a valuable addition for covering the sash on stormy days or cold nights.

If you have never tried a hot-bed make up one this year and see for yourself the help one of these miniature greenhouses is. On many large, private estates the gardeners have no other means for supplying cauliflowers, lettuce, mushrooms, strawberries and other vegetables and fruits out of season, when such things are in demand, to say nothing of growing a succession of flowers.—R. L. Adams in Massachusetts Ploughman.

SMALL PASTURES MORE DESIRABLE.

A very common practice among old farmers was to make their pastures as large as possible, claiming that there was a great saving in the way of fencing and that there was comparatively little difference in grazing a small or large pasture. This has been found to be quite an erroneous idea and the demand now is for small pastures and frequent changes. All kinds of stock have been found to do better when given a change of pasture every few days. When stock is confined too long on one pasture it becomes overstocked and they do not seem to relish it as well as they do new, fresh pasturage. There is also a great saving in pasture by using small fields in this way; when frequent changes are made, the grass is not so liable to become so rank in places that they will not eat it, a condition which almost invariably arises when stock is allowed the range of large fields. Especially is frequent change desirable for sheep and when not given them they do not thrive as they should. Putting on fresh pasture even when no better than the one from which they have been changed seems to give them a new start. He who changes his stock frequently during a year will find that his sheep have made much better gains than those of his neighbor who has confined them mostly to one pasture. By having small fields it is possible to have a variety of grasses, which is so desirable in the farming of pastures for any animal. Of all kinds of live stock there is none which is so wasteful a grazer as the hog and he should only be allowed access to as much grass as he will keep well cropped. Allow him the range of one field ten days or two weeks and then change to another and you will find that he seems to like the change very much, as he finds the fresh grass tender and sweet.—T. W. Jones in the Epitomist.

THE BREEDING STOCK.

If the hens and the males to be used for breeding purposes have been properly wintered there ought to be no trouble in hatching chicks which will thrive; on the other hand, if the males have been kept half starved, or have been so placed that they have spent the winter in fighting each other, they are not in condition for mating. If the hens and pullets have been short on exercise, have been overfed or underfed, have occupied damp, dark houses, they are not in condition to produce eggs which are fit for hatching.

Turn attention to the breeding stock now and first of all see that the feeding and care of the female is what it should be. Have the house comfortable, but also have plenty of ventilation and find some way to force her to take needed exercise; cut off on the corn feed and increase the wheat and other muscle-making grains. As for the males, place them where they too may be well cared for and fed, so as to get up the greatest amount of energy and vitality before they are turned in with the hens. No work in the poultry business is more important than this now, for the future of the flock may depend upon how well the breeding stock is brought up to the highest perfection. —Indianapolis News.

GINSENG GARDENING.

The culture of ginseng is now carried on successfully in all parts of this country. It is not confined to its native home, the forest, but the prairie now produces "seng" (pronounced sang.) This is not a business for men only but women and children now own and tend the gardens. The size of these gardens depends on the ability of the owner to tend them, ranging from the miniature pots of a few hundred plants to immense nurseries of several hundred thousand plants and whose value runs well up towards the hundred thousand dollar mark. The supply of wild root is nearing extinction and as a result, the owners of ginseng gardens find good money not only in producing the root for market but also in supplying seeds and roots to stock other gardens. An idea can be had of the immense yield of an acre when it is understood that they are planted very close—four to six inches. Seeds appear the second year and roots are of marketable size in four to six years. Dry roots are quoted at $4 to $5 per pound while green roots for nursery stock sell for several times that amount. At the same time the plant is producing each year after the second, seeds which are worth nearly a nickel each.—The Epitomist.

THE EWES IN SPRING.

During recent years it has been a practice to clip as soon as possible after the lambing season, and we have been well satisfied with the result. The wool presents a much better appearance and is free from weak spots. It is well known that it is difficult to keep a good milking ewe from going down in flesh, and this is sure to weaken the strength of the staple. The ewes must necessarily be stabled much of the time, and the lambs soon begin to tramp over them when lying, which soils and injures the wool. We clip without washing and select a mild spell of weather for doing it, and when they have been clipped for a few days a cold flurry does not seem to affect them; but if out when a rain comes they rapidly gather to the shed, and this is a decided advantage to the lambs, as they will often remain out, if not clipped, until the lamb is very cold. After clipping both the ewes and lambs seem to improve more rapidly.

GOOD FOR THE HORSES.

Sveral are complaining that indigestion is ailing work horses which have not had much to do the past winter and have had no sufficient or green food. Under such conditions horses that are suffering from indigestion may be given, a good veterinarian says, two pounds of green flax seed, eight ounces of powdered nitre, four ounces of powdered gentian, five ounces of ginger, four ounces of powdered anise seed. Mix together thorough. Dose a teaping tablespoonful once a day in the grain. The tonic may be discontinued after ten days if the horse is given an abundance of light exercise daily. Some green succulent feed is what they need. Some cut carrots, potatos, or beets would be good mixed in a bran mash.—Indiana Farmer.

GOOD SOWS.

In the selection of sows there are a few points which should be sought for in addition to those mentioned as requisite in the boar. Sows should be docile and have at least twelve teats of equal size, evenly placed, and carried well forward on the belly. Large flat teats are invariably blind, i. e., they possess no milk duct. Young sows should also be of good size and quality. Care should be taken to ascertain if their dams have been good milkers, as this quality is hereditary. A young sow should get plenty of exercise until she is ready for breeding, which is at the age of about eight months.

. . The . . Last Word Against Woman Suffrage

By Caroline F. Corbin.

Aside from the general fact that women and suffrage are better kept apart, for the best good of both, the following are a few reasons why tax-paying women should not be given the ballot:

Because the property qualification for voters has been long ago eliminated from our government, and any return to it in this time when the dangers of plutocracy are not only serious, but are being used to incite sedition and violence is ill-timed and inexpedient.

Because the majority of women owners of property have become possessed of it through gift or inheritance from the original male accumulators of it, and not by the exercise of any business skill or enterprise of their own. They are passive rather than active property owners, and are thus the less liable to be fitted for the active duties of ownership. As a matter of fact, few of them do vote in those corporations where the ownership of stocks gives them that right.

Because much of the property in the hands of women has been placed there by male relatives for the sake of those privileges and immunities which the law allows to property so held. In most states woman preperty owners have already more privileges than men, a fact which makes men willing to place property in their hands, in which they themselves hold all a voter's interests.

Because the paramount duties and interests of women lie in a higher sphere than that of the material interests of life, and anything which tends unnecessarily to divert their attention to the selfish and material aspects of the business world subtracts just so much from their possible usefulness in that higher life which has for its aim the development and improvement of the morals of the home and society. This distinction is already too much lost sight of in our modern social conditions, where the effort to place men and women on a so-called "equality" has resulted in the lowering of the ideals of womanhood in a way that involves great loss to the higher interests of society.

Because the call for suffrage is by no means general on the part of taxpaying women. A large proportion of them, when the question has been raised, have enrolled themselves against it, while many women property owners are among the most effective supporters of the anti-suffrage associations. This country has always erred on the side of a too liberal rather than a too restricted suffrage, and every measure increasing this liberality should be carefully scrutinized, and only approved when weighty reasons can be adduced in its favor. No such reasons can be found for giving the ballot to taxpaying women.—New York Sun.

. . The . . One-Hundreth Wife

By Elizabeth Jordan.

Behold a problem constantly reappearing in every quarter of the United States. A man in Smallville has attained thirty-five years, a wife, two or three children, and success—a Smallville success. He is, we will say, cashier of the Smallville bank with a total income of about $2000 a year. This income is to be considered in connection with the fact that, such is the cost of living in Smallville, eggs sell for ten cents a dozen; the best butter is from fifteen to twenty cents a pound; porterhouse steak is fifteen cents.

The man owns his home. He is a prominent member of the church. He might be mayor of the city, but "business is business," so he leaves political preferment to the saloon element, who find it not incompatible with business success. Church circles and high society in general in Smallville look down on politics; indeed, it is held to be an indication of real superiority to look down on Smallville. Cows run the streets; saloons are wide open all day Sunday; taxes are scandalously disproportionate to public improvements; but—it is Smallville. What can one expect of a town like Smallville?

As often as business permits, the cashier of the Smallville bank runs down to the city. For the while middle West, the city is Chicago. He buys clothing for the family there, and tea and coffee and fine groceries—what can one find fit to eat or wear in Smallville? He goes about Chicago, deafened by the roar of the life there, intoxicated by the motion of it; he rubs his hands together in the warmth of his satisfaction, and declares, "Ah! this is something like!" Then he remembers bitterly that he is out of it—in Smallville. Behold! here is the measure of his own greatness!

One day the tempter meets him. A Chicago man looking for fresh brains and plump purses offers him an opportunity to get away from Smallville and go into business in Chicago. Now the woman enters. What shall the wife decide? For the man always tells his friend in Chicago that he must go back to Smallville and talk it over with his wife. What does she say? Ninety-nine times out of a hundred she decides in favor of going to Chicago. She wants to be near the great shops. She likes style; she wants to be in it. She says it will be a great opportunity for the children.

And what does the hundredth wife decide? That she prefers a nice, airy home of her own with a splendid shady yard to a six-room flat in Chicago; that the public school of Smallville in which $20,000 has been invested is good enough for her children, who can always run home at recess for a kiss and an apple until they are old enough to enter the state university on a diploma from the Smallville high-school; that so far as the husband is concerned, it is better to be somebody in a small town than nobody in a great city; and as for the shortcomings of Smallville, what's to hinder the best people of the place making the town as good as they are? Thus one sees that this universal American problem, or a rational solution, compels only the achievement of another problem: How multiply the one-hundredth wife?—Harper's Bazar.

The Poor Idle-Rich

By Henry Waterson.

The idle millionaire, whether he has a title or not, must follow the fashion if he would keep in the swim; and to keep in the swim is the objective point. For him the year is subdivided, laid out in regular parterre, like an Italian garden, and he must even fulfill his destiny as a gentleman of wealth and leisure; the world to him six seasons—Paris, London, Switzerland, the shooting box in Scotland, the country house in England, the south of France. He buys a palace, lives in it awhile and goes away. "So awfully dreary, doncherknow." He buys a yacht, tires of it, sells it and buys another. "Nothing like the water, doncherknow." The automobile craze caught him where he was weakest—for fast, fast, faster is the word—and he is now scudding and scorching over Continental byways, having found a new and costly toy—which perhaps accounts for some of the absentees from Nice. In a word, fortune's favorite is never happy except when he is giving proof that he can spend more money than his rival, yet wretched when he finds how little it brings him either of distinction or diversion.

To tell the truth, the women get on much better than the men. They still love to dance. It shows their faces. It parades their gowns. The men despise dancing. "Too fatiguing, doncherknow." It is so much easier to gamble and to flirt. Your professional beauty, on the other hand, has a deal to engage her—herself, to begin with; then clothes; then diamonds; ropes of pearls, and, finally, the men. If hard put to it, she can amuse herself of a rainy afternoon before her looking-glass; selfish and vain, and a philosopher. When the men are tired of one another or get broke they will come after her. She knows that, and she knows them—only too well. She has learned all their tricks and their manners, and can talk slang and scandal with them, smoke and drink with them, and often beat them at bridge or bacarrat.

For my part, I would embezzle no man of his happiness; not even his money; though sometimes I want to take one of these blase youngsters of two or three and twenty, who fancies he knows the world, and that outside the titles and the dollars there is nothing in it, and tell him what an ass he is, and put him in a Keeley cure for simpletons.

BUDGET OF HUMOR

THEN PROCEED!

A farmer had a seeder for the sowing of his seed,
'Twas a seeder made of cedar, and, said I, "Pray, is there need
Of a seeder made of cedar?" Said the farmer, "Yes, indeed,
I have never seed a seeder, sir, that I'd concede the speed
To exceed a cedar seeder for the seeding of the seed."

THE MODERN FARMER.

How He Lives as Compared With Years Ago.

THE farming life of to-day, contrasted with that of years ago, is a paradise of comfort and convenience. Even in the remote [illegible] and the end of advantages that a few years ago would have made possible, would scarcely appear to the present generation.

The twentieth century soil tiller receives daily all the modern conveniences. His mail is delivered daily. He has telephonic connection with the business and social world, affording the best opportunities for marketing to advantage. His home is of recent architecture, constructed of wood, brick or stone, well furnished. He has up-to-date sanitary and modern heating appliances, and with the advent of acetylene gas, he has a modern lighting. At night his home is cheerfully illuminated and his wife is happier, for it is a recognized fact that acetylene for the home has commended to the favor of the women users of gas. There are in the United States the farmers of the largest of all classes, and, in fact, he has not been slow in availing himself of this [illegible].

The continued growth and progress of this great country, over a cause which [illegible] no greater exemplification on the part of the farmer is becoming more evident from the freest, broadest and deepest.

Sioux Burying Ground.

The [illegible] on an Iowa farm many relics including human skeletons of an Indian race, the existence of which there are no traditions and no other evidences has [illegible] and puzzled the historians and scientists of the region. Professor Van Hyning, of the geological department, concludes that the bones are a splendid representation of the once powerful and [illegible] of the Sioux, and that [illegible] antedate the settlement of the white man. Black locust trees, [illegible] in diameter, are growing on [illegible] of the burial mounds, which alone is proof of great age.

Cutting Dies.

A correspondent of the Electrical [illegible] that steel dies are used for drawing sizes of wire as fine as [illegible] inch diameter, diamond dies being used for finer sizes. The Roebling plant at New Jersey draws a [illegible] one inch in diameter, and runs several miles to the pound. The steel [illegible] when it is made costs $50 a ton, and a ton of the finished wire is worth over $80,000. This seems to be a [illegible] of creating values.

Against Railway Whistles.

Railway whistles inflict torture on so many people that the effort [illegible] to check this plague will be followed with interest. Austria [illegible] in need of a system of dumb signals to start and stop the trains. Germany is trying compressed air whistles instead of steam, and France experiments with horns.

Backache, "The Blues"

Symptoms of Organic Derangement in Women—Thousands of Sufferers Find Relief.

Everywhere we hear women say: "It seems as though my back would break," "I feel so tired," "I ache all over," "I am all out of sorts," "I'm so nervous," "I have the blues." These significant remarks prove that the system requires attention. Backache and "the blues" are direct symptoms of an inward trouble which sooner or later declare itself. It may be caused by diseased kidneys or by uterine derangement. Nature requires assistance and at once, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound instantly asserts its curative power over these peculiar ailments of women. It has been the standby of thousands of American women for twenty years and the most specialists agree that it is the most universally successful remedy for woman's ills known to the sex.

The following letters from Mrs. Holmes and Mrs. Cotrely are among the thousands which Mrs. Pinkham received this year from those she has restored.

Mrs. Holmes' testimony is convincing. She lives at Larimore, North Dakota:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I feel it my duty to tell all suffering women of the relief I have found in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. When I commenced taking the Compound I suffered everything with backaches, headaches, menstrual and ovarian troubles. I am completely cured and enjoy the best of health, and I owe it all to you."

When women are troubled with irregular, suppressed or painful menstruation, weakness, leucorrhœa, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, backache, bloating (or flatulence), general debility, indigestion and nervous prostration, or are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, "all gone" and "want-to-be-left-alone" feelings, blues and hopelessness, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles.

No other medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female troubles. Refuse to buy any substitute.

FREE ADVICE TO WOMEN.

Remember, every woman is cordially invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham if there is anything about her symptoms she does not understand. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass., her advice is free and cheerfully given to every ailing woman who asks for it. Her advice and medicine have restored to health more than one hundred thousand women.

Preparedness.

Begin the morning by saying to thyself, I shall meet the busybody, the ungrateful, arrogant, deceitful, envious and unsocial, but I, who have seen the nature of the good, that it is beautiful, and that of the bad, that it is ugly, can be injured by none of them.—Marcus Aurelius.

Smallest Republics.

St. Goust, scarcely two square miles in area, is the smallest self-governed state in the world. It is situated on a rocky mountain top about 150 miles from Andorra, in the Bassas Pyrenees. Its population is about 130. Another miniature republic is Tavolara, an island about five miles long and half a mile wide, situated off the north coast of Sardinia. It contains about seventy inhabitants.

The Smallest Monarchy.

The sovereign who reigns over the smallest monarchy in the world is the king of the Cocos, a group of islands near Sumatra. These islands were discovered about eight hundred years ago, but were comparatively little known until 1825, when Mr. Rose, an Englishman, visited them, was struck by their beauty and took up his abode there. It is his grandson, George Reiss, who now holds sway over the Cocos.

Just Discrimination in Railway Rates.

All railroad men qualified to speak on the subject in a responsible way are likely to agree with President Samuel Spencer, of the Southern Railway, when he says: "There is no division of opinion as to the desirability of stopping all secret or unjustly discriminatory devices and practices of whatsoever character."

Mr. Spencer, in speaking of "unjustly discriminatory" rates and devices, makes a distinction which is at once apparent to common sense. There may be discrimination in freight rates which is just, reasonable and imperatively required by the complex commercial and geographical conditions with which expert rate makers have to deal. To abolish such open and honest discrimination might paralyze the industries of cities, States and whole sections of our national territory.

This distinction between just and unjust discrimination is clearly recognized in the conclusions of the International Railway Congress, published yesterday:

"Tariffs should be based on commercial principles, taking into account the special conditions which bear upon the commercial value of the services rendered. With the reservation that rates shall be charged without arbitrary discrimination to all shippers under like conditions, the making of rates should as far as possible have all the elasticity necessary to permit the development of the traffic and to produce the greatest results to the public and to the railroads themselves."

The present proposal is, as Mr. Walker D. Hines, of Louisville, showed in his remarkable testimony the other day before the Senate Committee at Washington, to crystalize flexible and justly discriminatory rates into fixed Government rates which cannot be changed except by the intervention of some Government tribunal, and by this very process to increase "the temptation to depart from the published rate and the lawful rate in order to meet some overpowering and urgent commercial condition."—New York Sun.

CAUGHT BY THE CRY.

The Way an Australian Bandit Was Trapped in London.

"Coo-e-e" is the curious cry that was one of the signals of the native blacks of Australia. The cry was speedily adopted by the invading whites. The final "ee" is a very high note, a sort of prolonged screech that resounds for long distances through the bush and thus enables separated persons to ascertain their relative positions. On one notable occasion this peculiar cry was heard in London. A daring bushranger made his appearance one morning in front of a bank in Ballarat and coolly posted a notice on the door to the effect that the place would be closed for an hour.

Entering, he terrorized the officials with his revolver and got clear away with $30,000. Some time afterward the authorities received information that the man had been seen in London. One day a detective thought he espied his man in the Strand; but, not being quite sure, he hit upon an expedient. He uttered a piercing "Coo-e-e."

Passersby stood fixed in astonishment, but the Australian, acting on the spur of the moment and recognizing the familiar sound, hastened to the person who uttered it. He was promptly arrested and was taken back to Australia.—Chicago News.

On the St. Petersburg-Moscow Line.

A traveler in Russia writes: On the St. Petersburg-Moscow line benighted Russia has devised an excellent way of refreshment. Supper or breakfast, it matters not which on the twelve hours' journey. A huge refreshment room is open at midnight or at 6 in the morning. Counters spread with dainties—smoked salmon and all kinds of fish, flesh, and fowl. Hot tea ready in glasses. Vodka in liquor glasses as a background. And long tables at which square meals may be ordered and served in a twinkling. Everything is marked by a card indicating price. You go round and eat what you like. At the end you mention what you have eaten and pay. In some matters the Russian must be honest. And this writer has been for two years haunted by the remembrance of one unfamiliar fish eaten between St. Petersburg and Moscow. He owes Russia three half-pence, for he forgot the item in the refreshment room—and remembered it at Moscow!

How They Do It.

The "suit club" idea seems to be spreading in Kansas City. Within the last few weeks a "shoe club" along the same lines has been organized, and comes the "theatre club." The "theater club" is composed of ten young men who belong to the same "set." They do not earn enough money to be able to afford to take their girls to the high-priced shows each week. Their plan is to meet once a week and each contribute 60 cents to a general fund. Then they draw numbers from a hat, and the two who draw numbers 5 and 10 divide the $6 and take their girls to the theater. No member is permitted the use of the money two weeks in succession. If he draws a lucky number the second time in succession he gives it to another member, usually one who has been unfortunate in the drawing. The club has been in existence several weeks, and results have been satisfactory. Of course, the girls don't know about the scheme. —Kansas City Times.

Are the Packers Receiving Fair Play?

When the Garfield report on the business methods of the packers appeared, after eight months' investigation, it was severely criticised and roundly denounced. After three months of publicity it is significant that those who attempted to discredit it have failed to controvert the figures contained in that exhaustive document. The public is beginning to notice this omission, and the feeling is rapidly growing that the sensational charges out of which the "Beef Investigation" arose were without foundation. If the official statements of the report are susceptible of contradiction, a good many people are now asking why the facts and figures are not furnished to contradict them.

The truth seems to be that most of the charges contain unfounded sensational assertions. A flagrant example of this appeared in a recent article in an Eastern magazine, to the effect that "forty Iowa banks were forced to close their doors in 1903-4 by the Beef Trust's manipulation of cattle prices." Chief Clerk Cox of the banking department of the Iowa State Auditor's office, has tabulated the list of banks given in the magazine article and has publicly denounced the statement as utterly untrue. He gives separately the reasons for each failure mentioned and officially states that they have been caused by unwise speculations and by reckless banking methods. It may be well to suspend judgment upon the packers until the charges against them are proved.

$50.00 PRIZES—We believe every one should have three counts so they can have one on each side of what they think is correct, to be more sure to hit it. To encourage this we will give $50.00 extra to winners of first prizes if they have three counts. Remember if you have one count you get first prize ONLY, BUT IF YOU HAVE THREE COUNTS AND WIN YOU GET $50.00 EXTRA.

AWARDS will be made as follows: The person giving correct or nearest correct count will get first prize. Next nearest correct, second prize, etc. In case of a tie for any prize it will be awarded to the person giving best plan for counting dots.

JUDGES. The awarding of prizes will be wholly in the hands of disinterested judges. The Hon. John W. Holtzman, Mayor of the City of Indianapolis, is chairman of the Committee of Judges. We are bound our contests must be ABSOLUTELY FAIR.

OUR FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES—As to whether we are abundantly able to do as we say, we refer to any bank or trust company in the city of Indianapolis. Our offer will be carried out to the letter

In the event of more than one person submitting the same plan and it being considered the best plan by the judges each person so tying will be asked to tell in fifty words how best to improve MADAME. The one making the best suggestion gets first prize, next best next, etc. UNDERSTAND THIS IS ONLY IN CASE OF TIE IN PLAN, WHICH IS NOT AT ALL LIKELY. No one connected with Madame or The Union will be allowed to compete. Contest closes July 1, 1905, but get your counts in at once. Anybody having THREE COUNTS entered may enter additional counts at 25c each. Be careful to give your plan of counting, as the best plan used will decide all ties.

PRIZES GUARANTEED—We will guarantee to give a prize worth one dollar at least, to every person who sends a correct count and $2.00 for a year's subscription to Madame and The Union.

THE DOTS—Good counters can coin dots into dollars. The contest will not last long. Make hay while the sun shines. There is fun in counting and money besides. Of course, you know how to count. Any child can count. The dots are puzzling because there are so many. That is why $6,000 in prizes will be given away free to the best counters. The better you count and plan, the better your chances for getting one of the 757 Prizes.

The more counts you register the surer you are of winning one of the big free prizes. Anybody having three counts entered may enter additional counts at 25c each.

The list of prizes is large. They are worth working for. You have 757 chances. You are as likely as anybody to get first, but if you don't get first prize there are lots of other prizes worth having. It all depends upon you. If you can count and think up a good plan you are likely to win.

Russia and the Cholera

Close Guard on the Plague Peculiar Pan of Minister Plenipotentiary's Duties . . .

By Andrew D. White . . . . . .

A PECULIAR duty during my last day in St. Petersburg was to watch the approach of cholera, especially on the Persian frontier. Admirable precautions had been taken for securing telegraphic information, and every day I received notices from the foreign office as to the result, which I communicated to Washington. For ages Russia had relied on fetishisms of various kinds to preserve her from epidemics, but at last her leading officials had come to realize the necessity of applying modern science to the problem, and they did this well. In the city "sanitary columns" were established, made up of small squads of officials representing the medical and engineering professions and the police. These visited every nook and corner of the city, and, having extraordinary powers for the emergency, compelled even the most dirty of the population to keep their premises clean. Excellent hospitals and laboratories were established, and of these I learned much from a former Cornell student who held an important position in one of them. Coming to town three or four times a week from my summer cottage in Finland, I was struck by the precautions on the Finnish and other railways; notices of what was to be done to prevent cholera and to meet it in case it appeared were posted everywhere in six different languages; disinfectants were made accessible everywhere; the seats and hangings in the railway cars were covered with leather cloth frequently washed with disinfectants; and to the main trains a hospital car was attached, while a temporary hospital, well equipped, was established at each main station. In spite of this the number in the cholera hospitals at St. Petersburg in the middle of July rose to a very high figure, and the number of deaths each day from cholera was about one hundred

Of these victims the most eminent was Tschaikovsy, the composer, a man of genius and a most charming character, to whom Mr. Andrew Carnegie had introduced me at New York. One evening, at a dinner party, he poured out a goblet of water from a decanter on the table, drank it down, and the next day he was dead. But with this exception the patients were, so far as I learned, almost entirely from the peasant class. Although boiled water was supplied for drinking purposes, and some public-spirited individuals went so far as to set out samovars and the means of supplying hot tea to peasant workmen, the answer of one of the muzhiks when told that he ought to drink boiled water indicated the peasant view: "If God had wished us to drink hot water he would have heated the ..eva."—The Century.

Baby's Bath and Clothing.

By A. P. Reed, M. D.

THE infant should be bathed every morning unless there is some contra-indication. If the baths results in blue fingernails or skin, or seems to weaken or lower the child's vitality, as evinced by cold extremities or nose, or quickened breathing, we may consider these contra-indications to a full bath, and should only sponge off sufficiently for cleanliness. Bathing should be done as quickly as is consistent with thoroughness, and done in the sunlight, if possible, care being taken to protect the infant's eyes from a strong light. The water should be neither very hot nor very cold.

The proper way to adjust the temperature to the age is by means of a thermometer suited to the purpose, and test according to age as follows: At birth the temperature of the bath should be ninety-eight degrees; during the first three or four weeks, ninety-five degrees; one to six months, ninety-three and two-tenths degrees; six to twelve months, ninety degrees; twelve to twenty-four months, eighty-six degrees; and in the third or fourth year, seventy-five degrees. Judgment must be used in all cases, and an attempt be made to meet individual needs. As the child matures, he may be gradually accustomed to a little cool sponging after his bath. This is vigorating and of help in guarding against colds.

In the hottest of weather the temperature may be reduced to eighty degrees in quite young infants, other things being equal. The face should be washed first, while the body is kept wrapped in a warm blanket. The nose, eyes and ears should be gently cleaned, the nose being especially important, as any obstruction of the child's respiration easily reduces the child's vitality. The scalp should be soaped, washed off and well dried. In washing the body, especial care should be given to the folds of the skin, the places most prone to chafe.

The temperature should be tested occasionally and both hot and cold water should be within easy reach to temper the bath as needed. A good way is to keep the bath thermometer constantly in the water and note its changes.

The soap used should be free from irritating substances. Two sponges should be used, one for the head and face, the other for the rest of the bath.

The clothing of the infant should be loose and warm, loose clothing being warmer than tight, in that it does not restrict the muscles or circulation and furnishes more storage for the body heat. Before a child can walk, it gets its exertion wholly by moving arms and legs, and these should have a chance for free action. If all useless buttons and fastenings are dispensed with, the clothes can be adjusted more quickly after the bath, a point of no small importance for both the child and its guardian.

For the first few weeks of life the healthy infant passes most of its time in sleep, and later than this the more sleep it can get in the twenty-four hours the better.—Good Housekeeping

CARNEGIE HERO AWARDS

First Disbursements From the $5,000,000 Fund.

Survivors of the Brockton Disaster Get $10,000 — Medals and Money for Widows of Three Brave Men.

Pittsburg, Pa.—The Carnegie Hero Commission met here and made the first awards provided for in the $5,000,000 fund created by Ahdrew Carnegie. Nine persons were rewarded for brave acts, six of them receiving bronze medals and three silver medals. Three widows who lost their husbands while the latter were performing acts of bravery received money.

The commission voted $10,000 to the fund for the survivors of the Brockton (Mass.) shoe factory explosion. Including the amount of money given survivors of heroes and for educational purposes the board disposed of $12,200. The contract for manufacturing the medals was awarded to a Philadelphia firm. The commission has not yet decided upon the design of the medals.

Since the establishment of the fund on April 15, 405 cases have been received. Of this number 239 have been refused as not within the scope of the fund, 159 are awaiting investigation, and nine have been granted. The persons to whom medals were awarded, and their acts of heroism, were as follows:

Louis A. Bauman, Jr., aged seventeen, of Rodi, Allegheny County, Pa., received a bronze medal. On July 17, 1904, while a number of boys were swimming in Sulphur Pond Charles Stevick jumped from a springboard into the pond and cried for help. Bauman dived three times for Stevick and finally dragged him to shore.

Lavinia Steele, twenty-seven, of Iowa City, Iowa, got a bronze medal. George E. Hill, of Burlington, and a party of young women went skating on the Iowa River December 9, 1904. The ice broke under Hill. Miss Steele secured an eight-foot pole and dragged Hill out of the water, risking her life on the thin ice.

Thomas H. McCann, thirty-two, of Portland, Me., saw Alfonso Sekosky, aged eight, fall into the ocean from the bridge connecting Portland and South Portland. McCann directed some boys to bring a boat around to him and dived into the ocean. Sekosky threw his arms around McCann's neck, who swam with him. The boat reached him, and the boys took Sekosky from McCann's grasp, but McCann weakened, sank back into the water and was drowned. Cora McCann, the widow, gets a bronze medal and $500.

Gideon King Marshall, thirty-nine, of Springdale, Allegheny County, Pa., lost his life going down into a gaseous well to rescue Arthur Truby, a laborer who had been overcome by gas. Sarah A. Marshall, his widow, receives a silver medal and $500 to pay off a mortgage on her home.

On April 4, 1904, Alexander Cameron, twenty-seven years old, of Lindsay County, Ontario, saw George H. Bryans, a boy, fall into the Scugag River. Cameron jumped in after the boy, caught him and swam ashore. He suffered from cold, exhaustion and nervous shock. He was awarded a silver medal.

Seymour J. Leighton, a machinist, lost his life July 4, 1904, on the Merrimac River, Lawrence, Mass., while rescuing Mary Genevieve Kane and Evelyn Bliss. The girls were in a canoe and were swept over a thirty-foot waterfall. His widow received a bronze medal.

John J. Healy, a hospital attendant at Ellis Island, New York, was awarded a bronze medal for saving the life of an immigrant girl who had jumped into the bay.

Miss Ernestine P. Atwood, aged seventeen, of Melrose, Mass., was bathing at North Weymouth, Mass., when she saw Harry M. Smith struggling in the water and almost exhausted. She rescued him, and receives $500 for educational purposes and a silver medal.

John J. Riley, aged forty-four, receives a bronze medal for saving August Rolkem, of Brooklyn, N. Y., from drowning off the Iron Steamboat Company's pier at Coney Island.

MRS. LIVERMORE DEAD.

Noted Woman's Rights and Temperance Advocate Expires.

Boston, Mass.—Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, well-known temperance advocate and advocate of woman's suffrage, died at her home on Emerson street, Melrose.

Her death was due to a weakness of the heart, brought on by an attack of bronchitis about two weeks ago. She was unconscious for several hours before the end. About her bedside were her daughter, Mrs. J. O. Morris; her granddaughter, Mrs. M. D. Barrows, and Mrs. C. W. Boynton, her secretary, who had been with Mrs. Livermore for many years.

Large Iron Order.

Florence, Ala.—The Florence wagon works has placed with the Sheffield rolling mills an order for 300 tons of bar and strip iron to be used in the construction of the Florence wagon. The Sheffield company is now busily engaged in making a special and superior grade of iron to fill the contract.

Postoffice Robbed By Experts.

Anniston, Ala.—The postoffice at Alexandria was robbed Friday morning by burglars securing $100 in money, $100 worth of stamps, a [illegible] the contents of which are [illegible] and a small amount of [illegible] from the safe of [illegible] which the postoffice is located.

The burglars affected an entrance at the rear door of the office. That they were evidently [illegible] was evidenced by the [illegible] of the safe, as the combination of same was worked in [illegible] one who was perfectly familiar with it. They traveled [illegible] the tracks of the [illegible] Passenger leaving [illegible] train. As soon as the robbery was discovered Postmaster Norris of Odenville informed the county authorities here. The robbers, left [illegible] which they loaded [illegible] to the store, two [illegible] and a barrel of iron.

Postoffice Appointments.

Washington, D. C.—Under the annual readjustment of postmasters' salaries these increases have been announced: Andalusia, fourteen to fifty-six hundred; Citronelle, twelve to fourteen; Cullman, sixteen to seventeen; Decatur, eighteen to nineteen. Postmasters appointed: Adams ville, Jefferson county, Annie L. Reed; Double Springs, Winston county, William C. Curtis, Yantley, Choctaw county, John D. Phillips; Notes, Marshall county, William E. Rudolph; Vine Hill, Autauga county, Thomas J. Marcus.

James C. Black has been appointed regular, Elbert Black substitute rural delivery carrier, route 3, at Falkville.

Rural free delivery route No. 2 on [illegible] established August 1, at Pittsview, Russell county, serving 675 people and 150 houses. Theodore Hart appointed regular; Henry Blackburn, substitute rural carrier route No. 4 at Marion. August 1: Bexar, Marion county, route 2, population 1,116 houses 31; Marion, Perry county, route 5, population 420, houses 105.

Is Railroad Bridge an Escape?

Selma, Ala.—Something of a sensation in tax circles has been caused by the watchful eye of Tax Commissioner Barker discovering that the Louisville and Nashville railroad so far as the county records shows, has not been in for taxes for the past two years the steel bridge over the Alabama river at this point. The bridge was completed about two years ago, and it is not mentioned in the tax records of the county. The commissioner has therefore assessed the bridge at $100,000 for each of the years, and the collection of the amount will add quite a neat sum to the treasury of both the state and the county.

There is a bare possibility that the bridge has been taken cognizance of in some manner by the state board of assessments, but there is no record of it and hence the assessment by the commissioner.

Wants a Milk Inspector.

Mobile, Ala.—The Mobile board of health has on hand a movement looking to the requesting of the general council of the city to provide an ordinance requiring the appointment of a milk inspector. The question was [illegible] some years ago and Mayor [illegible] seemed to the matter in his [illegible] at that time, but nothing has been done. A petition has been started, [illegible] men signing it, calling attention of the board of health to the matter, and it is reliably stated the board will ask attention of the council to the importance of the matter.

Police Cannot Smoke.

Birmingham, Ala.—In accordance with decisions recently rendered by the police commission at a meeting Thursday night, Acting Chief of Police J. S. Mahon this morning issued orders to the department that no patrolman should smoke while on duty in the day time, and that no officer would be allowed to carry on a conversation with citizens on the street corners. The patrolmen must keep on the move also and must not allow crowds to congregate on the street corners. The commission has sounded an alarm of stricter discipline in the Birmingham department than ever before.

Killed With Shotgun.

Anniston, Ala.—There was a killing in the negro section of Lincoln Thursday night about 8 o'clock. A shotgun in the hands of one Harvey Fleming did its fatal work upon the body of Thomas Gover.

Marion Not Worried.

Marion, Ala.—Marion was much amused over a report from Selma. The report states that should the electric line be built and cars operated between Selma and Perry's capital the Southern railway will abandon its track between Marion Junction and Greensboro and will build a line over the old roadbed from Uniontown to Greensboro, thereby leaving Marion high and dry, without railroad connections.

The Marion people have heard this whistle before. They are loaded this time, and if needs be they can build on their own account an electric car line to tap Uniontown, Centreville and Selma, and not ask for assistance. The old trunk line learned them a lesson. They have prepared for emergencies, and have the cash. They laugh at the effort to bluff Marion's Selma friends.

The Marion and Selma electric line is in this attitude: Selma puts up $30,000, Marion $15,000, the right of way is given and all timber or crossties and material for other purposes. Papers are signed up for right of way and timbers. Marion has up $16,200 and Selma about $16,000. Parties from Chicago and New York have proposed to float bonds with the above subscription guaranteed. Selma, it will be noticed, is slightly behind. She promises to come across. If she does the electric line is a go quick. If she don't Marion will find an outlet.

Russell County Storm.

Girard, Ala.—A storm struck the place of William J. McLendon in the Oswichee neighborhood in Russell county Thursday. A number of houses occupied by negroes were blown down and a good many trees were uprooted. Jordan Keith, a negro, was killed by the falling timbers of his own house, his neck being broken. He had told his wife to hurry out of the house, that he would follow. Another negro's leg was broken. A tree to which a calf was tied was uprooted by the wind and blown some distance. The calf was pulled along by the rope, but while injured was not killed.

Very heavy rains have fallen in Russell county this week, making the crop prospects still gloomier. At Uchee there was a perfect cloudburst Tuesday. Great gullies were washed in the cotton fields, and bottoms were waist deep in water.

Another Woodlawn Hold-Up.

Birmingham, Ala.—John Fletcher Senter, a boiler inspector, while en route to his home on Fifty-ninth street, in Woodlawn, claims that he was held up and sandbagged and then robbed. He states that a white man hailed him and while he was running a negro struck him down with a sandbag. He was then relieved of $55 in currency. He claims that he came to Thursday morning and succeeded in reaching home in a dazed condition.

Town Marshal Gray made a thorough investigation into the case and could find no clue to the assailants or secure any further information beyond the statement of Senter.

The citizens who organized a vigilance committee the other night are patrolling the streets and avenues of Woodlawn regularly at nights. Another meeting has been held to take further steps looking to the possible capture of the highwaymen and murderers who have been holding forth in that suburb.

German Immigrants in Anniston.

Anniston, Ala.—About fifty German immigrants arrived in the city Thursday night and were housed at the Arlington Hotel, on Tenth street. The party came in a special car over the Southern. This is the first lot of immigrants to be brought to Anniston. They are to work at the local plant of the Western Steel Car and Foundry Company as day laborers. General Manager McCord stated that these immigrants were brought to Anniston because he could not get as many laborers as he needed at the present time, and that with the orders now on hand he could work many other laborers if he had them.

Stabbed by Negro.

Birmingham, Ala.—Archie Harris, white, was painfully stabbed by a negro Thursday night while walking in the resident portion of the city. The negro managed to make his escape.

A negro with two women was walking in front of Harris and a friend. Harris began laughing aloud, which it seems the negro took offense at, thinking he and his women were the cause of the laughter. The police were called and efforts are being made to locate the negro. Harris is laid up from his wounds.

Distillers Arrested.

Anniston, Ala.—Deputy Marshal M. W. Carden by a ruse captured two alleged distillers that have been wanted for some time by the United States courts. The men arrested were John and Jim Floyd, father and son, of Cleburne county. For some days past the deputy marshal has endeavored to capture these men and was always unsuccessful, so recently while in the neighborhood of their homes he left subpoenas for them to appear in another case in Commissioner Randolph's court, which they did, and were immediately placed under arrest, charged with owning and operating a distillery.

New Court House Begun.

Prattville, Ala.—Work on the lot where the new court house will be built was begun Friday morning. The lot is situated on the corner of Factory and Fourth streets, just one block on Factory street from the present court house. The Board of Revenue saw fit to remove the court house on account of the noise from the cotton mills, which is located just opposite the court house. The contract calls for a completed building in 200 days from the time work is started.

Train of Cars Shipped.

Selma, Ala.—An ocular demonstration of the possibilities of Selma as a manufacturing center and a tribute to its industry was given this morning in a train of ten logging cars shipped by the Peacock Iron Works, to the Bear Creek Lumber Company, at Maniste, Ala. The company sent its own engine to Selma to haul the cars back, and they were indeed splendid specimens, being of 60,000 pounds capacity, the largest made.

Preparing Expedition.

London, Eng.—According to dispatches from Shanghai, the Japanese are preparing an expedition for the island of Sakhalin and have threatened to send a fleet to Shanghai to compel the observance of neutrality with regard to the Russian vessels there. This threat, the dispatches say, has induced the Russian consul to consent that the vessels be interned.

To Erect Building.

Gadsden, Ala.—The First National Bank, the oldest banking institution in the city, has purchased a lot facing thirty-two feet on Broad street and running back eighty feet on Fifth street from Col. R. B. Kyle, paying $10,000 for it, a one-story brick now being on the lot. It is the purpose of the bank officials to erect a costly three-story stone and brick structure.

Tax on Ad Valorem Basis.

Madison, Wis.—The assembly adopted a resolution for a constitutional convention and passed a bill taxing telegraph and telephone companies on an ad valorem basis. The senate concurred in a bill making it mandatory to produce books in court for use in tax cases.

Flood Situation Worse.

El Paso, Tex.—The Rio Grande flood situation grows worse each day. Water is several feet higher north of here and several hundred yards of track on the Santa Fe railroad between El Paso and Albuquerque have been washed out. All traffic here is being diverted over the Southern Pacific to Deming.

Leg Broken.

Gadsden, Ala.—Joe Diamond had the misfortune to get his leg broken Thursday afternoon while at the Coosa Pipe and Foundry Company building by some heavy timbers falling on him. Diamond was at work lifting some timbers, when in some manner they fell on his leg.

One Case of Yellow Fever.

Washington, D. C.—Governor Magoon, of the isthmian canal zone, reports one more case of yellow fever on the isthmus, the patient being J. B. J. Resing, an American engineer, about 35 years of age, employed at Culebra, who was taken ill May 23.

A BOMB THROWN

At the Carriage of the French President and Spanish King in Paris.

MANY HURT BY EXPLOSION.

Suspects Arrested Charged With the Outrage.—All Refuse to Talk, Either to Affirm or Deny.

Paris, France.—An attempt to assassinate King Alfonso was made at midnight Wednesday. As his majesty drove with President Loubet from a gala performance at the Grand opera house a bomb, thrown by an anarchist, exploded with deadly effect near the royal carriage.

Both the king and the president escaped uninjured, but fragments of the missile seriously injured five persons, killed or maimed a number of cavalry horses forming the escort and knocked out a child's eye.

Intense excitement followed the incident. The king and president retained their presence of mind, his majesty sending back a member of his suite to make inquiries as to the condition of the wounded. The person who is believed to have thrown the bomb has been arrested with two others, thought to be implicated.

As the king of Spain, accompanied by President Loubet, drove away from a gala performance of the opera after midnight, an anarchist threw a bomb in the direction of the royal carriage.

Many Injured by Force of Explosion.

The projectile struck a soldier belonging to the cuirassir escort on the shoulder and then fell to the ground and exploded. Several soldiers of the escort were thrown from their horses and injured, whilst fragments of the bomb struck a number of persons in the crowd.

The procession of the king and president arrived at the end of the Avenue D'Le Opera and crossed the Place Theatre Francais, where were assembled at least 1,500 persons, in the Rue de Rohan, a short street forming practically a continuation of the Avenue De L'Opera, right opposite the arched gateway of the Louvre, leading to the Place Caroussel. There, just a few yards before reaching the Rue Tivoli, a man sprang forward with his hand raised in the air and before the cordon of police could reach him, threw a projectile in the direction of the royal carriage. The police immediately rushed for him. At that moment a deafening explosion occurred. Cries were heard from the crowd and a scene of excitement began, the crowd surging to and fro. The soldiers were seen to fall, but as the flash of the bomb died out, it was observed that the king and the president had not been struck and their carriage proceeded on its way.

The bomb had been thrown with too great force, and passed over the royal carriage and struck the shoulder of a cuirassir and fell to the ground, where it exploded, the fragments of it striking the horses of the soldiers, causing them to bolt and throw their riders. Captain Schnider, riding on the right side of the carriage, and Captain Garnier, on the left, were both thrown. Fragments of the bomb also struck five persons—a sergeant, two policemen, a woman, who was seriously injured, and a child, who was struck in the eye. One horse of the escort was killed outright and six others lay about maimed and bleeding.

The force of the explosion was terrific and caused a derangement of the electric lights which were all extinguished, adding darkness to the scene of confusion. Women and children screamed and a panic was threatened until the police succeeded in restoring order.

King Was Pale, But Apparently Calm.

The young king was to be seen sitting beside the president. He was pale but apparently calm. Just before the carriage disappeared the king called to one of the attaches to the Spanish embassy and sent him back to make inquiries concerning the wounded. Then the carriage drove off to the Plais D'Orsay, hemmed in by troops and cavalry.

The police immediately gathered in a strong force and cleared the surrounding streets and began attending the wounded who were carried to a nearby hospital.

Immediately following the explosion an individual was seen to dash into the crowd, but men seized him before he could escape, and turned him over to the police. He is believed to have been the author of the outrage.

Many other arrests were effected. The first person taken was a man about twenty years of age, having an injured eye. It was not known whether his wound was caused by the explosion or by the violence of the crowd. He refuses to speak.

Saw Man Lurking Near.

A woman informed the police that she saw the man under a neighboring gateway talking to two men just before the explosion. He had something conical-shaped in his hand. She also declares that she saw him lighting what she now considers must have been a fuse, but at that time she says she did not pay much attention to him. Other persons arrested on suspicion of being accomplices in the deed refuse to give information regarding the man believed to be responsible for the outrage.

Throughout the night excited crowds remained outside the cordon of police and soldiers drawn about the scene of the explosion, where officials of the municipal laboratory are searching for fragments of the bomb.

Alphonso Asks About Injured.

After they returned to the Palais D'Orsay President Loubet remained for a considerable time with King Alfonso, who requested that he be informed of the circumstances surrounding the event. He desired to know whether anybody had been wounded.

The entire police reserves had been called on duty to maintain order. The anarchist arrested early Thursday morning is known by the police to have brought bombs from Spain. Diligent search led to the discovery of all except one of them, which is believed to have been the bomb thrown at the royal carriage.

English Sailors Not Accounted For.

Nagasaki.—What has become of the remainder of the crew of the British ship Oldsham, which was captured several days before the battle by the Russians, is not known. Several of the officers and men, were landed by the Japanese, but the rest have not been accounted for. The sailors were at first taken aboard the Orel. It is presumed they were transferred to one of the transports.

Where the Blame Rests

Full many a town gains dark renown for its vile and vicious ways,
Till its preachers moan for its moral tone and loud their voices raise;
But it's not the thief nor the grafter chief who's caused it all, you'll note
For the foremost cause of the outraged laws is the man who fails to vote!

Don't blame the crook if the statute book is an empty, worthless screed;
Don't blame the sport if the highest court receives contemptuous heed;
Don't frown on these if the dregs and lees of vice about you float,
For the man to blame for all this shame is the man who fails to vote!

The BIG LILY

AN EASTER STORY

BY PAUL C. WILLARD

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"To-morrow will be Easter." Mrs. Fleming said it thoughtfully, almost sadly. They had breakfasted in silence but at this remark her husband raised his eyes from his plate and cast an angry look at her, a look so full of meaning that she asked timidly, "Why, Frank, what have I done?"

"I understand what you're thinking of and you needn't say it. Don't speak of a hat."

"But I haven't even thought of a hat; honestly and truly, I haven't."

"Oh, I know," he went on, roughly, "to you Easter spells millinery and clothes. You live for those things. You forget—"

"But I don't."

"I say you forget how we are situated. Haven't I worn my fall overcoat all winter?"

"I know you have and I'm so sorry."

"You know that I haven't earned a dollar in two months and I haven't the slightest idea how I am going to pay the rent. But what do you care?"

"Oh, Frank, I do realize all that, and I know how hard you have tried to earn something for my sake. Don't think that I am ungrateful. I think you really are unjust."

"Maybe I am," he muttered, pushing his chair back and rising hastily. "I am probably unreasonable and possibly I'm a fool, but I know that, in your own mind, you want all sorts of things that, just now, I can't buy and you blame me accordingly. I won't be home to lunch."

As he passed through the door he caught a photographic glimpse of two sorrowful, pleading eyes, eyes that begged for something, and that something was not Easter finery.

In his prosperous times he would have made for the elevated and caught the first train for his office, but now he had no office and he could not afford to spend a nickel, so he walked. The spring sun, warm and bright, gave a softness to the air and flooded the streets with its cheerful rays, but as Fleming paced off block after block he grew more and more gloomy and downhearted. He kept thinking of the woman he had just left sitting at the breakfast table with the pleading look in her eyes. Could it be that she was the same sweet girl that had placed her hand so trustingly in his two years before amid scenes of plenty and rejoicing? And could it be that he was the same Frank Fleming that had sought her so persistently and been called a lucky dog for winning her? Was he a lucky dog in that respect? His conscience answered "Yes." How proud of her he had been and how gladly he had promised to love, honor and protect her! And he had meant to keep his pledge, but, somehow, since he had failed, things had been different. Was it her fault? Surely she had stood by him through everything. She had cut down the household expenses and practiced the more severe economy. She had made over her clothes time and again and he could not remember when she had had anything new. She had given up all the little luxuries that she had been accustomed to and through it all she had been patient and hopeful and found not one word of fault.

He had suffered keenly from mortification and disappointment and he had grown sullen and gloomy. He had been unkind to her and he realized now how unjust it was. Just now he had spoken harshly to her simply because she had reminded him that to-morrow would be Easter. Perhaps she had been thinking of that other Easter just before they were married. He remembered well that on that day he had sent her a lily in full bloom and how happy she had been. How different the coming Easter would be for her!

He was passing a florist's shop, its windows banked with flowers of many hues. He paused and looked in. Yes, there were Easter lilies, tall and graceful, with snow-white flowers, the same that had carried his message of love two Easters ago. If he had loved her then, how much more ought he to love her now, when she was all he had left!

He walked on slowly, absorbed in the memory of happier years, and half unconsciously drew out his purse. A five-dollar bill! This he would have to break to buy a noonday lunch, and when it was gone he would have no money. He replaced the purse with a sigh and stood on the curb looking into the confusion of the street, but he saw none of the passing vehicles, nothing but those soft, pleading, half-weeping eyes. Poverty he could endure, hunger too, if need be, but not the reproach of those eyes. He could not give her money, but he could give her his love, and he knew that she would not ask for more. With a sudden resolve he returned to the shop and entered.

"I wish to look at the lilies," he said.

"We have some very nice ones." The clerk pointed to a small one. "This is two dollars."

"And the others?"

"This one is three dollars, and here is a very fine one for three-fifty."

Fleming hesitated.

"If these are not large enough, we have one that is still larger." He brought forward a plant that made Fleming's eyes sparkle with admiration. It was very large and graceful and, crowned with a great confusion of buds and blossoms. "There is a magnificent lily, the largest we have in stock."

"How much is it?"

"Five dollars."

"I hardly know. I am getting it for a—a—lady."

The clerk smiled knowingly. "Buy her this one if you want to give her a happy Easter," he said.

"I'll take it," Fleming replied promptly. "Here is my card to go with it, and I would like to have it sent at once."

"It will be there in an hour." Fleming emptied his purse and walked out of the shop with a light heart.

"Well, Fleming, buying flowers for Easter?" a cheery voice exclaimed as he started down the street. Turning, he saw the bronzed face of a former college chum.

"Yes, a plant for my wife."

"Always a lover, eh! Well, I knew you would be."

"But I supposed you were in Colorado or somewhere out West."

"Yes, Colorado's my state now. I'm only in town for a few days, and it's mighty lucky that I happened onto you. I was going to try to look you up. I need a man like you. It's a mining scheme. Now, don't say you're tied up, for I won't listen to a word. I'll pay you more than you're getting now, whatever that is."

"You won't find it difficult to do that," Fleming replied.

"Come over to my hotel and I'll give you the whole lay-out." The miner poured his schemes into Fleming's willing ears.

* * * * *

It was dusk when Fleming stepped softly into his flat. He could not see the lily, but the odor told him that it was there. She was sobbing softly, but women weep when they are happiest, and Fleming understood.

SELLING A WORLD'S FAIR.

What Becomes of All the Material When All Is Over.

On a bid of $450,000 a Chicago company has bought and is removing buildings, the material and construction of which cost $14,000,000, says the World's Work. This includes all the physical property of the exposition company except the intramural cars and street railway equipment, which were sold to the St. Louis Car company for $150,000; the palace of liberal arts, which is to be permanent and a few minor structures.

Thus the company has come into possession of 100,000,000 square feet of good building lumber, 200,000 square feet of sash lumber, 10,000 doors, 1,500,000 square feet of glass skylights, 3,000,000 square feet of iron and felt roofing, 4,000,000 square feet of burlap for wall covering, 500,000 incandescent lights and copper wire which cost $650,000. Among its assets are two hospitals complete in all modern equipments; three greenhouses ready for utilization anywhere, each 300 feet long, with many sorts of plants and flowers; a fire department big enough for a city of 50,000 inhabitants, comprising nine engines and 100,000 feet of rubber hose; thousands of chairs of all sorts; miles of iron picket and woven-wire fences; hundreds of desks; wagons, dump cars and steam rollers enough to fit up a dozen good roads societies and many other sorts of paraphernalia.

Out of the structures, equipments and furnishings of the Louisiana Purchase exposition a good-sized city could be built. The debris would construct half a dozen fairs like that at Buffalo in 1901, or that which is to open in Portland, Ore., in June, 1905.

The Common Thought.

Humanity, when measured in the mass,
A swarm of nothings, bound for nowhere, seems,
Sprung from the ground, its energies repass
Into material monuments. Earth teems
With glories turned sepulchral. She is decked
With mocking ruins, architectural dreams
Of wealth, and empire never to be wrecked;
From which the scholar gains conjectural gleams—
What more?—of race lost: the vile, the brave,
The wise, the beautiful, in one vast grave.

If this that seems were true; if human life
Stops here, comes here in cerements to be hid;
If the first spadeful on the coffin lid
Sounds the last note; if the heart's mighty strife
Against the dogma of eternal death
Is vain—as 'gainst a breeze an infant's breath;
Nathless, 'twere well to live, to hold the hand
Of love still closer; to upbuild the earth
Into new forms of beauty and expand
The mind with art, with music and with mirth.

One-Armed Knife.

"What is that thing over there?" asked a man on a high stool at a city lunch counter.

The "thing" he was pointing to was shaped like a primitive grass sickle, had a handle, and at the tip of the blade and as a part of it was a pronged fork, half circular in form.

"That?" said the waiter, "why, that's a one-armed knife. Ever see one before?" and he passed it over the counter for inspection. "Nearly all restaurants keep them in their stock of cutlery nowadays. You see, the one-armed man can't cut his meat with the same motion that you or I use. He must bear down on his steak or chop, and to make the work easier for him some one invented this sickle shaped knife with a fork attached. If you'll notice it is made on the principle of the rocking cutter harness makers use. To be sure, we have to keep them sharp, or their usefulness would be gone."

Surely Not in Boston.

Henry James, the novelist, narrated at a Boston dinner party a conversation that he had overheard that afternoon.

"It was a conversation," said Mr. James, "between a young book clerk and an older one. It occurred in a book shop devoted to the sale of the most popular and newest fiction.

"The younger clerk approached the older anxiously.

"'Say,' he whispered, 'there's a woman here wants Spencer's poems.'

"'Is it Herbert Spencer's poems?' the more experienced clerk asked calmly.

"'Yes,' said the other. 'What shall I tell her?'

"'Tell her we haven't 'em,' said the older clerk."

Safety Electric Device.

Danger from a dangling broken trolley wire is removed by a safety device for the protection of persons from the electric current just placed on the market. The device, consisting of an ordinary connecting ear, is fitted to each section of wire and held in proper position by the strain on the trolley wire. If this tension is released as by the breaking of the wire, the current is immediately cut off the broken section.

An Objection.

"Don't you think it would be a good thing for the government to take possession of the railways, telegraph and everything else?"

"Not yet," answered the man who is always suspicious. "The grand juries haven't yet got rested from the work they have done on the railways."—Washington Star.

CONVICTS SIT AND GAMBLE.

In Western Prison They Are Allowed to Play for Stakes on Sundays.

"A few weeks ago, while sojourning in Carson City, the capital of Nevada, I witnessed a scene that struck me as exceedingly curious, and which probably was never duplicated anywhere in this country," said T. B. Gardiner of Chicago at the Shoreham.

"A friend of mine who was on good terms with the warden of the state penitentiary took me to that institution on a Sunday afternoon, and there I saw all the convicts, numbering several hundred, assembled in the long dining room of the structure, playing poker, seven-up, monte, faro and nearly all the gambling games known to western sports. Don't think for a moment that these men were merely playing for fun; they were betting chips which stood for sure-enough money and the play was just as serious and as much on the level as though it were taking place in a regular gambling establishment.

"This gambling, my friend told me, was never allowed on any other day but Sunday, the idea being that as the state laws licensed it there was no valid objection to the inmates of the prison engaging therein. Every convict was issued checks showing how much cash there was to his credit, and if he chose to lose these checks representing his money at cards it was his own affair. While the men played, which they did with all the fervor of free gamesters, a couple of guards sat watching them with loaded Winchesters in their laps, ready to put down the slightest outbreak or least indication of disorder with a form of argument that scarcely ever fails to persuade."—Washington Post.

Great Bank Squeezes Pennies.

The World's Work, in a recent issue, shows how carefully the First National bank of Chicago looks to its postage account. "Stamped postal cards are not used, and not one of the thousands of routine letters that are written every day is stamped and sealed until the whole routine mail of the day is assembled in the afternoon. Then all the cards and letters to one correspondent are put in a single envelope, and—except for letters from the officers and the like—the bank comes as near as possible to getting its entire mail carried at 2 cents an ounce, or 1 cent for every postal card, instead of often paying 2 cents for a quarter of an ounce, as it would have to do if every communication were sealed and stamped separately. This little matter of getting full value out of a 2 cent stamp makes a saving of $25 to $30 a day."

Butcher's Hair Was Like Wagner's.

Wagner, a German folk tale relates, became afflicted with headache and determined to have his hair cut. He accordingly arranged with a barber to perform the operation on a certain day. That worthy resolved to make a good thing of it, and accordingly informed all his customers of Wagner's impending sacrifice.

Most of them paid him a certain sum down. To the barber's horror, Mme. Wagner superintended the cutting, and when it was over appropriated the whole of the coveted locks.

The barber, in despair, confessed that he had sold them many times over, whereupon madam suggested that the butcher had hair much like Wagner's.

And the story goes that that night half Dresden slept with the butcher's hair under its pillow.

Two Great Men.

It was when Odell was governor of New York state and a visitor to the fair at Mineola, L. I., that a plain-looking, plainly dressed woman shoved her way through the crowd and said to him:

"Governor, I want your permission to bring my husband here and introduce him."

"What's the name, please?" queried Odell.

"Jones, sir—Tim Jones."

"Jones? Jones? I beg pardon, but I don't remember to have heard of him before."

"No, I don't s'pose you ever did; but he's just won the race for 3-year-olds, riding his own horse, and is now as big a man as you are."

SCORPION BITE NOT FATAL

"Between the spiders and scorpions, those grayish, lobsterlike foes of every living thing, which lurk in old walls and beneath the debris of ruins, silent, patient, giving the sting that kills and then sucking the victim's blood, there are points in common," writes F. G. Aflalo, the traveler and writer of London. "This very habit of sucking blood is shared by them, for the scorpion does not tear its victim's flesh with pinchers, like a crayfish, but sucks the juices through a small and tubular mouth not unlike that of spiders. Both of them breathe through lung-openings in the abdomen and in each the number of legs is eight, not six, as in insects. The latter class, which form the food of the smaller spiders, are erroneously regarded as safe if they have wings to fly. Even in England there are spiders which run so swiftly and leap with such precision that, apart from the aid of webs, few but the largest insects are secure from their attacks. In Australia there are parachuting spiders which sail obliquely down from the tree tops, and these must be deadly to encounter. Let us give the spider its due. Even those who willingly concede its diligence grudge it the undeniable attribute of cleanliness.

"Few created animals are more loathsome than the scorpion. There is a graceful beauty in the snake, in the fierce tiger, in the banded wasps and hornets; in the scorpion there is nothing like it. The creature's bite varies in results, possibly according to the condition of the scorpion itself, probably according to the person bitten. I knew of a man, an American, who was deliberately bitten by scorpions without any occasion suffering more than a few hours of discomfort. I have seen lads handle them without a sign of fear, let them crawl on their palms or backs, even laying them on their faces, all for a quarter of a dollar told at the time that the hand, open hand, stretched right scorpion no purchase with which to get its weapons in play.

"What was, however, remarkable was the patience with which a gang of Mexicans went to work barefooted to clear an old building in the full knowledge that every blow of their picks on the failing walls set fresh stones to writhe over their feet before they were buried in the accumulating rubbish almost up to their knees in their way of thinking the scorpion's reputation was more than it bite."

In Haunts of Elephants

"In certain regions of Africa," writes an old hunter, "elephants are still numerous. This is particularly the case in the country lying between the Victoria and Albert lakes, which is very hilly and covered by much forest. Their tracks are visible everywhere, although they themselves are but rarely seen. The damage done by elephants to these forests is incredible. I have more than once come upon spots where these huge beasts would appear to have held a kind of elephant carnival, apparently for no other purpose than that of wanton destruction. A large area covering many acres would be completely stripped of trees, nothing but jagged stumps sticking up a few feet from the ground, remaining of what had once been thick forest. Masses of large trees would be uprooted and hurled about in every direction, many of them being tossed bodily to a long distance from their original position. In many cases the entire foliage would remain intact, showing plainly that food could not have been the primary object of this wholesale destruction.

"Elephants are but rarely seen in the forest, however numerous they may be. This is due to many causes. In the first place, they are extremely shy animals and the neighborhood of man in any place they are largely nocturnal in their habits, and rarely drink or feed by day at night. They often travel great distances to and from the water to retire during the day to the inmost portions of the forest, where they doze away the long hours in the shadiest trees that they can find. Lastly, their scent is very keen.

"This sense is so developed that they can receive intimation at a very long distance above the wind of danger is given they move off noiselessly away. As soon as disturbed or frightened, will travel twenty or thirty miles at a stop, and as his pace under circumstances is a good two miles an hour, it is easy to understand why travelers in the region rarely see more than the signs of elephants, but seldom see the beasts that caused them."

On the Trans-Siberian

"Two engines are required on heavy grades, and special twenty-wheel locomotives are used on the hilly sections," writes William Greener concerning the Trans-Siberian railway, in his book, "A Secret Agent in Port Arthur." "Hot water is kept night and day at most stations, and the trains suffer severely from the inclement weather. The double windows are permanently frosted; often the vestibule doors become fast, great patches of frozen snow adhere to the roofs, the sides and panels are hidden under a thick white hoar, and long streaming icicles hang from the roof to the bogie truck where the water from the tank for the heating apparatus in each carriage has splashed over during the day's run. At every large station there is a special gang of attendants, who attack the train vigorously on its arrival; they use hammers and crowbars, iron rods heated red, long flaming torches, scalding water and even light fires of shavings under the carriages to free the brakes, and little by little thaw out the workings and the frost-bound train.

"I am still of the opinion that the Trans-Siberian state express trains afford the most comfortable mode of traveling in the world. They are as luxurious but not so ornate as the Pullman palace cars of America. They are wider, and give more accommodation; and as the train are never still through from Moscow to Irkutsk meals are provided at every hour of the day, and it is not necessary to breakfast before 7 one morning and after 9 the next as sometimes happens on the American transcontinental routes.

"In the saloon the piano is a welcome addition; the exercising apparatus is useful, and the bath a convenience. The observation car is not much frequented in winter, and the reason for the existence of the photographer's dark room, with its dishes and trays, has departed, for that all photographing along the line is strictly prohibited."

The Fortunate Isles

You sail and you seek for the Fortunate Isles.
The old Greek Isles of the yellow-bird's song?
Then steer straight on through the watery miles.
Straight on, straight on, and you can't go wrong.
Nay, not to the left, nay, not to the right.
But on, straight on, and the isles are in sight.
The Fortunate Isles where the yellow-birds sing
And life lies girt with a golden ring.

These Fortunate Isles they are not so far.
They lie within the reach of the lowliest foot.
You can see them gleam by the twilight star;
You can hear them sing by the moon's white shore—
Nay, never look back for the grave-stones
They were landing steps unto thrones
Of glory for souls that are fore
And have set white feet on the nate shore.

And what are the name Isles?
Why, Duty and Lo tent.
Lo! these are the Isles miles.
That God let down
Lo! Duty and Love and Trust:
Your forehead to God in the dust.
Lo! Duty and Love, and smiles.
And these, O friend, are Isles.

Life in Russian Village

A party of English visitors was recently given an interesting view of Russian village life. The host was a man of title, and not a mere title of nobility. He had responsibilities with his honors and drew from an official appointment. All the village acknowledged his authority, for he was the head of the community. His house was the biggest, his beard the reddest, his skirts the most voluminous of any in the neighborhood.

No trickery with a ticket office and a railway carriage will bring the visitor to this village. It reserves itself for those who are fervent enough in their explorations to face a country road and by-track most aggressively Russian. At the journey's end however, the real Russia is revealed—tax-ridden, ignorant, verminous Russia of the moujik, where [illegible] found further south, where the people own their homes. It depended [illegible] land, and the people were all farmers or laborers, with the [illegible] sprinkling of shopkeepers. A village set with nothing in reserve, very poor, very narrow, very honest. There were all of the blonde type of Russian, with empty light blue eyes

SCHOLARLY SUNDAY SERMON BY BISHOP BURGESS, D. D.

Subject: The Church's Foundation.

Brooklyn, N. Y., [illegible] Messiah the Right Rev. [illegible], D. D., Bishop of [illegible], preached [illegible] Sunday [illegible] Matthew xvi 13-20 [illegible] "And I [illegible] unto thee, [illegible] Peter, and upon this [illegible] My church." He said: [illegible] these words can be [illegible] apart from their [illegible] Peter of the Rampart [illegible] out that Christ was [illegible] Messiah of the Jews [illegible] this was a [illegible] the [illegible] Later [illegible] the first [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] our Lord [illegible] [illegible] Caesarea [illegible] preached [illegible] first [illegible] [illegible] and faithful [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] people who [illegible] Jesus would [illegible] Him by His [illegible] [illegible] to leave His [illegible] to exile. The words [illegible] to the Synagogue [illegible] It is not meet to take [illegible] bread and give it [illegible] shows the sadness [illegible] and when He came to His own His own received Him not [illegible] and another [illegible] bitterly He felt and, while we [illegible] picture, yet, [illegible] we can, in fancy, see His [illegible] the Gospels, with His little band [illegible] ahead of them through those [illegible] valleys, and we know that [illegible] was no figure of speech but the [illegible] which He said: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head."

Now this confession of Peter marks the end of this period of exile. From that time on He set His face toward Jerusalem. Almost immediately followed the transfiguration on, probably, Mount Hermon, and there He parted with His twelve apostles to go to Jerusalem to suffer and to die. Not this passage reveals deep truth. It reveals the foundation on which Christ built His church. But, as you understand, we must not lose sight of His humanity. The heresy which sees in Christ an unreal man, one who cannot be touched by our sorrows, our joys or our disappointments, has always been condemned in the councils and by the creeds of the church. Our Lord could not have been truly man if He had not hungered and thirsted and been weary sometimes. He had sought for help if sometimes He had felt the depression of loneliness and disappointment, though only once did it find expression, namely, on the cross when He said: "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" This period of exile, then, was a period of depression. Men had deserted Him by thousands, the people whom He had cured and taught were no more now. And perhaps He [illegible] as He asked His apostles that question, "Whom do men say that I the Son of Man, am?" It [illegible] He did fear, whatever He feared was dissipated by the perfect faith of Peter's clear, strong answer: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." And one who lives ever tried to do real work for humanity and to help toward the kingdom of God must have known something of this depression, and must also have known something of the joy when at last He had found one man who believed in Him and in His message and who was ready to stand out before the world and confess his faith.

Our Lord then founded His church upon a man upon Peter. If you will read, not found it upon doctrine, or [illegible] or an army or a treasury, but on a weak, rugged human character. He said to Peter, "Thou art a rock, and on this rock I will build My church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Those who want to see in this passage an [illegible] over-emphasizing it with a [illegible] must, I suppose, be allowed [illegible] But a study of the [illegible] that He would found His [illegible] upon human [illegible] as we see Our Lord [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

SCHOLARLY SUNDAY SERMON BY BISHOP BURGESS, D. D.

Subject: The Church's Foundation.

[illegible] Y.—In the Church of [illegible] Right Rev. Frederick [illegible] Bishop of Long Island, [illegible] from the text, [illegible] and particularly [illegible] whom say ye that [illegible] answered: Thou [illegible] Son of the living [illegible] swered and said: [illegible] Barjona; flesh [illegible] revealed it unto [illegible] Father which is in [illegible] so unto thee: Thou [illegible] upon this rock will I [illegible] He said:

[illegible] be scarcely under[illegible] their context. The [illegible] Bampton Lectures [illegible] Caesarea was the [illegible] Jew and the Gen[illegible] a fitting place for [illegible] unity of Him who [illegible] one race, but all [illegible] body of our Lord's [illegible] that He was at [illegible] exile. He had [illegible] leave His native land [illegible] The words which [illegible] the Syrophoenecian [illegible] not meet to take the [illegible] and give it to the [illegible] sadness, almost bit[illegible] when He came to [illegible] His own received Him not." [illegible] and another, we can see [illegible] He felt and, while we [illegible] picture, yet, neverthe[illegible] see Him, as we [illegible] with His little band, [illegible] them through those [illegible] and we know that [illegible] of speech, but the [illegible] said: "The foxes have [illegible] birds of the air have [illegible] Son of Man hath not [illegible] His head."

[illegible] session of Peter marks [illegible] period of exile. From [illegible] He set His face toward [illegible] Almost immediately there [illegible] transfiguration on, prob[illegible] Hermon, and then He [illegible] His twelve apostles, to [illegible] suffer and to die. Now [illegible] is deep truth. It [illegible] foundation on which [illegible] His church. But, as you [illegible] we must not lose sight of [illegible] The heresy which [illegible] mystical man, one who [illegible] touched by our sorrows, our [illegible] disappointments, has al[illegible] ministered in the councils [illegible] synods of the church. If, however, [illegible] ever He feared was [illegible] the perfect faith of [illegible] strong answer: "Thou [illegible] Son of the living [illegible] who has ever tried [illegible] humanity and to [illegible] kingdom of God [illegible] something of this [illegible] must also have known [illegible] joy when at least [illegible] man who believed [illegible] His message and who [illegible] cast out before the [illegible] loss his faith [illegible] founded His church [illegible] Peter, if you will, [illegible] upon a doctrine, or [illegible] army, or a treasury, [illegible] an, rugged human [illegible] Peter: Thou art a [illegible] rock I will build My [illegible] gates of hell shall not [illegible] Those who want [illegible] assign a long, hierati[illegible] clothing itself with a [illegible] purpose, be allowed [illegible] soon as long as they [illegible] Catholicism will always [illegible] our Lord was as[illegible] would found His [illegible] living human hearts, [illegible] believed in Him, in [illegible] through good re[illegible] in sickness and [illegible] in poverty and [illegible] loved in men; He [illegible] been well said [illegible] even angels [illegible] to condemn, [illegible] was worthy of [illegible] keep the attitude [illegible] and generals and [illegible] Alexander, Cae[illegible] So many pawns [illegible] as they willed. [illegible] souls to me?" [illegible] when he was [illegible] of an army; so [illegible] all the same dis[illegible] Bar. Christ taught [illegible] of mankind to [illegible] Paul reverenced [illegible] saw their sins and [illegible] incurable of the [illegible] epistle to the Ro[illegible] contrasted, and it [illegible] of the one that it is ten[illegible] ically human as he [illegible] rabbinical law to teach [illegible] the Lord and the riches [illegible] of God. All through [illegible] Romans there runs [illegible] the glory of man's origin [illegible] story: "We are children [illegible] children of God, then [illegible] ars with Christ, if so be [illegible] Him." There is man's [illegible] in that he is made in [illegible] God. So with all the [illegible] true followers of Jesus [illegible] world, they have al[illegible] loved men. They have seen the greatness of men's capacity even when they have seen the evil as it is shown so in our great cities, which in some respects equal Sodom and Gomorrah. Beneath all the external they can see the power of the human heart. "Who is that commonplace looking fellow?' said a man to Abraham Lincoln. "Friend," replied the President, "the Lord prefers commonplace people, and that is the reason why he has made so many of them." Now, our Lord estimated men at their true worth. He knew their power, and He founded His church on men—on Peter and James and John and Thomas and Paul. As our beloved collect expresses it: 'Thou hast founded upon the apostles and prophets, Christ, Himself, being the head cornerstone."

To that church you all belong. You have taken the step which announces that consciously you have come to your full conception of what that church is, and that you are members in it. Now, what Christ wants of you is, not your money or your influence, but He wants your heart, your devotion, but He wants you to stand really, purely, honestly, truly, steadfastly for Him. He wants you to be built up, as St. Peter expresses it, "as lively stones" in His church. It has been said that to suppose that the Christian Church could have been founded by any save Jesus Christ would be as absurd as to suppose that Strasburg Cathedral had been formed through the centuries by the conflux of the dust of the streets. Now, it is into that church that you have come, and you are to become stones in the building. You are to grow strong by being true and earnest, and pure and temperate. Buttresses and arches and roofs are not more really the fruit of human architect's work than temperance and chastity and honesty are the fruits of the Divine Architect's love. "On this rock I will build My church." The Church of Jesus Christ will be stronger to-night and stronger to-morrow, because you have been confirmed today, if you honestly keep the promises you have made to-night.

After Revival—What?

The remarkable religious movement which not long since arose in the West like a little cloud no bigger than a man's hand, is apparently spreading throughout Christendom. It has already assumed proportions which command attention from all quarters and has won for it general recognition as "the revival." Every genuine Christian, at least, will be on the watch to make the utmost of its best features and the least of its blemishes. It is alike impossible that the latter can be essentially divine, or that the former can be exclusively human.

Here, as in all Christian "salvation," it is imperative that there should be the distinct recognition of co-operation. For it is always true that God can no more save man without himself than man can save himself without God. This principle, however, compels us not only to look with reverence for the Divine element in present events, but to consider carefully human issues in the future. Waves of strong emotion, be they ever so potent for good, cannot roll on without cessation. There is an ebb as well as flow to every tide.

It is none too soon, therefore, to ask and answer such questions as these: Whither is this movement leading us? What will be left when its emotional force is spent? Will it prove a veritable Nile in its fruit-bearing deposits, or will it ebb away into Sahara-like sterility? All evangelical Christians doubtless hope that the utmost of the highest will abide. Yet is there ample room for most serious thought as to how this more or less transient impulse may not only be translated into something permanent but become the starting-point of a definitely higher conception of Christian doctrine and practice throughout all the churches. —Frank Ballard, in London Methodist Times.

The Wonder of God.

"He saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor." Here is a needy world with its chiefest hope in what intercession may bring. Here is a God who declares that unlimited blessing may be gained for men through intercession. Here is yourself with some knowledge in your own experience of what intercession might mean. Yet God waits and wonders! The phrase is not too strong. Remember the missionaries who have gladly renounced all for the joy of putting a new light into despairing faces—but they spend little time in asking for the Light. Remember the pastors whose calling it is to minister—but they have renounced the highest and most efficient ministry. Remember the myriads who prate ceaselessly about the world's need of revival—but they talk little about it to Him who alone can give it. Remember what you say you believe, recall what you actually do—and cease to wonder that God wonders.—Pacific Baptist.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JUNE 11.

Subject: The Message of the Risen Christ, Rev. i., 10-20—Golden Text, Rev. i., 18—Memory Verses, 17, 18—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. John receives a message (vs. 10, 11). 10. "In the Spirit." Under the influence of the Spirit, and filled and quickened by the Spirit. "The Lord's day." The day made sacred to all Christians for all time by the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. It was the day of light and salvation. John arrived in Patmos late Saturday evening, spent the night in prayer, and with the opening Sunday morning the glorified Saviour opened heaven to his vision. Why is our Sabbath the first day of the week? We see here the apostles kept the first day and, because of its sanctity, called it the Lord's day. "Behind me," etc. This was his first intimation of the presence of Christ, who spoke with a voice like a trumpet.

11. "Alpha and Omega." Omitted in R. V. These are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet. This is a figurative expression, used to show that Christ was the "source and the consummation" of all things. He is from eternity to eternity. "What thou seest." The prophetic vision that was revealed to him on that Lord's day. "Write." What if John had not written? The command to write is given twelve times in the Apocalypse. "A book." A parchment roll. Ancient books were made of papyrus, or from the prepared skins of animals, and rolled upon a roller. "Seven churches." "Seven" denotes perfection. Doubtless there were hundreds of churches in Asia Minor at that time. The reason why seven only are mentioned is because the church is the bride of Christ, and seven is the sanctified number always representing Christ. "In Asia." A small province in Asia Minor called Asia, of which Ephesus was the capital. "Ephesus." Mentioned first because the church here was the largest.

II. A vision of the glorified Redeemer (vs. 12-16). 12. "The voice." He turned to see who it was that spoke, the word "voice" being used to signify the person speaking. "Golden candlesticks." Compare Zech. 4:2-11. Lampstands would be a better term. Not one candlestick with seven branches, but seven candlesticks. The independence of the churches of Christ is consistent with the unity of the church of Christ.

13. "In the midst." Showing Christ's presence among His people. "The Son of Man." Compare Daniel 7:13. This term is used here because His glory might hide from view His oneness of sympathy with His people. "A garment." This is a description of the long robe worn by the high priest. Jesus is our high priest in heaven. "Girt—golden girdle." He was girt around the breast (R. V.) as "a sign of kingly repose." It represented "the breastplate of the high priest, on which the names of His people are engraven."

14. "White like wool." Wool is supposed to be an emblem of eternity. The whiteness signified antiquity, purity and glory. With Christ His hoary head was no sign of decay. Compare Dan. 7:9; 10:6. The whiteness, three times mentioned (white, white wool, snow), is greatly intensified, and denotes unlimited age, even eternity. "His eyes," etc. This certifies His omniscience. The eye is the receptacle of knowledge and symbolizes all the senses.

15. "Burnished brass" (R. V.) This denotes His stability and strength. His feet are like brass when in the furnace and subjected to a very great heat. His feet were "strong and steadfast, supporting His own interest, subduing His enemies and treading them to powder." His voice." Described the same in Ezek. 43:2. He will make Himself heard; it is a commanding voice that must be obeyed; it is terrible in its denunciation of sin.

16. "In His right hand." The "right hand" is an emblem of power. "Seven stars." These stars are the faithful preachers of the gospel. "A sharp two-edged sword." His word which both wounds and heals and strikes at sin on the right hand and on the left. This wonderful sword has two edges, sharp as God's lightning—the edge that saves and the edge that destroys. Compare Heb. 4:12; Eph. 6:17. The sharpness of the sword represents the searching power of the word. "As the sun." We know of nothing brighter than the sun shining in his strength.

III. Words of comfort and explanation (vs. 17-20). 17. "As dead." His countenance was too bright and dazzling for mortal eyes to behold, and John was completely overpowered with the glory in which Christ appeared. Compare Ezek. 1:28; Dan. 8:17. "Right hand upon me." His hand of power and protection, in which the churches were held. "Fear not!" There is no occasion to fear when in the presence of Christ. 18. "The Living One" (R. V.) The source of all life—the One who possesses absolute life in Himself. "Was dead." I became a man and died as a man; I am the same one you saw expire on the cross. "I am alive." Having broken the bands of death, I am alive "for evermore." "The keys." An emblem of power and authority. "Of death and of hades" (R. V.) Hades is a compound Greek word, meaning the unseen world, and including both heaven and hell. Gehenna is the Greek word which always means hell, and nothing else. Christ has power over life, death and the grave. He is able to destroy the living and to raise the dead. 19. "Hast seen." The visions He has just seen. "Which are." The actual conditions of the seven churches. See chapters 2 and 3. "Which shall be." In the future of the church.

20. "The mystery." Write the mysterious—the "secret and sacred" meaning of what you have seen. "The angels." The ministers and pastors.

SHOT FROM AMBUSH.

Man Who Killed Negro Deputy Sheriff Promptly Loses His Own Life.

Mobile, Ala.—Calvin Childs, a negro deputy sheriff, was shot from ambush and killed. He was on the way to Mobile to swear out a warrant for a negro named Robert Crenshaw, who, when Childs was passing Plateau Station, fired on the deputy from the brush at the side of the road. An unknown man with Childs then shot and killed Crenshaw.

THE BURRO.

The burro is a tiny beast,
No bigger than a St. Bernard,
But he can haul an awful load
O'er any road, however hard.
He weighs about three hundred pounds,
And he can carry on his back
Six hundred pounds of copper ore
Tied up securely in a sack.

We lazy mortals ought to learn
A lesson from this little beast:
We groan and moan at every turn
When we are burdened in the least.
What would we think, we slothful men
Who squirm around and rail at fate,
If each of us were now and then
Obliged to carry twice our weight?

A DIFFICULT PASSENGER.

An elephant is without doubt the most difficult passenger to load of any in the world. It is rarely that the best of them can be induced to walk aboard a ship as did the traditional pair of elephants who boarded the ark. To overcome their objection they are usually first coaxed or forced to enter great wooden boxes, when they are securely fastened, and the entire outfit is hoisted with a derrick to the level of the deck and swung aboard.—New York News.

THE CROCODILE.

The following is a Chicago boy's composition on "The Crocodile:" "The crocodile is a large animal that inhabits the Nile and loves to go on the sandy beach to bask in the sunshine and lay eggs. It looks some like a daschund, only there is more of it at the ends and it is bigger. There was a crocodile once that escaped from a circus. It roamed over the country, seeking in vain for pigs and small children to devour, and died of starvation in great anguish. You can ride on the back of a crocodile, but it is more comfortable to use a saddle. It is usually quiet, but is terrible when roused. We all ought to be thankful we are not a crocodile."

A SIMPLE BAROMETER.

The accompanying illustration, taken from the New York Evening Mail, shows a simple but reliable barometer that any boy or girl can make with very little trouble and at no cost. When you make a device of this kind yourself you take a good deal more interest in it than in one bought at the shop.

To make the barometer that we here illustrate the only articles needed are a wide mouthed pickle jar and a clean Venetian oil flask. Pour plain water into the pickle jar until it reaches to within one-third of the top. Make a hole in the cork of the jar that will receive the neck of the flask, and allow it to go down far enough in the jar just to enter the water. That is all. The illustration shows the whole thing.

Look at your barometer every day, and if you see that the water is well up in the neck of the flask the weather is going to be fine; if, on the contrary, the water has fallen it means that the air is damp and that the weather is likely to be stormy.

THE EAGLE'S EYE.

All birds of prey have a peculiarity of eye structure that enables them to see near or distant objects equally well. An eagle will ascend more than a mile in height, and from that great elevation can perceive its prey, small though it may be, and pounce on it with certainty. Yet it can examine an object close at hand just as well, thus possessing a power of accommodating its sight to distance that is impossible to the human eye.

In looking at this page you find that there is some particular distance, probably about ten inches, at which you can see each letter distinctly and read the words; but if you move the page off to a distance of forty inches, or bring it up to within five inches of your eyes, you cannot read it at all.

But the eagle has the power of altering what is called the focus of its eye as it pleases. It has only to look at an object from a distance of two miles or a few inches to see it equally well.

The ball of the eye is surrounded by fifteen little plates, called sclerotic bones. They form a complete ring, and their edges slightly overlap each other. When it looks at a distant object this circle of bones expands, and the ball of the eye, being relieved from the pressure, becomes flatter; when it looks at a near object the circle contracts and the ball of the eye is squeezed into a rounder form.

All this is done involuntarily; it is simply a provision of nature. In human beings a very round eye is near-sighted, and a flat eye is far-sighted; and the eagle has first one and then the other, as it may suit his purpose.—New York Evening Mail.

AUNT MARY STORIES.

Wolves were numerous in the early days in Indiana. My father always brought the sheep into a lot close to the house at night. We had two large dogs and a small house dog that had come with us from Kentucky. One cold winter night we heard the big dogs barking furiously, and we knew there were wolves in the neighborhood. My father sprang from the bed, put on his shoes and trousers, and ran outdoors. The little house dog followed at his heels and yelped piteously. Outside the sheep were huddled in the corner of the lot nearest the house, while a gaunt, big wolf was circling about trying to get past the dogs and at the sheep. On seeing my father the wolf started for the woods, the two big dogs in pursuit, but afraid to seize him.

Now one of the dogs was a swift-running hound that could outrun any wolf. But once a wolf had gashed him with his teeth and the hound would never thereafter take hold of a wolf, although he would run after wolves, circle around them and try to bring them at bay. But the little house dog was afraid of wolves, not only for himself, but for my father. He was afraid my father would get too close to the wolves on this occasion and so he ran in front of him and tried to stop him. He got in my father's way and finally seized him by the trousers leg and tried to hold him. This exasperated my father, who was trying to catch up with the dogs that had nearly stopped the wolf. Finally, kicking the small dog loose he ran on, but the wolves had got then into the timber and could not be found.

Returning, he found that the small house dog had leaped up on a shed and then climbed up to the very comb of the house and stood there trembling in the moonlight. We had many a laugh afterward as we recalled the fact.—Indianapolis News.

WHEN A REINDEER'S ANGRY.

We were forced to wait three days after it had stopped snowing for a crust to form, so that we could travel again. It was with many misgivings that we began the last half of the journey, since the snow was now very deep and the danger of our sinking into drifts was great. To add to our general feeling of fear the reindeer behaved very badly and were exceedingly unruly. The wind had moderated somewhat, but it was still intensely cold.

We had traveled half the day without any serious mishap, and were beginning to forget our fears at starting out, when we sped merrily down a mountain side, singing and helloing at the top of our voices, and ran into a gulch and stuck there. The song stopped in our throats, and we sprang to our feet to sink waist deep in the drifts that had entrapped us.

Every movement of our bodies sank us deeper in the snowdrifts, and the infuriated reindeer, finding themselves caught in the banked-up snow almost to their haunches, turned upon us and would have pawed us to death but for the forethought of Oosilik, who, seeing our danger, sprang forward and, hoisting the overturned pulks in his strong arms, brought them down over our heads and shoulders and pinned us out of sight in the snow.

We heard the hoofs of Uncle Ben beating of the pulk's side as he pawed up the snow in his efforts to get at us, and if we had not held to the straps and had not kept the pulk over us he would have tossed it into the air with one sweep of his horns, and would still have had his bout with us, in which case we should have been helpless and completely at his mercy.

For the first time we had occasion to see how fierce an angry reindeer can be. When he was convinced that he could not reach us, Uncle Ben turned upon Oosilik, and we heard the Eskimo shouting and clubbing the deer as he ran in and out of the pulks in a swift circuit, pursued by the bellowing reindeer.

We spent an exciting half hour under the pulks, with the hoofs of the deer rattling like hail on the frozen boards, and then the unusual commotion ceased all at once, for the reindeer had found a lichen bed. In a jiffy they were pawing up the snow in their hurry to get at the succulent moss, and we were forgotten.

Amalik and Oosilik lifted the pulks from our heads and dug us out of the snow and set us on our feet. By the time the reindeer had eaten themselves into a passable humor Amalik and Oosilik led them back to the pulks.

We had four hours of traveling before we came in sight of the corral that had sent us the reindeer from Eaton Station. As soon as the deer scented the well-known corral they quickened their strides, so that we reached the station before it was quite dark, and crawled from the sleds with a deep feeling of relief, glad beyond measure to be at home after the perils of our protracted journey.—St. Nicholas.

DIFFICULTIES MET IN SMUGGLING JEWELS

The United States Government Has Agents Abroad Who Watch the Purchasers of Precious Stones.

The first difficulty in smuggling may be encountered at the diamond markets of Europe. In Paris, for instance, the United States Government has four agents whose duty is to keep the United States customs officials in touch with the purchases of stones by residents of the United States. If John Jones of New York is visiting Paris and has bought a fine diamond or more from a Paris dealer and returns to the New York port of entry without declaring such stones, a question is certain to be asked of him.

The Paris dealer, in accordance with the custom of the trade, has taken the name and address of the purchaser, a description of the stone, its color, its weight, and, perhaps, a memorandum of a possible peculiarity. Yet there are European diamond dealers who do not recognize the justice of protective tariffs, or even tariffs for revenue, and some of these refuse to recognize American agents.

But considering that the would-be smuggler makes his successful purchases in the European markets and starts home with them. In the first place he has had the expenses of the trip across. Going over he may have gone in the second cabin of a steamer, but coming back it will be to his advantage in every way to return in the first cabin. Thus, his expenses, even if he lives in New York or Boston, will have been at least $200, while they might as easily have been $500 for the round trip. The time of the trip will be scarcely less than a month, which, for a man of average ability in a clerical position, will mean $100 at least. The interest on the money primarily invested in the stones will need to be considered, to say nothing of the element of risk.—New York News.

The Traveling Man's Mistake.

According to Luther Hickman, State Superintendent of Building and Loan Associations, the people of his home town, Warrensburg, travel extensively. Yesterday morning a party of them boarded a train to come to Kansas City to hear grand opera. "The most of the grips," said Mr. Hickman, who was on the train, "were plastered with hotel stickers from many parts of the world. A traveling man who saw the stickers took the members of the party to be grand opera singers. 'Say,' he said to me, 'how does it happen that this troupe is getting on at this town?' 'They sang here last night,' I replied. 'That's Scotti, the baritone. Ask him how he likes Warrensburg,' I added, pointing to a big man. The traveling man approached the fellow I pointed out and asked: 'Mr. Scotti, how does it come that you folk stop at Warrensburg?' 'Why, that is where we live,' replied the man, who was a Warrensburg merchant. 'The traveling man rode the rest of the way to Kansas City in the smoker.'"—Kansas City Times.

A Lost Moroccan Manufacture.

In an act dated Rouen, October 1, 1570, certain merchants agree to freight a vessel, Le Samson, with white cloth and other goods for Santa Cruz de Agadhir, in Morocco. The ship was returned home laden with sugar, which at that time was grown near Tarudant. Sugar is not now grown in South Morocco, and thirty years ago a consul told me (and consuls are most trustworthy men) that it was little known. So much so that a Berber from a distant douar, having picked up a piece near Mogador, took it home, and having boiled it drank the juice, exclaiming, "O, father of the sweet! Thou must be sweet; even thy soup is sweet as oranges!"—R. B. Cunninghame Graham, in the Saturday Review.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

The residence of O. A. T. Lefstad at Thorsby was struck by lightning during the storm on Tuesday afternoon (May 30). The bolt entered the house by the ridge pole, and after knocking off some plastering in the second story, went through to the lower floor, where it divided and after cavorting around among the pictures and window casings, part went out through an open window, and part through one corner of the house front, splitting the foundation block in its exit. Mr. Lefstad, who has been a member of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Association of Chilton county since June, 1900, put in his claim to the association for damage amounting to $34.00, and the director of Beat 9, W. J. Bean, has inspected the premises and allowed the claim, but the amount being so small to make an assessment for, Mr. Lefstad has waived his rights until some other accident occurs in the company, when all can be collected together. Mr. Lefstad's insurance for the entire 5 years has cost him exactly $10.33, including the entrance fee. Wise men always provide against such accidents as are liable to occur to any one. None of the family were hurt, but after recovering from the shock and fright and making a search of the house, they found a large bundle of papers on the second floor on fire, which were gathered up and thrown out, thus averting what might have been the total destruction of the house.

COUNTY COURT.

Convened on Monday, Judge Reynolds presiding. Several minor cases were on the docket, among which were W. H McKnight, charged with "injury to animals," plea of guilty, fine $1.00 and costs. Cliff Houston (col.) "vagrancy," plea not guilty, found guilty and fined $5.00 and costs. W. J. A. Melton will come before Judge Reynolds on "habeas corpus" proceedings Friday. This man was indicted by the last Grand Jury for "murder in the first degree," but his counsel will try to get him out on bond. Judge Reynolds has had about as many cases already, involving the higher points of law as regards a man's liberty as his predecessor had in his entire term of service.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The County Commissioners are in session this week, commencing Monday, as a Court of Errors and Insolvencies, and tax matters in general. Tax Commissioner J. P. Van Der Veer is with the court, and no doubt but what the inequalities that have hitherto been claimed to exist in the valuation of lands in this county will be eliminated entirely, and every one will get "a square deal." The county tax rate has been fixed for the ensuing tax year, and will be 5 mills, or what is usually called 50 cents on the hundred dollars, for general purposes. No specials of any kind.

SATURDAY'S COTTON MEETING.

The Chilton County Branch of the S. C. A. on Saturday last was called to order by President W. H. Conway, who made one of his usual short but able talks, and then delegated to Vice Pres. F. A. Gulledge the pleasant task of introducing the visitor of the day, the Hon. W. H. Seymour, President of the State Association. Mr. Seymour's address received the earnest attention of the audience, who applauded heartily at the close. In the beginning he gave a short resume of the condition that confronted the entire south last winter, that time when all thinking persons saw that if something was not done to check the BEAR movement that cotton would be forced down to 4 1-2 and 5 cents. "The objects of the S. C. A. are to see that our farmers receive a price for their cotton that will repay them, that will give them a fair remuneration for their labor, and the development of our section, and is absolutely non-political." "You and I are for the dollar, for unless we can see something in it for us it matters little as to the prosperity of our country." "The organization has stopped the downward course of the price of cotton and put it from 6 and 6 1-2 cents to 7 1-2 and 8." "The human race have three absolute necessities, viz., food, raiment, shelter. American cotton may be considered as being without a competitor in clothing the human race." "We, the raisers of cotton, have hitherto understood very little as to supply, demand and condition of our great staple, but have looked on others for these particulars, these others being interested in getting our cotton at as low a price as possible." "In the last ten years there has been more cotton spun and exported from the U. S. than we produced in the same time." "The spinners would gladly see a stable steady price for cotton and will spin about as much when they give 10 cents for it as if they got it for 8 cents." "The farmers of the south would have received one billion dollars more than they did receive if they had averaged 10 cents for their cotton during the past 12 years. Alabama's share would have been one hundred million dollars, enough to have given our 3 largest cities 3 cotton factories of one million dollars each; of our 3 largest towns 2 cotton factories of one million dollars each; 12 towns one cotton factory of one million dollars each; 50 towns a cotton factory of three-quarters of a million dollars each; and EVERY TOWN in the state a cotton factory of half a million each. These factories would have enabled us to spin about all the cotton produced by us. Or by the same amount would have macadamized every mile of public road in our state." Space forbids THE UNION from giving more of Mr. Seymour's remarks, but, as many of the audience remarked, it was a pity every farmer in Chilton county could not have heard him. However Mr. Seymour will be with us at the big barbecue planned for July 4th at Clanton, and though there will be other eminent speakers there we will have an opportunity to hear him then. In the afternoon session the executive committee reported: "That we observe the 4th day of July, 1905, by a free for all Barbecue and picnic to be held at Clanton, the same to be by popular subscription, at which time we promise public speaking by men well versed in diversification of crops, live stock breeding and feeding; also domestic fowls. We further recommend that each one present here today shall constitute himself a committee of one to solicit subscriptions and the attendance of each of his neighbors for that occasion. A special committee was appointed to take entire charge of the affair, among whom were W. M. Wilson, W. I. Mullins, E. M. Pinckard, L. H. Reynolds, J. B. Downs, Tom Tyus, W. H. Sarter, W. T. Callen. This committee is to report at a meeting which is to be held on June 15th. The joint committee of the Alliance and S. C. A. on the Fertilizer Plant, etc., reported "That sufficient stock has already been pledged to assure the building of the Fertilizer factory, warehouse, etc., and the 15th day of June has been set apart as the day when parties who wish stock in the corporation will meet in Clanton to complete the organization according to law. We further report that the people of Thorsby have offered inducements for the location of the factory which amount to about $1,500 as a donation in property, and a saving of $2 per thousand on brick used in building the plant, together with other advantages in the purchase of property, if the factory be located in Thorsby." The meeting passed the following resolution: "That this Association calls upon and requests all farmers and business men in the county, who wish to take stock in the proposed Fertilizer factory and warehouse and gin company, to meet in Clanton on June 15, 1905, for the purpose of subscribing for stock in said company, and legally completing its organization."

Notes of the Meeting.

Joe Popwell, of Kincheon, gave an account of some experiments he made in oats, which were very instructive, and would be of great benefit to any farmer, for by his way he got 125 bushels from 3 1-2 acres. F. A. Gulledge gave an interesting account of how to treat your animals to keep them free from ticks, fleas, etc. G. F. McElderry, of Talladega, was with us all day. He is well known and liked by the County Alliance, who have had him with them at their meetings a number of times. You ought to have heard Mr. Seymour tell how the people of Cuba, Ala., increased the value of their land from $5 to $100 per acre. We'll make him tell it again at the barbecue. As to the speakers for the 4th of July numbers of our people have expressed their desire to have Dr. C. A. Cargy, of Auburn, and the secretary of S. C. A. was instructed to write him in particular as well as others.

BEAT FOUR.

Editor Union:

Will you please allow "Lonesome Joe" to step in and say a word about stock law. I for one say that those that want stock law should move where it is. We people who are at peace with our friends and neighbors would gladly excuse them. So "Observer & Co. get ready and go to what you seem to think is peace and perfect happiness. I chanced to see some cows owned by "Observer" last year, and since the stock law question is being discussed it brings back to memory the condition of those cows; and if he was to pay as little attention to them in a small pasture as he did when they were outside looking like a shadow with a tick for every ten hairs, he would soon be running around trying to get where there was no stock law. I think those that are talking in favor of stock law are asleep, and having horrible dreams. So, wake up, you all, for fear you wake when it is too late. If sorry fence will not keep out stock, how are you going to keep them in? I'm strictly against stock law, hog law is bad enough, but the other is worse. So let those that oppose stock law come out and show the other crowd that they can't run Chilton county.

"LONESOME JOE."

MARS HILL.

Editor Union:

We're all in the grass, but trying mighty hard to get out. Some bottom lands are not planted yet. E. G. Cofer and family paid a visit to his son-in-law (C. W. Langston, near Billingsley), and reports a good time and nice country. Well, Observer seems a little surprised at my change on the stock law question, but I think a vote of the people would show many such changes. I never was very hot for the law, but I did say that it seemed to me that we could fence against our own stock with less work and expense than we could against everybody's cattle, and I believe so yet. But after we have put up our stock they are not fed yet. Just putting them in an enclosure don't feed them. Stock law might better us in several ways, might make us keep better stock (if we kept any at all), might be less expense for fencing. I am in as good shape for stock law as anybody around me, but the question is, Would it be an injury to my neighbor? So, I've come to the conclusion that stock law has more disadvantages than it has advantages. As far as my conversation is concerned, I just had not studied the question then as I have now, in the broader view of the benefit or disadvantages which would come to the people of our county as a whole, but now I feel as if we don't need stock law in Chilton county yet. When local taxation is voted on, we can take up stock law at the same time, and then "the majority rules." As to young Gentry's letter, he says he is only 10 years old. So he hardly knows the difference between a democrat and a republican. I am highly in favor of education, and it would be a good thing if the people (some at least) were forced to send their children to school.

BEAT TEN.

Editor Union:

None of your stock law advocates touch upon the point of how we are to benefit by our fall pasture of such crops as peas, potatoes, peanuts and cufas. How are we to get this benefit unless we kept up our field fences? We might "tote" them to the stock, but that would be both troublesome and expensive. I want to tell W. K. Gentry that he is mistaken about "Dad's Plow Boy" being a "disfranchised democrat." Stock law will not make a cow give milk; it takes feed to do that. If you don't believe that try it. I am against stock law and am a legal voter of Beat 10 and no democrat, either. May God be with The Union and its readers, and let's all of us strive to do the will of our Heavenly Father, law or no law, for we know not the day or hour when we shall be called away, prepared or unprepared. I hope to meet you all in Heaven.

KALONA.

Editor Union:

Here I am again, "Little Bill," wishing us all good crops, but if there are any more hail storms through this section of country like last Tuesday, they will sure be destroyed. As it is they are damaged greatly, T. P. Crowson says his cotton is damaged one-fifth, and corn is split up and blown down badly. That's about the way with all of us in this settlement. L. A. McCraw had a bee robbing the other night and Mr. Crowson and family were present. Many farmers here have not finished chopping cotton.

Respect to Parents

By Beatrice Fairfax.

LACK of respect toward their elders is a deplorable characteristic of the young people of this country.

Girls speak to their parents in a manner which they and the parents should be heartily ashamed of. Parents are quite as much to blame as the child, the lack of respect is the result of bad up-bringing.

If from infancy a child is allowed to break into conversations, to have a voice in every discussion and to force itself forward on all occasions, the chances are that it will grow self-assertive and domineering, and as it grows older come to think it knows more than both its parents put together.

If it is a boy he will patronize his father and call him the "governor," "the old man;" if a girl she will take precedence of her mother on all occasions, answering when the latter is spoken to and acting in a general as though she—the daughter—were the one to be most considered.

If the girl who speaks disrespectful to her mother only knew the impression she creates on outsiders, I am sure she would try and change her way of speaking. There is nothing that so prejudices people against a girl as to hear her by word, look or deed show the slighest disrespect to her parents.

The false pride that makes a girl ashamed of the hard-working mother and father, who have toiled and sacrificed themselves in order that their children may have luxuries and education, is the outcome of an ugly feeling that should be strangled at its birth.

Many girls who really love their parents grow into the habit of thinking them old-fashioned and ignorant.

You often hear a girl say, "Oh, mother means all right, but she doesn't know," and then the daughter goes ahead and does some foolish thing that had she consulted her mother's wiser judgement, she might have refrained from doing.

Excepting in very rare cases, the mothers always know best. God gave the instinct of love and mature wisdom, they invariably choose what is best for their children.

Not long ago I overheard a delicate mother complaining of not feeling well. "Oh, mother," broke in her disrespectful daughter, "I'm tired hearing you ness; you're always ill."

What do you think of that daughter's manner to her mother, and the man who was thinking of marrying her had been there, don't you think he would have gone away in a very thoughtful mood?

One thing that leads to this state of affairs is the bad habit of many American parents of effacing themselves when their children have visitors. The result is that the young people get into the way of thinking that they run things themselves and that the presence of their elders is quite unnecessary.

The American girl is the best girl in the world, but she is just a trifle too independent and cavalier in her treatment of her elders.

A well brought up English girl would exclaim in horror at the free and easy way her American cousins have of speaking to their parents.

Nothing is more beautiful than the tender respect and deference shown by youth to age, and it is a great shame for the American girl to let her record be marred by this one blot.—New York Journal.

R. D. Childress was a pleasant visitor Thursday.

W. J. Dennis near Thorsby reports squares on his cotton on June 1st.

W. R. Taylor, accompanied by the Misses Effie and Hattie Taylor and Bertha Wilkinson, visited in Clanton Saturday.

H. Z. Barnes was in town Saturday.

R. M. Vines was a pleasant caller Saturday.

C. C. Teel was in Clanton Saturday.

C. W. Vance was a welcome visitor Monday.

J. I. Neeley was in town Monday

J. A. Caddell was in Clanton Tuesday.

Tom Littlejohn left Tuesday on a trip to Arkansas. He'll be gone about ten days and expects to visit a dear friend at Wynne, we hear.

The protracted meeting at the Methodist church closed Thursday night. One conversion is reported.

Rev. A. C. Swindall filled his appointment in the Baptist church Sunday preaching morning and night to good congregations. He called attention in the morning sermon to the fact that he had preached 20 months here without converting a single soul to his knowledge. "Sad but true."

Among the throng in town last Saturday we noted Messrs. Bice, Michelson, Villadsen and Gerald, of Thorsby; W. H. Conway, J. N. Dennis, Moses Robinson, Lett, W. J. Bean, James Barrett, A. F. Childress, W. D. Dunlap, R. J. Williams, R. J. Downs, J. M. Grant and J. W. Sorrell.

Prof. J. M. Collier, the former principal of our Clanton school, has been elected principal of the city schools at Decatur. He is an able man that Clanton should have kept when it had him.

Fred Smith was before the mayor's court Tuesday charged with getting on a train and not being a passenger and was fined $10. He came very near losing a limb or his life Saturday as the train pulled away from the station. Some one will get killed and then the practice will be stopped.

W. T. Aldridge has been ill for several weeks, but is improving now.

W. M. Pierce, of Strasburg, was in Clanton Wednesday.

How are you getting on in counting those dots?

We're having a spell of dry weather and General Green no longer holds the fort. J. R. Collins went to Clanton Monday on busines. Mrs. J. W. Hayes has been very sick, but we gladly note she is better now. There will be a district school meeting at the school house on Saturday night to elect a teacher for the coming year. Marion Mims has returned to Hamilton to take the special preparatory course for the teachers' examination. Well as work is more plentiful than news, I'll ring off. "NIM ROD."

RANDOLPH.

We welcome lovely June, with its bright sunshine, lovely flowers, singing birds and golden grain. Grover Cleveland came home from Auburn Saturday. J. C. Harrison spent a night last week at East Lake, and while there witnessed a reproduction of the fall of Port Arthur. John Helton and family are visiting at Parkwood. E. Z. Nix and daughter, Miss Laura, of Macedonia, were in town Saturday. S. E. Waldrup was among our visitors Saturday. Mr. McKerall and wife left Sunday night for Birmingham. Ex-Commissioner Green and wife, of Active, were in town last week. J. L. Thomas and daughter, Miss Jewell, of Jemison, visited relatives here Sunday. There was a severe wind storm north of here last week. James C. Brand, one of our young men, is a delegate from here to the district conference at Prattville. Harvey Honeycutt and wife, of Lawley, visited relatives here Sunday. S. N., W. T. and John S. Waldrup left Friday night for Chattanooga, Tenn., to attend a convention of the pre-millennial people. B. V. Washburne was a pleasant visitor Monday. One of the hopeful features of the people's cause in Chilton is the noble young men that has espoused its principles, while it is impossible to mention but few of them, we are pleased to allude to as representative young men of that cause the names of Lee Vickers, F. J. Fitts, Henry Honeycutt, E. H. Adams, R. M. Hubbard, J. B. Northcutt, Joseph Headley, J. H. Anderson, J. A. Caddell, William DeShazo and Charles Reynolds. We mention these merely as specimens of the young men they represent, who have cast their lots with the people. May the young men never let the people's banner trail in the dust. John Crumpton came in Saturday and bought a new buggy. Pastor J. C. Harrison left Monday evening for Montgomery. He will attend the district conference at Prattville before he returns. Clyde Day, night operator, is taking the place of Mr. McKerall, the day operator, while he is gone to Birmingham. A crippled boy (Mr. Barnett), from Columbiana, is night operator at present. Success to THE UNION.

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

THORSBY LETTER.

Reuben Foss arrived Sunday from Illinois, where he has been at college, and his many friends were glad to see him back. Work is progressing on the depot, the new freight room and passenger waiting room being a big improvement. Wallace Hand paid us a visit Sunday, coming from West Baden, Ind. Messrs. Bice, Villadsen, Michelson and Gerald attended the S. C. A. in Clanton Saturday and presented Thorsby's bid for the warehouse, etc. Thorsby's baseball team is ready for games with neighboring teams. Address P. O. box 77, Thorsby. The hot weather in Thorsby is tempered by cooling breezes and "Freeman's cold drinks." Elder Simpson, of Birmingham, preached at the school building Sunday and the Rev. Gibson at the college. Pastor Hilland preached in English at the Norwegian church. Postmaster Bice and Marshal Robinson went to Montgomery Tuesday to bear witness in the case of Johnson, who was caught robbing the Thorsby postoffice some time ago.

We are offering $6,000 in valuable prizes

Birmingham, Ala., June 5, 1905.
Editor Union:

I was raised in Chilton county and take your paper, and reading the stock law discussion in THE UNION, I feel like saying a few words on the subject. I believe stock law would be beneficial to a few, but would be detrimental to the larger portion of the people. While some of the ranges are not very good, still stock can live through the summer if let run at large, and yearlings and dry cattle get in fairly good condition by fall, which they would not on the 2 or 3 acres advocated by some. I'm well acquainted with the soil of the county, and know you can't plant 2 or 3 acres in anything, that will keep the average amount of stock owned by our farmers; it will not keep 2 cows and calves and a bunch of shoats in a thriving condition, to say nothing of sheep and goats which a good many of our farmers have. It's easy for a man to sit down and write about how a man can take 2 or 3 acres of land and keep a lot of stock, but there's a lot of difference between talking and doing. If a man has plenty of land so he can fence 40 or 80 acres in a woods pasture and then fix 2 or 3 acres for winter pasture, that man can have some choice stock at little cost, but the renter and the 40 acre farmer can't do this way, consequently stock law means no stock for a great many people. There is just as much (if not more) intelligence, civilization and honesty among the opponents of the law as among its advocates, and as good providers for their families. Any one that wishes can keep up his cattle and care for them (without thrusting stock law on his neighbor,) and so reap the profit which some claim is in stock law. So you stock law advocates go and follow out your plans and quit bothering your neighbors who don't see as you do. Success to The Union and its readers.

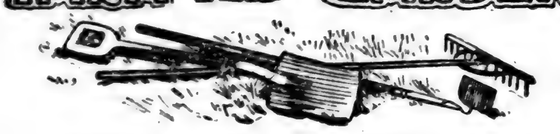
FARM AND GARDEN



ASPARAGUS CULTURE.

The following is part of a paper read by Edward Y. Teas, of Centerville, at a recent meeting of the Wayne County Horticultural Society:

I consider asparagus the most delicious product of the garden, as well as the most healthful, least understood and most neglected.

My first attempt to make an asparagus bed was more than fifty years ago; to be exact, in 1853. We dug a trench three feet deep. In the bottom of this we laid boulders about a foot deep and then filled in wtih soil and manure and in this planted the roots. In spite of this labor and expense, we had in due season asparagus for our table. In later year I have planted asparagus seeds to raise plants in the nursery for the general nursery trade, and I find plants that are grown by planting the seed, like you would beets or beans, yield quite a cutting of young shoots the second year from seed, and thereafter, good enough for all practical purposes. If the plants do not stand too thick in the row the yield will be satisfactory for twenty years or more.

Rich soil is essential to the production of fancy stem, and that the plant should be a reaonable distance apart for the proper development of each. If I were making a permanent bed in the family garden, I would have the rows two feet apart and the plants one foot apart in the row, setting the crown of the plant about three inches deep. Cultivate the same as you would other garden stuff the first year. In November remove all the tops and cover the bed with an inch or two of stable manure, this to be lightly forked under the following spring. After this, little cultivation is required, only to destroy the weeds as they appear. An occasional mulch of manure is desirable, but not every year.

Mr. Conover, an enterprising gardener of Long Island, planted a field to asparagus some years ago, setting the plants four feet apart each way, cultivating with a horse. The result was that he astonished New York markets with shoots, or grass as it is termed, of such extraordinary size as to command fabulous prices. Mr. Conover sold the seed and roots from his famous garden at Conover's Colossal, and this for a dozen years was leading variety. Since that time, others have obtained shoots of extra size by careful cultivation, and now we have Palmetto, Barr's Mammoth, and Columbain White Mammoth, the latter of a decidedly light shade of green. All these are good, the size depending largely on soil and cultivation.

I would not advise any cutting the first year. Some may be taken off the second year. In cutting over a bed or row I aim to cut every stalk, thinning out the inferior ones so the bed is smooth and clean as far as I go. We usually begin cutting the last of April, and continue until the middle of July. This allows the plants to make considerable growth the latter part of the summer, and recuperate so as to be ready for the next spring's work.

Our first cutting of asparagus this year was on April 9th, and we expect to have a supply for at least four months, from our rows of two year old plants.—Indiana Farmer

POPULAR TOULOUSE GEESE.

By far the most popular of the varieties of geese is the Toulouse. It has been longer known than some other useful kinds like the African, and is a very rapid grower and reaches a large size.

The standard weights are twenty pounds for full-grown ganders and eighteen pounds for females, but even this weight is often exceeded. The color is gray—in some strains a light gray, other darker, the under parts and fluff white, bill and legs reddish orange.

As layers the Toulouse rank medium, being rather less prolific than the African, but more so than the Emden. The season's output is from twenty to forty eggs per bird, geese two or three years old laying more than very young geese.

Their disposition is quiet and they are less troublesome to care for than some other breeds and will get along very well in a field without much water. A cross of the Emden and Toulouse has been pronounced the best all-round cross for general market purposes for both early and late markets and for the production of large geese for the holiday markets. The cross breds are large, rapid-growing and make a good-looking carcass.

Geese are generally considered more profitable that duck, although only a small number can be kept, because they require wider range, but when provided with sufficient pasture they require little attention, and will secure a good part of their living if they have access to marshy lands or small stream. Sometime they begin to lay as early as January, but usually not to any extent until March. At nesting time they should be provided wtih barrels, containing straw or hay, so that they will nest where they can be kept in sight. The first litter may be taken away and hatched under hens or by incubator, after which the goose will lay another litter. Breeders usually keep the geese laying as long as possible, hatching mot of the eggs with hen. The eggs hatch in thirty days, and a goose of average size will cover about fifteen. For the first few days they are liable to be chilled, but after the first week they are more hardy and require little care.

The usual plan is to confine them in small pens or yards which can be moved to fresh grass every day, because they require considerable pasture. Besides the grass or clover, they are fed on a mixture of Indian meal and shorts mixed with water but squeezed almost entirely dry before feeding. When three or four weeks old, they should be given wide range, but within an enclosure. When fattening, they are confined, and fed a mixture of ground grains with beef scrips, gradually increasing the proportion of corn meal and beef scraps until the food is about ten per cent. beef scraps and ninety per cent. meal. Toulouse geese reach a weight of ten pounds at ten weeks of age, and as a rule are sold more profitably at that weight as green geese. The market for these begins in June and lasts until March.—G. B. F. in Massachusetts Ploughman.

MARK THE BROODING HENS.

Where one keeps the one breed of hens, there is difficulty in distinguishing one sitting hen from another, so if they exchange nests the way to tell is a great help. If one is supplied with numbered leg bands and will put the number on a card with the date of sitting, and tack the cord in a conspicuous place, on or near, the sitting hen, the difficulty is overcome with but little trouble, but all are not possessed of them.

Different colored strings tied around the leg, would serve the same purpose. Of course no long ends will be left. Make the cord something like this.

April 10th red—if the hen is set on the tenth of April and has a red string on her leg.

This all necessitates lifting the hen, with perhaps disturbance of the eggs; some otherwise gentle hens, resent being lifted, a dab with a paint brush will do the work; but one must have several sorts of paint, or else touch plainly on paper or cardboard, back of the comb, another on back, one on left wing, one on right and so forth; this touch of paint will not injure or inconvenience any of the hens or anything, and will last until the brooding season is over.

Whatever mark is decided upon, whether string, paint, leg band or even clipping certain feathers, be very sure to mark the distinguishing touch plainly on paper or cardboard, and tack securely on or near the sitting place. You may be sure to remember just where each hen belongs, but it may happen that some one else will need to see after the sitters some day; then there might be trouble.

Keepers of pure breeds have trouble that the keepers of "all sorts and some mixed" have no idea of, but these very troubles teach us to be careful and methodical. By a look at the card anyone can tell when the chicks are due, and whether the right hen is on the right nest.

To be really sure, it is best to have the nests numbered, and the nest number, together wtih date and distinguishing mark, written in a book kept in a safe place; so should a card be destroyed, you would yet know.—E. C., in Indiana Farmer.

SCOURS IN HORSES.

In nine cases out of ten the cause of scours in horses is due to improper feeding, and while the trouble is a bad one to deal wtih at any time, it is especially bad at a season when considerable hard work is expected of the horse. Some horses are given to scouring easily, and when such is the case, care must be used not to furnish much feed that is laxative in character, and also to feed more largely of concentrated foods than of roughage.

A horse that scours and is doing a hard day's work should have whole oats mixed with a small quantity of bran as the main grain food, and the morning feed should be whole hay, all that he will eat in half an hour, then what water he wants within reason, and then the grain making the ration the quantity experience has shown is proper for the particular animal. The same feed should be given at noon and at night, but the quantity of water may be increased at night. In working a horse liable to attacks of scours, begin the day with him in an easy manner, and for the first two or three hours do not push him. Handled in this manner he will probably go through the rest of the day in good shape, and do a fair day's work. Such horses should be well groomed after a day of work to keep up the circulation of the skin, and the bedding should be clean and plentiful. — Indianapolis News.

WOODMAN'S AX SUPPLANTED.

Compressed Air Now Made to Turn Forest Into Logs.

It is small wonder, says the Philadelphia Record, with the millions and millions of feet of lumber which are cut from the forests every year to be manufactured into everything, from a house to a newspaper, that the Government has taken up seriously the subject of the deforestation of the country and attempted to enforce, in a small way at least, the replacing of some portion of the trees with new plantings which shall serve future generations. In continental Europe nearly every country has passed through this stage and reached the period in its history where the forests are as well cared for as are the fortifications and other government interests. A small army patrols the wooded areas, and only certain portions of the forests can be cut each year.

A MODERN SAWYER.

With us, however, the reforestation of devastated areas is only an experiment as yet, and much more money is spent every year in new machinery and devices for the rapid felling and cutting of the trees than goes for planting new growths. In the illustration will be seen one of the newest tools, which seems to displace the ax almost entirely in the woodman's hands. It is possible, with this new implement and its accompanying apparatus, to fell a tree and cut it up into lengths which can be hauled to the mill in much quicker time than can be done with the ax.

The compressor plant consists of a small engine, storage tank and air pump, fuel being obtained from the waste debris of the forests. From the storage reservoir any number of lines of hose may be led out in different directions, each ending in a cylinder and piston to operate a large saw. These are mounted on a clamping bracket to hold them in rigid connection with the log, and the operator has only to press the valve lever to admit air to the cylinder, guiding the saw through the log. It is not difficult to realize what a swath one compressor and a dozen saws would cut in a big forest in a few weeks' time.

Revision.

The late Pierre Lorillard figured that a gentleman couldn't live in New York on less than $1000 a day.

But this was some years ago.

In the meantime flour, bacon, etc., have gone up.

Should not the estimate be revised, in justice to such as may contemplate becoming gentlemen and taking up their residence in New York?—Life.

About Japan's Generals.

During the winter just past Japan's Generals along the Shakhe spent their time variously. "General Nodzu," according to the Japanese newspapers, "studied typewriting. General Kuroki kept barnyard fowls. During the Heikautai engagement General Kodama scarcely slept at all for a whole week, but did not seem one whit the worse for his experience." General Oyama was reported as being "the same robust, merry-hearted gentleman as ever."

Her Telegram.

Mrs. Lane's mother taught her that it is a waste of money to send less than ten words in a telegram. Mrs. Lane's husband taught her that in sending a telegram one should stick to his subject to avoid confusion. On Mrs. Lane's first absence from home, he sent a telegram, saying, "Are you all right? Send answer to Chicago." After a few menutes spent in agitated thought Mrs. Lane proudly wrote the following message.: "Yes, yes, yes. I am very well indeed, thank you."

SKAL-LAL-A-TOOT'S WIND STORY

The old chief puzzled for a long time over Samoset's wind story. Pernaps he wished Glooskap would tie the wings of the Wind Bird once more, for he very often destroyed the cornfields in the broad plains where the old chief lived.

Then he said, "Skal-lal-a-toots, can you tell a wind story, too?"

And Skal-lal-a-toots said, "I can tell you why the wind howls and shrieks so wildly, good chief."

"Is it because he is angry?" Samoset asked.

"No, it is because he is crazy," said Skal-lal-a-toots. "Listen, and I will tell you about it."

Once upon a time the Wind went to the lodge of a great bear and stole away the bear's daughter.

"I will take you," he said, "to my beautiful home in the northern sky."

The daughter was glad to go, but the father was angry. So when he found that his daughter was stolen, he flew out across the sea to overtake the Wind.

And when he had overtaken him, he struck the Wind such a blow upon the head that the Wind gave a great howl of pain and fell into the sea.

For a long time the Wind drifted on the waves, and the bear supposed that he had killed him. But by and by the Wind awoke again. The blow had only stunned him, and he seemed dead for a time.

But, alas, the Wind was never himself again; and from that time he has been crazy—crazy as a Wind could be.

Since that time he has gone howling and shrieking up and down the earth, crying, "Where is my beautiful Wife-bear! Where! Where! Where!"

But meantime the stars had taken pity on the unhappy Wife-bear, and had carried her up into the skies to dwell with them. And there in the night you can see her still. Her face is very pale, and sometimes she turns it away from the earth and you cannot see it at all.

But the poor, sad, crazy Wind has never found the Wife-bear yet. He still goes on dancing and singing and moaning and howling, always looking for the Wife-bear that he lost.

And the Wife-bear grieves for him; that is why she sometimes turns her face away from the earth. The stars, too, are sorry, but they cannot help him. So they watch over him, and they will watch over him as long as the poor, crazy Wind goes wandering up and down the earth.—New York Globe.

MOTHER GOOSE BAZAR.

An entertainment and profitable bazar for charity one springtime was called "Mother Goose's Spring Opening." A large Sunday school room was decorated with little booths made gay with imitation white lilies and festoons of yellow paper. Red cardboard flower pots also mounted guard at the entrances of the various booths, and these were filled with the some effective blossoms, and so natural were they that it was hard to realize that their fragrance was only sachet powder sprinkled generously within their centers, writes Marjorie March in the Housekeeper.

Mother Goose herself was mistress of ceremonies, met the guests as they entered and made them feel at home.

INTERESTING LETTER

WRITTEN BY A NOTABLE WOMAN

Mrs. Sarah Kellogg of Denver, Color[illegible] bearer of the Woman's Relief Corps, ...ends Thanks to Mrs. Pinkham.

The following letter was written by Mrs. Kellogg, of 1625 Lincoln Ave., Denver, Colo., to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"For two years I was troubled with a tumor, which kept growing, causing me intense agony and great mental depression. I was unable to attend to my household work and I became a burden to myself. I was confined for days to my bed, lost my appetite, my courage and all hope. I could not bear to think of an operation, and in my distress I tried every remedy which I thought would be of any use to me, and among the rest I wrote to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to ask women directly to give it a trial. I felt so discouraged that I had little hope of recovery, and when I began to feel better, after the second week, I thought it only meant temporary relief, but to my great surprise I found that I kept gaining, and the tumor lessened in size.

The Compound continued to build up my general health and the tumor seemed to be scattered, until, in seven months, the tumor entirely gone and I am well women. I am grateful for my recovery that I ask you to publish my letter in newspapers, so other women may know of the wonderful curative powers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

When women are troubled with irregular or painful menstruation, weakness, leucorrhœa, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, bloating, faintness, general debility, indigestion and nervous prostration or "blues," remember there is a remedy in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such trouble.

No other medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female troubles. Refuse to buy any other medicine.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

Health is too valuable to risk in experiments with unknown and untried medicines or methods of treatment. Remember that it is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that is curing women, and don't allow any druggist to sell you anything else in its place.

Religious Hornet's Nest.

Annie Besant has stirred up a hornet's nest in India by declaring that theosophy, the "religion" revealed to her predecessor, Mme. Blavatsky, is the oldest religion in the world. This has resulted in an organization of lectures, whose object is to counteract Mrs. Besant's influence. They are now making impassioned appeals urging the natives to look only to their own leaders. Prominent Hindoo thinkers declare that theosophy is almost entirely the creation of women, and they are organizing with the object of driving the Besant cult out of India.

Kaiser Was Snubbed.

English newspapers declare that Kaiser Wilhelm's visit to Gibraltar left a decidedly bad impression. He was received with marked coldness and was not invited to visit the fortifications, though in conversation with the governor of the port he pointedly expressed his interest in the works. It is said also that his majesty looks worn and thin, though active and energetic as ever. He is evidently in a state of high nervous pressure, but members of his staff carefully refuse to discuss his condition.

Great English Layman.

Charles Lindley Wood, second Viscount Halifax, will visit this country next fall. Lord Halifax is about the most widely known layman in the Church of England, being regarded as head of the advanced party in that church. It is expected that during his stay in America he will lecture to the clergy and laity of the Episcopal church. It was Lord Halifax who some years ago went to Rome and had an interview with Pope Leo in the interest of union between the churches of England and Rome.

FEED YOU MONEY

Feed Your Brain, and It Will Feed You Money and Fame.

"Ever since boyhood I have been especially fond of meats, and I am convinced I ate too rapidly, and failed to masticate my food properly.

"The result was that I found myself, a few years ago, afflicted with ailments of the stomach and kidneys, which interfered seriously with my business.

"At last I took the advice of friends and began to eat Grape-Nuts instead of the heavy meats, etc., that had constituted my former diet.

"I found that I was at once benefited by the change, that I was soon relieved from the heart-burn and the indigestion that used to follow my meals, that the pains in my back from my kidney affection had ceased, showing that those organs had been healed, and that my nerves, which used to be unsteady, and my brain, which was slow and lethargic from a heavy diet of meats and greasy foods, had, not in a moment, but gradually, and none the less surely, been restored to normal efficiency. Now every nerve is steady and my brain and thinking faculties are quicker and more acute than for years past.

"After my old style breakfasts I used to suffer during the forenoon from a feeling of weakness which hindered me seriously in my work, but since I have begun to use Grape-Nuts food I can work till dinner time with all ease and comfort." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

GOVERNMENT LIGHT.

HISTORIC CHICKAMAUGA PARK ABLAZE WITH ILLUMINATION.

United States System of Lighting Military Post Pronounced Gratifyingly Successful—Six and One-Half Miles of Mains—Sixty-Five Street Lights.

Chickamauga Park, Ga., May 31.—The United States Government has here in operation one of the largest acetylene gas plants in the world. The military post at the entrance of the historical Chickamauga battlefield, where thirty thousand Union and Confederate soldiers were lost in the memorable battle of September 19 and 20, 1863, contains about one hundred buildings, the seventy-five principal ones of which are lighted with acetylene. To accomplish this six and one-half miles of mains and two miles of service pipes are in use, while sixty-five street lamps brilliantly illuminate the avenues of the post.

In 1903 the War Department installed a test acetylene plant at Fort Meyer, Virginia. The results were so gratifying and the superiority of the illuminant so evident that the Government, March 20, 1904, placed the contract for the Chickamauga plant, in which every citizen of the United States should have his pro rata of pride.

But the Government has not confined its acceptance of acetylene to this military post. Since becoming satisfied of the efficiency, superiority and economical advantages of this particular illuminant, the United States has installed a number of plants in Indian schools and other Government institutions.

Acetylene gas is one of the simplest as well as the most perfect of artificial lights. It is made by the contact of water and carbide (a manufactured product for sale at a nominal price), is absolutely safe and gives a beautiful white light soothing to the eyes and nerves. It can be produced anywhere—in the farm home, the village store, the town hall, the church—and is so easily maintained as to be practical for all classes.

It is a matter for national congratulation that in beautifying so historic a spot as Chickamauga, nothing but the best, including the lighting system, has been deemed good enough for the American people.

Dry in South Africa.

Owing to the continued dry seasons in South Africa, which have caused the destruction of large droves of cattle, a large demand for pumps and windmills has sprung up. The sinking of wells has become a pronounced necessity. Even the government boring machines have been called into use to supply cattle with the necessary quantity of water to sustain life.

Best Germans Emigrated.

Professor Haeckel, of Jena, the great German Darwinian, declares that the best Germans have been driven to the United States, and that they have left behind a race of weaker men and women, whose offspring have proved incapable of giving the fatherland that mental and physical vitality which Germany contributed to the building up of the mighty American republic.

Refuses Pay for Writings.

A. E. Houseman, professor of Latin in the University College, London, is a writer of verses which have won praise from able critics. He consistently refuses to accept pay for his work. An American magazine recently printed fragments from a book he printed and sent him a check, which was returned with thanks.

Big Postoffice Business.

We have 70,000 postoffices and 500,000 miles of postal routes, with a yearly travel over them amounting to 500,000,000 miles. The service costs over $150,000,000 a year. The receipts now almost equal the expenditures, and have doubled in the last ten years.

Gift to Ex-Crown Princess.

Herr Manklewicz, a German millionaire, has notified the divorced wife of the King of Saxony, the ex-Crown Princess Louise, that he will present to her the villa at Merin he recently purchased and make her an allowance sufficient to live in it in royal state.

United States Fruit.

Cold storage of fruit in the United States has grown to enormous proportions, nearly 3,000,000 barrels of apples having been stored last year. It is found that if properly packed and handled the fruit does not sensibly deteriorate.

Drink From a Tree.

No one need die of thirst in Australia if eucalyptus trees are near. By cutting a sapling into sections of about ten feet and standing them perpendicularly, with the small ends down, half a pint of water may be obtained in fifteen minutes.

There are fourteen pairs of twins in the Whittier school, Minneapolis. Besides being in accord with President Roosevelt as to race suicide, the Whittier school district is strongly republican, having given 1,547 votes for Roosevelt and 161 for Parker.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, premier of Canada, is frequently referred to as perhaps the greatest statesman in all the British empire, regarded either as leader of the people, public speaker or authority on parliamentary usage. Tall, thin and straight as an arrow, with countenance mild, serious and sympathetic and a large, well developed brow, indicative of strength of mind and resourcefulness of purpose, the Canadian prime minister, when he rises to address a public gathering, at once commands attention. His father was a poor surveyor in the parish of St. Lin, where Sir Wilfrid was born in 1841. This is a scotch settlement, and from a schoolmaster and merchant of that nationality the youth learned regarding the achievements of the liberal party in Great Britain. He frequently declares that much of his success is due to the lessons drawn from what he heard from these two men in his boyhood days.

Always Admired Patti.

Mme Patti (Baroness Cederstrom) has received from President Loubet the ribbon of the Legion of Honor in recognition of her charitable work in Paris. In signing the decree conferring the decoration President Loubet is said to have uttered a remark so undiplomatic as to make every other Frenchman blush. "I do this," he is reported to have said, "with as much pleasure as I experienced long ago, when I heard Mme. Adelina Patti sing in 'Lucia' and in 'La Sonnambula.'"

One of the Oldest Churches.

One of the oldest churches in this country is found in the redwood forests of California. It is near San Jose, and is maintained by a mining settlement, the minister working as a miner during the week. It is built in one of the hollow trees and accommodates a congregation of twenty-five, with space for a recess chancel, which contains a small organ.

There are only first and third class cars in the new electric subway in London, which takes the place of the dirty underground with steam engines. The cars are incombustible.

Painful Eruptions From Knees to Feet Seemed Incurable—Cuticura Ends Misery.

Another of those remarkable cures by Cuticura, after doctors and all else had failed, is testified to by Mr. M. C. Moss, of Gainesville, Texas, in the following letter: "For over thirty years I suffered from painful ulcers and an eruption from my knees to feet, and could find neither doctors nor medicine to help me, until I used Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills, which cured me in six months. They helped me the very first time I used them, and I am glad to write this so that others suffering as I did may be saved from misery."

The Japan Royal Mail Steamship Company has a capital of $11,000,000 in shares.

Railroad Rate Legislation.

Testifying before the Senate Committee at Washington, Interstate Commerce Commissioner Prouty said in discussing the proposition to give that commission the power to regulate railway rates:

"I think the railways should make their own rates. I think they should be allowed to develop their own business. I have never advocated any law, and I am not now in favor of any law, which would put the rate making power into the hands of any commission or any court. While it may be necessary to do that some time, while that is done in some States at the present time, while it is done in some countries, I am opposed to it. The railway rate is property. It is all the property that the railway has got. The rest of its property is not good for anything unless it can charge a rate. Now it has always seemed to me that when a rate was fixed, if that rate was an unreasonable rate, it deprives the railroad company of its property pro tanto. It is not necessary that you should confiscate the property of a railroad; it is not necessary that you should say that it shall not earn three per cent. or four per cent. When you put in a rate that is inherently unreasonable, you have deprived that company of its rights, of its property, and the Circuit Court of the United States has jurisdiction under the fourteenth amendment to restrain that. I have looked at these cases a great many times, and I can only come to the conclusion that a railroad company is entitled to charge a fair and reasonable rate, and if any order of a commission, if any statute of a State Legislature, takes away that rate, the fourteenth amendment protects the railway company."

PELVIC CATARRH WAS DESTROYING HER LIFE. PE-RU-NA SAVED HER.

Miss Maria Ducharme, 182 St. Elizabeth street, Montreal, Can., writes:

"I am satisfied that thousands of women suffer because they do not realize how bad they really need treatment and feel a natural delicacy in consulting a physician. "I felt badly for years, had terrible pains, and at times was unable to attend to my daily duties. I tried to cure myself, but finally my attention was caused to an advertisement of Peruna in a similar case to mine, and I decided to give it a trial.

"My improvement began as soon as I started to use Peruna and soon I was a well woman. I feel that I owe my life and my health to your wonderful medicine and gratefully acknowledge this fact."—Maria Ducharme.

A Great Combination Offer!

THE UNION and "MADAME" Offer You

$6,000.00 IN PRIZES

MADAME is a magazine for women who think and is the only magazine in the world endorsed by OVER THREE MILLION WOMEN, being adopted as the Official Organ of the National Council of Women. It is full of bright stories, clever articles on art, music, literature, with beautiful pictures galore.

TEST OF SKILL. This is not a lottery, guessing or estimating contest. It is absolutely a test of skill. There is no trick or deception about this, whatsoever. The dots are visible to the naked eye and can be counted. If you can count the dots correctly and give a good plan of counting them you should win. Your chance of winning is as good as any one's.

Money must accompany all subscriptions otherwise your count will not be registered. If you are now a subscriber to either paper your subscription will be extended.

If this map gets destroyed, another printed on heavy paper will be sent you upon receipt of 2 cent stamp for postage.

$50.00 IS OFFERED AS A SPECIAL PRIZE TO THOSE SENDING IN THREE COUNTS (SEE CONDITIONS)

A TOTAL OF 757 PRIZES

CONDITIONS—$1.00 pays for six months to MADAME and six months subscription to THE UNION and entitles you to 1 free count. $2 pays for one years subscription to Madame and one year's subscription to THE UNION and entitles you to three free counts and makes you eligible for the $50.00 prize given to winners of the first prize if they have three counts. See below.

$50.00 PRIZES—We believe every one should have three counts so they can have one on each side of what they think is correct, to be more sure to hit it. To encourage this we will give $50.00 extra to winners of first prizes if they have three counts. Remember if you have one count you get first prize ONLY, BUT IF YOU HAVE THREE COUNTS AND WIN YOU GET $50.00 EXTRA.

AWARDS will be made as follows: The person giving correct or nearest correct count will get first prize. Next nearest correct, second prize, etc. In case of a tie for any prize it will be awarded to the person giving best plan for counting dots.

JUDGES. The awarding of prizes will be wholly in the hands of disinterested judges. The Hon. John W. Holtzman, Mayor of the City of Indianapolis, is chairman of the Committee of Judges. We are bound our contests must be ABSOLUTELY FAIR.

OUR FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES—As to whether we are abundantly able to do as we say, we refer to any bank or trust company in the city of Indianapolis. Our offer will be carried out to the letter

In the event of more than one person submitting the same plan and it being considered the best plan by the judges each person so tying will be asked to tell in fifty words how best to improve MADAME. The one making the best suggestion gets first prize, next best next, etc. UNDERSTAND THIS IS ONLY IN CASE OF TIE IN PLAN, WHICH IS NOT AT ALL LIKELY. No one connected with Madame or The Union will be allowed to compete. Contest closes July 1, 1905, but get your counts in at once. Anybody having THREE COUNTS entered may enter additional counts at 25c each. Be careful to give your plan of counting, as the best plan used will decide all ties.

PRIZES GUARANTEED—We will guarantee to give a prize worth one dollar at least, to every person who sends a correct count and $2.00 for a year's subscription to Madame and The Union.

Modern Enterprises.

By Henry Harrison Suplee.

IT may be of interest to call attention to the fact that in engineering, as in other departments of work and activity, the things which are considered of the greatest magnitude and importance are by no means those of the largest cost and difficulty. Thus, the Simplon tunnel, important as it is in connection with the opening of new routes from Italy to the North Sea, is estimated to cost about $15,000,000, or less than one-third of the cost of the New York Rapid Transit subway. The maximum estimated cost of the Panama canal, cut to sea-level, is $250,500,000, while the estimates of the new subways in New York city alone, not including that already completed, amount to $250,000,000.

It has been estimated that the works now projected and partially under way in and about New York at the present time will involve the expenditure of nearly $450,000,000. These works include the Pennsylvania railroad tunnels and terminal, $50,000,000; the electrification of the New York Central lines entering New York, with the reconstruction of the Grand Central station, $45,000,000; new subways in Greater New York $250,000,000; Manhattan, Blackwell's Island, and other bridges, $16,500,000; extension of the New York water supply, $60,000,000; improvement of the harbor and the dredging of the Ambrose channel, $4,000,000. Similar great expenditures are planned about Chicago. It has been announced that extensive railroad improvements and connections about Chicago, to facilitate the handling of the rapidly increasing traffic, will involve the expenditure of about $200,000,000; while the freight subway, which has been so successfully and unobtrusively built under the Chicago streets, is to be enlarged and extended, it is reported, at a cost of $50,000,000 to $100,000,000.

There are thus contemplated and already partially under way, in and about two great cities of the United States, engineering works involving an outlay of more than $700,000,000 most of which will be provided from private and corporate resources, and all of which is attracting much less attention than a few national works of less than one-third the total cost. These are but a few of the works which owe their existence to the development of the applied science to engineering, works which are destined to create values out of all proportion to the expenditures which they are causing, and works which, with their successors, may change the courses of trade, the prosperity of nations, and the conduct of governments.—By Henry Harrison Suplee.

Causes of Unhappiness

By H. B. La Rue.

MAN is a creature of his senses: woman of her ideals. And that is the main reason that woman can never understand why men do not and cannot love as women do. A woman loves the man that honors her; he loves the woman that takes care of his comfort. Like a dog, he loves the hand that feeds him, and no other. He may claim to have the higher ideals and expatiate on them, but he must be comfortable before he can expatiate on anything.

The great cause of the mass of human unhappiness is that we expect too much of each other. Our ideals are very largely formed by our literature. The heroes and heroines of our best fiction always present fifty year heads on twenty year shoulders, but marriage dispels all such illusions.

A man marries simply for a home, and the woman that takes care of it and him can do anything with him, and if she does not she can do nothing with him. When a man is looking for a wife he does not demand beauty or accomplishments, but does want the "good face to have around the house." That is the woman he is looking for. He will leave society beauties and marry a demure little "country mouse," and society wonders.

A girl less than twenty-five or thirty years old is not fit to select a husband; any woman over forty will acknowledge that. A man that a girl would elope with at twenty she would despise at thirty, fight at forty, and shoot at fifty, if he proposed marriage.

Bedford, Ind.—Workingmen engaged in unloading a carload of sand found hidden in it several bundles of papers which proved to be the bonds and securties valued at $300,000, which were stolen from the Wilmington, Ill., bank, together with $2,500 cash on May 9. The papers have been returned to the bank.

Eufaula, Ala.—Circuit court is still in session and business is being dispatched with great promptness. The case of Dan Card was disposed of. The jury was only out ten minutes when they returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree and fixed the punishment at death. Card was sentenced to hang on the 30th of this month.

Paris, France.—Marine Minister Thomson announced at a cabinet council that he had arranged to send a second division consisting of twelve small warships to Indo-China. The division will reach Saigon in November, and will join a similar division sent last year, thus largely augmenting the naval strength of France in the far east.

Branches of the German and Austrian Alpine club have been established in London and Manchester.

Naples.—The eruption of Mount Vesuvius continues, the volcano showing four new openings, through which lava flows, while the immediate surrounding country is covered with ashes. The funicular railroad has been compelled to cease running.

Lifeboats were launched on service no fewer than 294 occasions on the American coast last year and saved 519 lives. The fleet of lifeboats number 285.

Big Building Burned.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Milwaukee exposition building, occupying a city block, was totally destroyed by fire Sunday. The loss is $300,000, insured for $75,000.

Three Churches Struck by Lightning.

Chicago, Ill.—During a thunderstorm here three churches were struck by lightning and two of them completely destroyed. The storm was the worst of the season and besides the churches several other buildings were struck and damaged. The total loss occasioned by the lightning is estimated at $200,000.

Killed for Five Cents.

Nacogdoches, Tex.—George Clevenger, a white man, has been shot and killed several miles from town by Bob Davis, a negro, who has been captured and jailed here. A dispute arose over five cents, and the shooting followed. Clevenger is the third member of his family to be shot and killed in the last three years.

Dynamite Used to Wreck Store.

Nashville, Tenn.—A Ripley, Tenn., dispatch says a bold attempt was made to blow up a store house occupied in the suburbs of that place. The explosion tore up the floor and scattered the wares over the place. There is no clue as to the guilty parties.

Big Corn Raisers.

Scottsboro, Ala.—George Hess, the champion corn raiser of this county, was here Friday and says that he has now sixty acres of fine Tennessee river bottom corn ready to lay by. He and his father, Captain Hess, recently sold to Captain Glover at Bridgeport, over 10,000 bushels of last year's corn, at 50 cents a bushel.

Birmingham, Ala.—J. W. Abercrombie a conductor on the South Bessemer car line, was shot by an unknown negro on the car near Schillinger Station, near Powderly, Monday night at 6:30 o'clock. The ball entered the arm below the elbow, inflicting a serious wound. Jack Johnson, a negro who was on the car, was shot in the head, it is supposed, by a stray shot. After the shooting the assailant leaped from the car and escaped.

Began Boring Sixth Well.

Huntsville, Ala.—The New York-Alabama Oil Company began boring its sixth well at Hazel Green today. Gas from the last well is being used as fuel to run the engine of the drilling machinery.

Killed by Fall at Furnace.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—Christ Beck was killed Tuesday morning at the furnace of the Central Iron and Coal Company at Holt by falling from the top of the furnace stack. He was engaged in painting the stack when in some way the rope broke, throwing him to the ground.

Broke His Arm Again.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—Willie Vandegraff, the third son of Attorney A. S. Vandegraff, fell and broke his arm while playing in the back yard Sunday afternoon. It seems the little fellow was trying to jump from a step ladder to the limb of a tree and in doing so fell and broke his arm just above the wrist. Unfortunately he broke it in the same place he did some time ago. A doctor was called and dressed his arm, using the X-ray in order to set the fracture properly.

Big Suit for Damages.

Huntsville, Ala.—Mrs. Beulah Gray, of Scottsboro, administratrix of the estate of Will Gray, has filed in the circuit court of this county a suit for $40,000 damages against the Huntsville Railway, Light and Power Company. The complaint states that Will Gray was killed by being electrocuted while discharging his duty as a lineman employed by the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, and charges criminal negligence on the part of the defendant company in using wires from which the insulation had worn off.

Car Inspector Gave Up.

Selma, Ala.—W. L. Burke, night car inspector in the Southern railway yards, and in whose house Special Agent A. P. New, of the Southern railway, found a quantity of goods that had been stolen from cars in the road's yards, gave himself up to the county authorities Monday. Mr. Burke has been in Maplesville for several days visiting his family, but as soon as he heard that a quantity of stolen goods had been found at his residence he returned to Selma and gave himself up.

Mr. Burke says that he knows nothing whatever of the stealing of the merchandise from the cars. He says that when he left Selma to visit his family he turned the keys of his home over to another man to keep while he was away. When he heard that the goods had been found there he returned home and found that a scuttle hole had been made in the roof, which was not there when he left home. Later in the day Mr. Burke made bond and was released from jail.

General Stewart Greatly Improved.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The condition of Gen. A. P. Stewart, the ranking officer of the United Confederate Veterans, who has been seriously ill for several days, is much improved, and high hopes for his recovery are entertained. He will hardly be able to attend the Confederate reunion at Louisville this week, however.

Additional Cases of Yellow Fever.

Washington, D. C.—Three additional cases of yellow fever in the canal zone were reported to the war department in a cablegram from Governor Magoon, of the canal zone.

Morgan's Sabre Carried to Reunion.

Nashville, Tenn.—Probably one of the most interesting relics that will be taken to the reunion is in possession of Patrick M. Griffin, a member of Company B. Mr. Griffin has the sword of Gen. John H. Morgan, the famous cavalry leader, which was recently found in possession of a Nashville negro.

Thorsby Man Is Sentenced.

Montgomery, Ala.—John W. Johnson, a young white man of Thorsby, has been sentenced by Judge Thomas G. Jones, of the United States district court, to serve two years in the Atlanta penitentiary for attempting to rob the postoffice of the little colony town of Chilton county.

Baron Rothschild Is Dead.

Vienna.—Baron Nathaniel De Rothschild, brother of the head of the Austrian branch of the firm, died Tuesday. He had been seriously ill for a long time.

Verdict of Guilty of Robbery.

Birmingham, Ala.—James Blackstock and J. F. Latham have been found guilty of highway robbery. The verdict of the jury was brought in shortly before 3 o'clock Tuesday, finding the defendants guilty as charged, and fixing a term of thirty-five years in the state penitentiary as punishment for Latham and ten years for Blackstock. There are two more cases again Latham and the same number against Blackstock. John Blackstock has not yet been tried.

ON TO LOUISVILLE

Where the City is in Gala Day Attire to Receive the Gray-haired Veterans.

MANY ARE GOING TO ATTEND.

The Stars and Bars Entertwined With the Stars and Stripes—To Be a Big Gathering.

Louisville, Ky.—Decorations with the Stars and Bars and the Stars and Stripes entwined blossoming forth on all the buildings along the main thoroughfares, and the sight of a few gray uniforms about the streets told the citizens of Louisville that reunion week had arrived and that the city would soon be overflowing with the hosts of the United Confederate Veterans.

It is estimated that between twenty and thirty thousand visitors from all over the south and west, with a sprinkling from the north, would be entertained during the week. In addition to these visitors from a distance, from thirty to fifty thousand from the immediate vicinity of Louisville will pour into the city on Friday, when eight or ten thousand veterans will march.

Gen. Wheeler First to Come.

When Gen. Joseph Wheeler, the first of the distinguished guests to put in an appearance, arrived Sunday from New York, he found every detail of the arrangements for the reception of his comrades and their friends arranged. Not a hitch has occurred thus far and none is expected to occur. The visitors will find accommodations and the heartiest of welcomes. In fact, the reunion promises to be the most successful ever held, especially in point of the number of veterans themselves.

Gen. Lee Came Monday.

Gen. Stephen D. Lee, commander-in-chief, with his staff, and the Mississippi delegation will arrive Monday night, and from that time on until Wednesday morning, the day for the formal opening of the reunion, special trains from all points in the south will pour in their thousands. A feature of the reunion will be the attendance of some 200 Indians from Georgia, North Carolina and Indian Territory, who fought on the Confederate side during the civil war.

Sons of Veterans on Wednesday.

The Sons of Veterans and United Confederate Veterans, which will be in on Wednesday, and the parade, which will take place Friday, are of course the principal features of the reunion. There will be balls for the sons of soldiers and maids of honor. The reunion proper begins Wednesday morning and ends Friday afternoon, but a number of the entertainment features will be continued Saturday for those who desire to remain.

New Rubber Plant Found.

Buena Vista, Colo.—The second rubber reduction factory in this state, following hard on the discovery of the Colorado rubber plant, will commence operations in this city on June 15th. The new plant will have a capacity of thirty tons a day of crude rubber, and will employ 250 men, paying them two cents a pound for picking the weed from which the rubber is obtained.

The discovery of real rubber in the ordinary rabbit weed of the plains has opened a new industry to Colorado that is far-reaching in its effects. Millions of tons of the weed grow wild in this and surrounding states, while its product is fully equal to that obtained by incalculable labor and constant danger in the South American forests. The plant contains 20 per cent of pure rubber, and hot water and maceration are all that is necessary to separate it from the refuse. A half dozen other factories are planned at various points in the state, and all will probably be in operation before the end of the year.

Will Establish Wagon Yard.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—The business men of the city are making strenuous efforts to establish a farmers' wagon yard here. The idea is to build a very attractive place in which farmers all over the sections surrounding this city may find attractive camping quarters while at this place. A large yard is to be enclosed and stalls for at least 150 head of stock. Attractive rooms will be erected, electric lighted and a watchman is to be employed for the protection of supplies, etc., left in the yard by the farmers.

Carl von Frieren Dead.

Stockholm—Carl von Frieren, minister of education and ecclesiastical affairs, is dead.

A Youthful Couple.

Eufaula, Ala.—L. C. Bell and Miss Lena Lindsey, who were parties to a Gretna Green wedding in Cuthbert, Ga., Friday, came over on the 5 o'clock train and spent the remainder of the day enjoying the sights of the city on a short bridal tour. The groom is a young merchant who resides in the country near Fort Gaines, and the bride is a resident of Coleman Station. To all appearances the groom is about eighteen years of age and his child wife is not thought to be a day older than twelve. They were sought out by hundreds of citizens and were the objects of much curiosity on the part of every one who saw them. The bride was clad in a neat white dress that barely touched three inches below her knees and looked to all appearances like an ordinary school girl and seemed as happy as the days are long. They seem to have no fear of reconciling the old folks upon their return home.

A Race Fight.

Charleston, S. C.—As a result of the bloody race riot that occurred late Saturday night on the Aiken and Augusta trolley line, about one mile on the South Carolina side, in North Augusta, Peter Renew, white, is dead; Charles Willis, a negro, and E. F. Fishburn, conductor, white, mortally wounded; Morgan Willis, a negro, and Maxie Boyd, white, seriously injured.

In the inquest over Renew it was shown that Boyd started the trouble by cursing Willis, a negro, who turned and cut him. The car was stopped to put Willis off and he began to fire into the car. There were 87 passengers and several produced pistols, at least forty shots being fired.

The coroner's verdict charges Willis with killing Renew and names Milligan Willis as accessory.

Woman's Body Found.

Chicago, Ill.—The body of Mrs. Marian Kurtzman, one of the victims of Saturday night's automobile accident, was found Sunday night about 250 feet from the spot where the auto plunged into the river at the Rush street bridge. The body of Wilson A. Hartley, the third victim of the accident, has not yet been found.

William H. Hoops, Jr., who was in charge of the automobile at the time of the accident, was arrested Sunday on a charge of criminal carelessness. When the automobile was taken from the river it was found that the throttle was wide open and the brakes in good working order. Thus, the police claim that this is sufficient evidence that Hoops made no effort to stop the car. Hoops' father secured the release of his son in $3,000 bond.

Three Are Killed.

New Orleans, La.—Quite a sensational and serious shooting occurred at Palmetto Sunday in which three men were killed and one mortally wounded.

The kilfed: Tom Carroll, Oscar Fredericks and John Magee, and Constable F. A. Soilean mortally wounded.

The occurrence was a shock to the community. The cause of the trouble is supposed to be owing to ill feeling existing between Carroll and Constable Soilean.

Found Dead After a Month.

Atmore, Ala.—Dick McGhee, a half-Indian of the settlement about twenty miles west of Atmore, wandered off, ostensibly to hunt rabbits, one day in the latter part of April, and not returning, a searching party was organized and all the forests around were scoured to locate him. On June 1st he was found about six miles from home, where he had probably been dead for a month, the bones having become dry, and the form was recognized only by the clothing.

No Officers Saved.

London.—According to the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times it is stated by the Russian admiralty that in the battle of the Sea of Japan not a single officer was saved from the battleships Navarin, Bordino, Imperator, Alexander III or Nniaz Souvaroff, all of which turned turtle.

Eighteen Hurt.

"101" Ranch, O. T.—Fifty or more yards of the mile and a quarter grand stand surrounding the exhibition arena at the "101" ranch collapsed at 3:30 o'clock Sunday evening, eighteen persons being more or less seriously injured. The accident was witnessed by the 30,000 spectators attending the entertainment.

Germany Will Confer.

London.—The correspondent of the Times at Tangier reports that Germany has accepted the invitation to the proposed conference on the Moroccan situation.

Big Dry Dock Will Be Launched.

Washington—The big floating dry dock built for use in the navy was launched at Sparrows Point, Md., Saturday.

THE UNION DISSOLVED

Norway and Sweden are Separated and a New King Will Reign Over Sweden.

THE STORTHING'S RESOLUTION.

Sweden for Protection and Norway for Free Trade.—Norwegians Want to Manage Their Affairs.

Christiana, Norway.—The Storthing Wednesday declared the union between Norway and Sweden under one king to be dissolved, and the king has ceased to act as king of Norway. The Storthing further empowers the present state council to act as a government of Norway until further notice, and to exercise the power heretofore appertaining to the king.

An address to the king was adopted declaring that no ill feeling was entertained against him, his dynasty or the Swedish nation, and asking him to cooperate in the selection of a young prince of the house of Bernadotte to occupy the throne of Norway.

It Was Long Expected.

The dissolution of the union between Sweden and Norway has been pending for some time and had its growth in the desire, which grew stronger as time passed, for the establishment of separate consular systems for the two countries. King Oscar recently vetoed at Stockholm the measure presented to him by the council of state providing for separate consular representation, and the Norwegians maintained that the king by so doing, and partly by his absence from Norway, had suspended his rights and duties as king of Norway.

One of the causes for the desire in Sweden and Norway for separate consular systems was the fact that Sweden is protectionist and Norway is for free trade, and also because of Norway's more extensive sea trade and other divergencies of commercial interests.

At the opening of the session the government informed the Storthing that it relinquished office from today. The Storthing thereupon unanimously and without debate published the following resolution:

The Storthing Resolution.

"Whereas, all the members of council of state have laid down their offices, and,

"Whereas, his majesty, the king, declared himself unable to establish a new government for the country, and,

"Whereas, the constitutional loyal power thus becomes inoperative, the Storthing authorizes the members of the council of state, who retired today, to exercise until further notice as the Norwegian government, the power appertaining to the king in accordance with Norway's constitution and existing laws with some changes which are necessary by the fact that the union with Sweden under one king is dissolved in consequence of the king having ceased to act as a Norwegian king."

M. Michaelson, the retiring premier, accepted in behalf of the government, the honorable and difficult task with which the Storthing has entrusted it.

Five social democrats dissented from the address to the king.

It is expected that the Storthing will issue a proclamation to the Norwegian people regarding the dethronement of the monarch.

King Oscar Protests.

Stockholm, Sweden.—King Oscar has sent a telegram to Premier Michaelson as follows:

"Have received the communication of the council of state. Record the most decided protest against the method and action of the government."

Falls in Tar Barrel.

Gadsden, Ala.—John Foreman got a coat of tar late Tuesday, but it was not accompanied with feathers. Foreman was at work with a squad of men painting the roof of Cottle's drug store and he had descended the ladder after more paint. As he ascended and reached the roof the ladder slipped and he was precipitated to the ground feet foremost, striking on his feet in a barrel of tar paint, being covered from head to foot with the black, sticky paint.

His right ankle was sprained and his body bruised some, but he says the worst part was getting rid of the tar, but was thankful it was not put on by anyone except himself.

To-Morrow

There are wonderful things we are going to do
Some other day;
And harbors we hope to drift into
Some other day.
With folded hands and oars that trail
We watch and wait for a favoring gale
To fill the folds of an idle sail.
Some other day.

We know we must toil, if ever we win,
Some other day;
But we say to ourselves, there's time to begin
Some other day;
And so, deferring, we loiter on,
Until at last we find withdrawn
The strength of the hope we leaned upon.
Some other day.

A Ghost Story

BY J. C. PLUMMER

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

We had passed out of the channel and were heading southwest bound on our long voyage to the Pacific. Just as night fell one of those sudden accidents occurred which mark the narrow boundary between life and death with the sailor. The mate had sent a man, Adolf Svendsen by name, out on the jib boom on a minor duty and by some means he lost his hold and fell. Life preservers were thrown over but the man seemed to make no effort to save himself and was drawn under by the suction of the vessel and lost before a boat could be lowered. The misfortune cast a gloom over the crew for death is very impressive to the few men cooped up between the rails of a ship, and some of the elder sailors began boding ill-luck for the voyage.

"We'll never turn the Horn," said old Pete, a confirmed pessimist. I had been cast in the second mate's watch and was glad of it for I had sailed the previous voyage under Mr. Owens, and he had taken a fancy to me. We had many a yarn while walking up and down the decks during the dreary hours of the night watch. When he came aboard at the India docks I noted a great change in his manner. In place of the hearty, jovial man I had known he appeared down to the water line with trouble. His face was care-worn and his head drooped as if he had a cargo of pig iron stowed on the back of his neck. During the watches he made no offer of talking and of course a foremast hand has no business speaking first to an officer.

The night after Svendsen's death I came up with my watch and began my tramp up and down the starboard side. Mr. Owens passed me several times without a word, then he suddenly grasped my arm.

"'Ave you seen Svendsen?" he asked, in a strained voice.

"Svendsen," I exclaimed, "why, the poor devil's drowned."

"They come back," he said, in a low voice, "drowned people come back. Hi'm expectin' to see 'im any minute."

I am not superstitious, but the earnestness of his speech and the utter silence of the sea made me look fearfuly around.

"The dead never come back," I said, but not very assuredly.

We took a turn or two along the deck he still grasping my arm and saying nothing.

"Hi wish Hi was in Svendsen's place," he said, suddenly, "then Hi'd be hout of the trouble that's to come."

The manner of the man made my flesh creep.

"What's the matter, Mr. Owens?" I asked.

"Hi've no wife nor child," he said, "but Hi've a sister that Hi've taken They've a nice little 'ome in South-'ark and she's a kid that's just beginnin' to talk. Hof course when I'm ashore Hi stay there and the night before Hi comes aboard this 'ere hooker Hi was a sittin' in my room a listenin' to Kate singin' the kid asleep. There's a big 'ouse cat that always makes friends with me and 'e was sittin' on the rug in front of me a dozin'."

"Well?" said I, for he remained silent.

"Hi don't want you to laugh at what Hi'm going to tell," he said savagely. "Hi won't stand hit from no man."

"I never laugh at any man's troubles," I said, "and I see you have some."

"Well, the big cat sat dozin' on the rug and Hi was a listenin' to Kate when the cat puts hup 'is back and begins to growl.

"'What's hup?" says I.

"'E got hup and began to creep towards the door, growlin' with 'is back harched and 'is tail a swellin'. Hi was afraid 'e'd go hin the room where the kid was and wake 'im so Hi catches

"'Is face was dead white."

'im by the scruff of the neck and brings 'im back to the rug.

"'You're goin' to 'ave a fit,' says Hi, hand Hi watched 'im. Hi was a startin' to bring 'im back again when 'e starts to back away from the door comin' towards me a growlin like has if 'e saw somethin' a comin' hin the door.

"'E backs until 'e reaches my cheer and then Hi looks haround the room to see hif there was anythin' to make the bloomin' cat act that haway and when Hi claps my heyes on 'im again 'e was a backin' haway from me. 'Is heyes was fixed on my cheer and they was glowin' like stars, 'is back was harched and 'is tail was as big as my harm. Hi was gettin' hup to leave 'im hout o' the window for Hi was sure 'e was mad when Hi feels a tap hon my shoulder. Hi looks haround and there stood Jack Porter. That of hitself was strange henough for Jack is somewheres in the Hindian Hocean bound 'ome which 'e can't reach for two months yet, but the way 'e looked made my 'eart stop. 'Is face was dead white and 'is heyes 'ad that stare that a drownded person's has. 'E was drippin' wet and 'is 'air was plastered on 'is fore'ead. The sight was such 'orror to me that Hi 'id my face hin my 'ands like a skeered kid. When Hi raised my 'ead the thing was gone hand the cat was sittin' hon the rug. Now, the drift of hit is that poor Jack's drownded and 'e came to tell me."

"That's an easy course to lay," said I, "you fell asleep and dreamed it."

"Hi tell you Hi was wide awake has Hi ham now, and," with a disgusted intonation, "do you think Hi'd dream hof a cat?"

"Did you tell your sister?" I asked.

"Hi 'adn't the 'eart," he replied, gloomily. "Hif Hi could Hi'd a stayed 'ome with 'er, but Hi'd been advanced some money on this voyage and 'ad to go. When Hi thinks of poor Kate cryin' over 'er 'usband and that little kid Hi wishes Hi was drownded, too."

"Svendsen's a wife hin Norway," he continued, after a pause, "and that's what brings hit so sharp to my mind. What's that?"

"Only the creaking of this brace," I said, but I had started as he did at the sound.

We bowled south at a good rate, but Mr. Owens became gloomier each day and I feared he would leap overboard. It was his settled conviction that his brother-in-law was drowned.

One bright morning a man aloft shouted "sail ho!" and we began to rapidly raise a bark on our lee quarter. She came within hailing distance when Owens gave a cry.

"Hit's the Skylark!" he exclaimed.

"Hail her, Mr. Owens," said the mate, who was chipping tobacco.

Owens put the trumpet to his lips but couldn't utter a sound. He handed to the mate, helplessly, and leaned against the rail.

The mate sent his strident voice over the water.

"Skylark, Rangoon for London," came back an answer to the hail.

"Hask 'im if Jack Porter's aboard," said Owens, huskily, then he snatched at the mate's arm, "No, don't ask. Hi'm afraid to 'ear." It was too late, the interrogation had been thundered through the trumpet.

"Yes, hearty as roast beef, that's him on the fo'castle," was the reply, and the bark filled away.

Two years later I was a guest at the christening of Mr. Jack Porter's second son, and Owens whispered to me at the church door: "Hi'd die 'appy hif hi knew what that there cat saw."

BOY STRICTLY UP TO DATE.

Knew His Value and Was Able to Impress It on Others.

A boy came briskly into the office, doffed his hat and turned to the boss.

"I understand that you want a boy, sir?" he said.

"What sort of a place do you want?"

"Where there is as little work and as much pay as the house can stand."

"Most boys who come here are willing to take all work and no pay."

"I'm not most boys."

"Do you expect to get the kind of a job you want."

"No, sir; nobody gets what he wants exactly, but it doesn't hurt him to expect a good deal."

"What pay do you think you should have?"

"Three per week."

"The other boys have only been paid $2."

"How many did you have last year?"

"Eight or ten."

"I thought so. That's the kind of a boy a two-dollar boy is. I'm not that kind. I come, I hang up my hat and stay."

"Suppose we should bounce you?"

"I'll be glad of it, sir. Yes, sir; if the house isn't satisfied with the right kind of a boy it isn't the right kind of a house for the right kind of a boy to be in. It's time I was going to work if I'm going to work, and if I'm not, it's time I left."

"Well," concluded the boss, "hang up your hat and go to work."

Dividing the Work.

Elder Edgecomb was for many years pastor of the Free Baptist Church in Vienna, Me., in which town lived a simple-minded man named Perry Wood.

One hot Sunday in summer the parson had occasion to admonish some of his hearers for going to sleep during the service. The next Sunday, while the minister was in the midst of his sermon, he heard something whiz across the room and strike the wall. He continued his sermon, but kept one suspicious eye on the congregation. Soon he saw the simple-minded Perry, who was sitting in the stove room in the rear of the church, rise, take an apple from his pocket and bring his arm back preparatory for a throw at the head of a sleeping deacon.

"Perry Wood," exclaimed the irate parson, "you put that apple up, and if you ever throw another one in this church I'll—"

"You hold right on, elder," broke in the excited Ferry, "you tend to your preaching and I'll keep them awake.

What Was the Use?

There was once a man who said that he would show his wife how to clean house; that he could do it in half the time and with half the trouble she could. He would do it, he said, for the sake of avoiding the annual upheaval and disturbance in their home.

And she dared him to do it.

So he pitched in and took up carpets and beat them, and mopped floors and washed windows, and dusted pictures and cleaned cupboards—and he finished the work in less than half the time she took to do it.

But it availed naught.

For she went all over the house after he had finished, taking up carpets and taking down pictures and clearing out cupboards, to see if he had done the work properly.

Even when a reformer accomplishes anything his accounts have to be audited.

How It Turned Out.

I went because it seemed to be
A pleasant place to stay—
Where I could go and drink some tea
And while the hours away.
The girl appeared to be a quite
Refined and modest sort.
But though I went there every night
I did not go to court.

We sat upon the sofa and
The lights were burning low,
At times I even held her hand—
No harm in that, you know;
I surely thought so, anyway;
It had no real import;
And I'm sincere now when I say
I didn't go to court.

I never thought she would be so
Unprincipled and base;
To me it was an awful blow,
That breach-of-promise case.
To pay her damages was gall,
For payings' not my forte,
I had to pay, though. After all
I had to go to court.

Helen's P. S.

Helen had been taught to say her prayers every night, and the little prayer beginning, "Now I lay me down to sleep," was the prayer used. One day an old friend of the family, "Auntie Benson," came to spend the day, and on leaving asked Helen to remember her in her prayers. Helen agreed. That night, after asking that a blessing should rest on her mother, father, grandparents, aunts, uncles, cousins, friends, etc., Helen rose from her knees. She walked across the room, and jumped into bed. Then like a shot she jumped out again, sank down on her knees and exclaimed: "Postscript, and Auntie Benson!"

PAPA'S JUDGMENT WAS OFF.

His Boy Very Much Like Other Boys, After All.

On the day The Boy was eleven years old he visited an artist friend who likes boys. The artist entertained him royally. He gave him a gun and cigarette coupons worth $2.50. The Boy was proud of the gun, but he thought still more of the coupons.

"What are you going to get with them, son?" asked The Boy's mother.

"I don't know," said The Boy.

His mother was about to offer a few suggestions but The Boy's father interfered.

"Just you let Bob alone, he said. "Let him pick out his own prize. He knows what he wants."

"But he'll get something foolish," argued the practical mother.

"No, he won't," said the father. "That boy's got the best judgment of any boy I ever saw. He won't throw his money away. He'll come home with something useful—something that he needs right on the spot. I wouldn't be afraid to bet on that."

So the mother finally gave in. On Saturday The Boy went down town to exchange his coupons for a prize. When he came home the family was gathered at the dinner table talking about him.

"Come, dear," said his mother, "show mama what her little boy got."

They sat expectant while the boy unwrapped his prize. After a little they spoke. The mother said, "Oh! oh! oh!" and the father said, "Well, I'll be blessed!"

The boy had bought a razor.

Music.

The Jews have an old tradition that when the world was done,
And God from His work was resting, He called to Him, one by one,
The shining troops of the angels, and showing the wonder wrought,
The Master asked of His servants what they of the vision thought.

Then one white angel, dreaming o'er the marvel before him spread,
Bent low in humble obeisance, lifted his voice, and said:
"One thing only is lacking—praise from the new-born tongue.
The sound of a hallelujah by the great creation sung."

So God created music—the voices of land and sea,
And the song of the stars revolving in one vast harmony.
Out of the deep uprising, out from the ether sent,
The song of the destined ages thrilled through the firmament.

So the rivers among the valleys, the murmur of wind-swept hill,
The seas and the bird-thrilled woodlands utter their voices still:
Songs of stars and of waters, echoes of vale and shore—
The voice of primeval nature praising Him evermore.

And the instruments men have fashioned since time and the world were young,
With gifted fingers giving the metal and wood a tongue,
With the human voice translating the soul's wild joy and pain,
Have swelled the undying paean, have raised the immortal strain!

The Sinner's Balance Account.

John Harvey Treat, who has given largely to Harvard College library, and whose "Villa de St. Prie," on Lake Cupsuptic, in Maine, is the show place of the Rangeley region, was formerly in business in Lawrence, Mass.

One of the firm's customers, a painter, had contracted a debt which ran along for a year or more without any signs of being liquidated. Several dunning letters failed to bring about a settlement. One day while glancing over the religious notices in a local paper Mr. Treat saw something which gave him an inspiration, whereupon he sat down and wrote the following missive to the debtor:

"Mr. ——: My Dear Sir—I see in the local press that you are to deliver an address on Friday evening before the Y. M. C. A., on 'The Sinner's Balanced Account.' I inclose your's, as yet unbalanced, and trust that I may have the pleasure of attending your lecture. Yours truly."

A check came by the next mail.

Her Astral Spouse.

An unmarried woman of my acquaintance was drawing dangerously near the threshold of that age where the unmated must abandon every matrimonial hope.

Belonging as she did to that large contingent of women to whom marriage represents the only possible career, her anxiety, as she saw her chances of achieving it dwindling to the vanishing point, became keen, and in her distress she began to seek for comforting reassurances among that fraternity who, for a suitable consideration, obligingly offer to reveal the secrets of the future.

In the course of an interview with one of these "wise women" she was told: "My dear, you already are married on the astral plane, and it is your astral husband who is keeping the earth men away from you."

"Oh," cried the ungrateful bride, "please tell him not to!"—"Sunday Magazine."

Acid from Sweets.

That was a very fair retort of a pretty girl annoyed by the impertinence of a conceited beau at a wedding party.

"Do you know what I was thinking of all the time during the ceremony" he asked.

"No, sir; how should I?"

"Why, I was blessing my stars I was not the bridegroom."

"And I have no doubt the bride was doing the same thing," said the girl, and left him to think it over again.—Chicago Journal.

Didn't Mind.

"I suppose, Jerry," said the eminent statesman, looking through his pocketbook for a new dollar bill, "like a lot of other folks nowadays, you would rather have clean money?"

"Oh, that's all right, Senator," said the cabman, "I don't care how you made your money."

CHOPPING A MAN DOWN

There is nothing that so cheers the heart of the lumberman as to play a practical joke on one whom he calls a "greenhorn," or, in other words, any one unused to the ways of a lumber camp. One of the hardest and most dangerous, although it is the most admired, writes Charles G. D. Roberts in "Around the Campfire," is that known as "chopping him down."

This means, in a word, that the stranger in camp is invited to climb a tall tree to take observations or enjoy a remarkable view. No sooner has he reached the top, than two or three vigorous axmen attack the tree at its base. Long before he can reach the ground the tree begins to topple. As a general rule the heavy branches so break the fall of the tree that the victim finds himself uninjured. There are cases, however, where men have been crippled for life.

Mr. Roberts gives an experience of his own which did not come out exactly as the lumberman expected. He had climbed into a magnificent pine tree one day. No sooner was he two-thirds up the tree than the lumbermen set to work to "chop him down."

"I thanked them for their attention," he writes, "and climbed a few feet farther up to secure a position which I saw would be a safe one for me when the tree should fall. As I did so, I perceived, with a gasp a[t] that I was not alone in th[e] "There, not ten feet [be]low me, stretched at full length a[lo]ng a l[im] was a huge panther. Student Life at Oxford

Among the Rhodes scholars at Oxford is W. E. Schutt, an American, who has written of some of the experiences he and the other Americans had. The first night, to their surprise, two or three men entered their rooms in an absolutely informal and abrupt manner. The visitors took with great calmness the chairs the Americans had vacated, asked for cigarettes or tea and made themselves at home. Then they requested Mr. Schutt and his friends to show up at the football grounds for practice the following afternoon. After they had gone more men appeared and asked them to appear at the college barge, next day ready to row. The devotion to sport and the round of social engagements suggested to the Americans that but little work was done at Oxford. "We soon learned, however," Mr. Schutt writes, "that although it was not required nor even evident, there was work done, and lots of it; that if we took honors, as we expected to do, idleness on our part at the beginning of the course meant hopeless entanglement at the end and that we must work during vacations as well as term time.

"In connection with dinner [it] is," he continues, "an interesting [cus]tom. This is the 'scout.' If a [man] comes in late, makes a stain [on] marks on the food or commits [any] gaucherie the cry of 'scout' is [raised]. Thereupon he appeals his case [by] ing to the dons. If they agree [that] the sconce is just the guilty man [must] drink a quart of small beer without [taking] breath. If he succeeds he is [excused]. If he fails he must provide beer [for] his table. If, however, the sconce [is] not justifiable in the eyes of the [dons] the prosecutor must pay the [penalty].

"We are all of the opinion that [we] can get no more really practical [and] knowledge here than at home, [probably] not so much that will be of [any] service in breadwinning. Here, [however], we can get at any one of [the] great universities of the world [the] the combination of social and [intel]lectual training, the easy, informal [in]tercourse with men old and young, [the] education and thorough good breeding [that] can be found nowhere as at Oxford.

My Heart and I

Enough! we're tired, my heart and I.
We sit beside the headstone thus,
And wish that name were carved for us.
The moss reprints more tenderly
The hard types of the mason's knife,
As heaven's sweet life renews earth's life
With which we're tired, my heart and I.

You see we're tired, my heart and I.
We dealt with books, we trusted men,
And in our own blood drenched the pen.
As if such colors could not fly.
We walked too straight for fortune's end,
We loved too true to keep a friend;
At last we're tired, my heart and I.

How tired we feel, my heart and I!
We seem of no use in the world;
Our fancies hang gray and uncurled
About men's eyes indifferently;
Our voice which thrilled you so, will let
You sleep; our tears are only wet;
What do we here, my heart and I?

So tired, so tired, my heart and I!
It was not thus in that old time
When Ralph sat with me 'neath the lime
To watch the sunset from the sky.
"Dear love, you're looking tired," he said;
I, smiling at him, shook my head:
'Tis now we're tired, my heart and I.

So tired, so tired, my heart and I!
Though now none takes me on his knee
To fold me close and kiss me warm
Till each quick breath end in a sigh
Of happy languor. Now, alone
We lean upon this graveyard stone
Uncheered, unkissed, my heart and I.

Tired out we are, my heart and I.
Suppose the world brought diadems
To tempt us, crusted with loose gems
Of powers and pleasures? Let it try.
We scarcely care to look at even
A pretty child, or God's blue heaven.
We feel so tired, my heart and I.

Yet who complains? My heart and I,
In this abundant earth no doubt
Is little room for things worn out.
Disdain them, break them, throw them
by!
And if before the days grow rank
We once were loved, used well (we thank
I think, we've fared, my heart and I.

Watch Figures on Bill

"There is a rule regarding the numbering of United States currency," said a bank teller, "which if known and followed by the outside world might often be the means of detecting counterfeit money. The rule applies only to United States currency, mind you, and not to national bank notes.

"The government prints its bills in series of 4, so that every piece of paper money turned out by the United States bears one of these check letters, A, B, C or D. One of these letters is always found in two places on a United States bill—in the upper left hand corner and in the lower right hand corner. The placing of the letter on the bill is not determined by chance, but by an infallible rule determined by the number of the bill. The rule is to divide the last two figures on the note by four. Should the remainder be one, the check letter must be 'A.' Should it be two the [letter] letter is 'B;' three, the check letter [is] 'C,' and nothing the letter is 'D.'

"For example, I have before me a $5 silver certificate. Its number is 94,179,126. The terminal number is 26. Divide this by 4, and we have [remainder] with 2 over. The check letter is B. Here is a 'Buffalo' note the terminal number of which is 68. Divide by 4 and we have 17 even. The check letter is D. There is a good counterfeit with 83 as its terminal. We have only dividing it by 4, 20 with 3 over. That is the check letter.

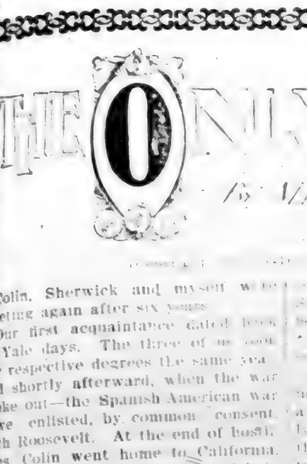
"Should this rule of 4 fail to work on any United States currency note you may bet all you have that the money is bad. Sometimes counterfeit bills are right as to the check letters, but a great many are not. But the rule of 4 works the [other] way. A note may be bad, but if it doesn't [obey] rule of 4 it is bad."—Kansas City Times.

Eagles Desert Their Young

William Lovell Finley writes in The Country Calendar, the first issue of the new outdoor monthly:

"'Did the old eagle show fight?' is the first query put by the casual listener. I always see a trace of disappointment sweep over his countenance when he hears the answer. The moment you speak of climbing to an eagle's aery, the average man gets an idea of a harrowing tale of the photographer hanging to the edge of a cliff or the top of a tree, with the old eagles clawing out pound chunks at every swoop. Few eagles possess the mad ferocity pictured and magnified by sensational story-tellers. When we first scrambled over boulders of the canon up toward the nest, I saw the [mother] slip quietly from her eggs and [sail] out over the mountain top. We strapped on the climbers to [ascend] the tree, I had one eye open for trouble. But each time we visited [the] spot the parents silently disappeared and stayed away as long as we [chose] to hold possession. They kept a careful eye, however, from the [safe] tance overhead. For a noble bird the eagle, this abandoning of the [eggs] and young seemed to [be a] first. Perhaps the long years of persecution have taught him [caution]. The first rule of self-preservation this pair seemed to be to keep [a] mile distant from the animal that fights with neither beak nor claw.

My Gar



Colin, Sherwick and myself [met] meeting again after six years. Our first acquaintance dated [back] Yale days. The three of us [took] our respective degrees the same year and shortly afterward, when the war [with] broke out—the Spanish American war—we enlisted, by common consent, with Roosevelt. At the end of hostilities, Colin went home to California, Sherwick struck a government job in Porto Rico, and I made an ecstatic dash for my old quarters in New York. As luck would have it, we all came out without a scratch.

Colin was East on some legal business, and Sherwick, having thrown up his position in the West Indies, had come to New York on a prospecting tour.

I ran across them at the postoffice, and nothing would do but they must come home to luncheon with me. Colin was one of those distinctly amiable men you meet with occasionally—a fellow perfectly willing to make himself agreeable whatever the circumstances, situation or company. He went into instant raptures over my house, my servants, my pictures—everything. I told him just to wait until he saw my wife. Sherwick was less demonstrative, but I could see that he was impressed.

By the time the salad was served our conversation had somehow veered around from college days and Santiago nights, to the all-potent subject of matrimony. For some reason, the topic seemed to affect Colin unpleasantly. Once or twice, he opened his lips as though to speak, then closed them again—apparently reconsidering.

"Out with it!" I insisted, seeing that he had something to relate, and needed just a little encouragement. Sherwick, too, bent his forces upon him, and together we listened to his story.

"She was the only one in the world to me," he went on to say, waiving preliminaries, "and like a dem fool I didn't have the common sense and decency to keep her love when I had it. I offended her, stupid jackass that I was, and would not apologize—not even when she threw the chance at my head. One thing led to another, till finally there wasn't anything left for her to do but let me go. And she did, notwithstanding the fact that she never loved anyone but me—and never would care for anyone again. Such was the substance of her last words to me. How well I remember them, and her, as she spoke them: 'You have been the One Man,' she said, her sweet lips quivering, her pearless eyes drowned in tears, 'but you have broken my heart, and I shall never be the same again. Good-bye. I have made my arrangements. Next week I enter the convent.' I did not see her again," he finished sadly.

Sherwick and I exchanged [glances].

Went into raptures over my pictures, [full] of compassion for our unhappy friend, seeing that he was deeply and terribly in earnest.

"So that is why you are a bachelor," I observed gravely. "Sherwick?" I turned to him interrogatively. "It's up to you."

Sherwick cleared his throat, flushed and tried to change the subject. Colin gave him a reproachful stare. "You'll have to do it," he said. "It's not fair for you to back out, you know. Remember the compact." He made a

When Ruth sat with me 'neath the tree
To watch the sunset from the sky,
Dear love, you're looking tired," he said.
I confessed at him, shook my head,
Knew we both tired my heart and I.

So tired, so tired my heart and I!
Though now none takes me on his arm
To say he loves and kiss me warm
Till each quick breath end in a sigh
Full easily made happy by
A book, a bird, a beast, a bloom;
Or footfall on the doorway's sill,
Of one expected long and still,
Or dear one coming through the door.
My heart, my heart, or I mistake,
Shall leap for joy, not break.

Or shall we only hear the knell
Of our own hearts re-echoed well
From hollow names this earth accords
To all its darlings, will or nills?
In one sense, one, they must be rife
With echoes from the out-of-doors,
Echoes of footsteps, voices, shots,
Echoes of doors and doors and doors
Locked, bolted, barred with gates and guns
That sunder us from one another.
Mine, mine—no sweet my heart and I
Shall make for us a lullaby.

Come back, come back, I cry in vain.
Come back, come back, come back again.
Shall we look up with sun in our eyes
To see our dead beside the throne
Of Love made perfect in the skies?
Their beauty shall be all their own,
But we shall see them as we see
Sun, moon and stars, the flowers and trees.
We shall but see the shining hem
Of garments pass big cloudy knees
Of Cherubim.
Shall we be blind then in our pride?
Have we no eyes for gifts in kind?
Is earth too poor to give us save
A little dust to fill a grave?
Our heart hath throbbed itself to rest,
Our tears are wept, our pulse is still.

Come back, come back, we cry in vain.
Come back, come back, come back again.
Look up with sun in your eyes,
Look up and see the heavens rent
By opening gates and rushing wings
Whose motion shakes the firmament
With move of many things.
Look up and see your dead, look up and see Us sitting at the feet of Him who made us meet
To be partakers of His purity,
Where our reward is His.
Look up and see us throned the skies between
Where thousand angels minister and serve,
Where Seraphim and Cherubim
Sing hymns unceasingly,
Look up and see us crowned with Love, our dear,
Look up and see us raise our song to greet
Your coming with all welcome here.
Look up, look up, look up and see
Your heart and I.

My Garden

There is a garden in my soul,
A garden where I may not go,
Where all day the sun shines fair
And only softest zephyrs blow.

The winding pathways cross the turf
Through sunshine to the restful shade,
Under the low arched chestnut trees
And elms, that throng the quiet glade.

Out in the noisy street I fare,
With all its dust and hideous cries,
Lonely, and slaving at my task
As long as daylight fills the skies.

But sometimes for an hour I steal
And by the gate, beneath the stars,
I lean and long and look within,
And cool my forehead on the bars.

ONLY ONE

By NELLIE CRAVEY GILMORE

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Colin Sherwick and myself were ... after six years.

Our ... acquaintance dated back ... The three of us took ... degrees the same year, ... and shortly afterward, when the war ... broke out with Spanish-American war ... we enlisted, by common consent, ... with Roosevelt. At the end of hostilities Colin went home to California, Sherwick took a government job in Porto Rico, and I made an ecstatic dash for my old quarters in New York. As luck would have it, we all came out without a scratch.

Colin was East on some legal business and Sherwick, having thrown up his position in the West Indies, had come to New York on a prospecting tour.

I ran across them at the postoffice, and nothing would do but they must come home to luncheon with me. Colin was one of those distinctly amiable men you meet with occasionally—a fellow perfectly willing to make himself agreeable whatever the circumstances, situation or company. He went into instant raptures over my house, my servants, my pictures—everything. I told him just to wait until he saw my wife. Sherwick was less demonstrative, but I could see that he was impressed.

By the time the salad was served our conversation had somehow veered round from college days and Santiago nights to the all-potent subject of matrimony. For some reason, the topic seemed to affect Colin unpleasantly. Once or twice, he opened his lips as though to speak, then closed them again—apparently reconsidering.

"Out with it!" I insisted, seeing he had something to relate, and needed a little encouragement. Sherwick, too, bent his forces upon him, and together we listened to his story.

"She was the only one in the world for me," he went on to say, waiving preliminaries, "and like a dem fool, I ... the common sense and ... keep her love when I had ... her, stupid jackass that ... would not apologize—not even when she threw the chance at ... One thing led to another, ... wasn't anything left ... but let me go. And she ... standing the fact that ... loved anyone but me—... would care for anyone ... was the substance of ... to me. How well I ... and her, as she ... You have been the ... said, her sweet lips ... peerless eyes drowned ... have broken my ... never be the same ... I have made my ... "After all, there's not much to be said that's new. It's the same old story of a poor man's love and a rich man's money; a weak daughter and a stern father. We were—practically—engaged to be married, although there had not been any actual betrothal. You know how those things are. When he found it out, he rushed her off here, to New York, and despite the fact that I wrote her at least a dozen letters, there was never the shadow of a response. Six months later I learned of her marriage to a wealthy stock broker's son. It was her father's doing—every bit of it. He never had any use for me, and knowing that his daughter had irrevocably given her heart to me, was determined to end things between us with as little delay as possible."

She appeared.

Colin stretched an involuntary hand across the table and grasped that of our friend in a sympathetic pressure. "The wonder is that you've stood it," he said.

The waiter was clearing away the dishes, and I fancied I heard a suppressed groan from Sherwick. "It was hard enough on me," he said bitterly, "but think of the girl's position. Good Lord, think of the girl!"

We were a long time silent after that, sipping our benedictine and puffing purple towers of smoke ceilingward.

Presently Colin pulled out his watch.

"Oh, you mustn't think of leaving," I interposed briskly, "till you've met my wife. She'll be in any minute now. I want both of you to know her. I want her to know you!" I thought proudly of my peerless Dolores, wondering inwardly what my two friends would say then! Unutterably thankful that there had been no other for her—nor me; that we were, indeed, the Only Ones!

"We simply worship the air each other breathes," I went on fervently, "the things each other looks at——"

The musical swish of trailing silk cut in on my rhapsody, and the next instant she appeared, muffled up in furs to the aristocratic tips of her ears—priceless furs my doting old father, the Wall street veteran, had given her.

She came toward us with that perfect rhythmic grace that was a part of her, a hand outstretched to each of them as they rose to receive my introduction. On her lips was the adorable smile born of their matchlessness.

And then something very funny happened. My wife commenced to laugh in a very much amused fashion, while Colin and Sherwick outdid one another blushing. Dolores was the first to collect herself. "To think that we are old friends after all," she rippled. "I thought there was something familiar about your names when Dick told me you were here, although I couldn't exactly place you! But I'm delighted you're in New York, and I hope you are going to stay a long time—long enough for us to show you the best sort of a time and get better acquainted. All Dick's friends are mine," she added, with a quick glance in my direction. "Aren't they?" I nodded without speaking. When she looks at me that way, I shall always feel my heart go faster.

After a little desultory conversation, Colin and Sherwick took their departure, promising to call again on the following day.

When the door had closed behind them, I caught Dolores and pulled her down on my knee. "You made a great impression, old girl," I said, pinching the pink lobe of her ear. "I never saw Colin at such a loss for words in my life, and as for Sherwick——" I shook my head.

Dolores sealed my lips with one of her tiny, fleeting kisses. "They are both just lovely," she said, "and we must do everything—fix up all sorts of jolly larks and things; box parties—then there's the horse show too." She took me by the cheeks and looked down into my eyes with one of her glances. My arms went suddenly about her, and in the instant of transport that followed, how intense, how infinite was my joy that there had been no other for me—for her!

Dolores went to the matinee and I to my club. The next morning we sent notes to Colin and Sherwick, only to learn that both of them had been called away quite unexpectedly. This was a singular coincidence, and neither of us could understand it. But what seemed a still more singular coincidence—at least to me—was that we received invitations to the weddings of both within the year.

REWARD NOT GREAT ENOUGH.

Drummer Was a Real Hero, But for Once Only.

"Yes, the papers referred to me as a hero," said the drummer on crutches, "and I suppose I was and am one, but I don't care to go through it again. The cash reward is too small."

"So you were a hero for cash?" was asked.

"Well, I didn't set out to be, but it came to that. I was loafing around a town in Illinois when a horse ran away with two women. He was making for an open sewer when I jumped in and grabbed him and was dragged over a brick pile and through the mud and had a leg broken and a shoulder dislocated. I saved the women, one of whom was young, rich and handsome, and who ought to have been grateful and married me, but who visited me in the hospital and looked down upon my bed of pain to say:

"'Poor fellow! If it hadn't been for you we should surely have been killed and I want you to know how thankful we are and how much we admire your action.'

"And then what happened?" was asked, as the drummer seemed to have got through.

"And then she left a 50-cent piece on the pillow and walked out and I don't suppose I shall ever see her again in my life!"

World Full of Stoten Bottles.

Yet the business world is full of men who "stand still." It is full of men who have given up the struggle for success long before it really began. The road ahead looked hard, so they sat down where they were, and have remained there. Others have not "bothered" to improve themselves with a view to self advancement. Their duties are easy and they make money enough to live comfortably. Why should they trouble about the future?

But the most unfortunate of them all is the man who was "going to do something in a while." He is the most numerous, also of the men who are in a rut. Always he is going to strike out after something better than he has; always the future holds promises to him. But these promises, he soon discovers, are only valid to the man who acts.—Chicago Tribune.

Pussy Willows.

A group of shining brown buds, on a leafless tree,
Sway, little brown buds, sway.
Do not heed the north wind, nor the teasing breeze—
They will pass with dying day.

A myriad of white heads peeping from the buds—
Peep, little white heads, peep.
A gentle rain is falling—open wide your hearts
And forth from your cradles creep.

The willow trees a'glisten, with dancing pussies gay—
Yes, little pussies—glisten.
The world begins to sparkle with the glow of early Spring—
To the music of her voice, dears,—listen.

A million little pussies in coats of silver fur,
Up in the branches swinging.
The naughty sun is peeping—ah—now he's stole a kiss—
And the pussy willows all are singing.
—Agnes Lockhart Hughes, in Recreation.

No New-fangled Disease for Her.

A certain widow who lives in New York State is very desirous of having her Congressman use his influence in securing a pension for her.

The member received a letter from this constituent several days ago again calling attention to the fact that she wants recognition. At the end of the letter there was this indignant paragraph:

"I want you to know that my husband died of regular, old-fashioned consumption, contracted in the service. There is somebody writing to the Pension Office trying to keep me from getting the pension, who says John died of tuberculosis."

Undertaker Talk.

Winston Churchill, the novelist, was talking about awkward and unusual forms of expression.

"In Concord, the other day," he said, "I heard an undertaker's speech that seemed to me extremely awkward and unusual.

"It was at a funeral, a funeral in a private house, and the officiating clergyman was just about to begin his address, when the undertaker tiptoed up to him, and said in a hoarse whisper:

"'Excuse me, doctor, but the corpse's brother wishes to speak to you.'"

TASTE TELLS ONE LITTLE.

Unassisted by Sense of Smell, Onions and Potatoes Are Alike.

"Do you really think that you can distinguish the tastes of potatoes and onions?" was the unusual question that Prof. Burtis Burr Breese asked his psychology class at the University of Cincinnati the other morning.

"I have yet to see the individual who could tell them apart when they were reduced to the same consistency and when the sense of taste only was used."

At this point Miss Luella Latta, a member of the class, showed some evidences of doubting, and the professor asked her if she would not exhibit to the class exactly how discriminating her sense of taste was.

He explained that he did not have the potatoes and onions on hand, but that he had something far more decided in its taste and quite as familiar to most people.

Then Miss Latta was asked to step up to the rostrum and when she was seated Prof. Breese told her that she must not breathe through her nose—that is, she must rely altogether on the taste and that he was certain she would be unable to distinguish the three things that he then proceeded to give her separately.

She failed, quite as the professor predicted, and he then told the class that Miss Latta had not been able to tell wintergreen from peppermint or peppermint from cloves.

"In fact," he said, "none of you can tell the difference simply by the sense of taste. The taste is aided greatly by the sense of smell. All you really taste is sweet and sour, salt and bitter."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

LIFTS MEN OUT OF RUTS.

Merchant's System Gets Work from His Employes.

A well known employer, whose force is one of the largest in the country, has a system of "weeding out dead timber" among his employes. This man is a philanthropist. He helps more men to find themselves, possibly, than any dozen training schools. His system is philanthropy elevated to the highest plane. When he notices that a man begins to show signs that he is falling into a rut at one kind of work he promptly changes him to some other kind of employment. If there also his disposition is to become mechanical in his work, he is shifted again. Two or three changes will either put him in a place where he can expend his energy to the best advantage of himself and the house, or show decisively that his sphere of activity, if he has any, is somewhere else. Then he is discharged.

"I absolutely will not have men in my employe who fall into a rut," is the way this employer puts it. "I don't want machines in my office. I want men who know enough to improve themselves as the years go on, and who are progressive enough to be just a little ahead of their jobs, so that if I need a man to fill the position 'just ahead' I will have a man to take and promote. The man who stands still is a detriment to any business."

Present of Gold and Silver Coffin.

The anniversary of Pir Bismillah Shah, near Victoria Terminus, Bombay, having taken place recently, Mr. Haridas Valji, who has keen regard and great esteem for the said Pir, has presented to the Durgha of this Pir a coffin made of gold and silver, with some epitaphs engraved on it, and valued at 3,000 rupees. The coffin is indeed beautifully made and the engravings in gold have added much to its high workmanship.

The coffin was brought out of the residence of Maulvi Sayed Zaminul Abedin Rafai and Mutavallees of the Durgha at Jail Road at about 7 a. m., to take it to the Durgha at Victoria Terminus. The procession left for the Durgha at 8 a. m. with the recitation of Maulud. While passing through the Mussulman thoroughfares flowers were thrown on the bier by the Mussulmen. The procession reached the Durgha at 9:30 a. m., where after due ceremony the coffin was placed. After distributing sweetmeats the procession dispersed. Distribution of flowers and sweetmeats and a vote of thanks to Mr. Haridas and those present concluded the meeting.—Bombay Cosmopolitan Review.

Beyond.

Never a word is said,
But it troubles in the air,
And the truant voice has sped
To vibrate everywhere;
And perhaps far off in eternal years
The echo may ring upon our ears.

Never are kinds acts done,
To wipe the weeping eyes,
But, like flashes of the sun,
They signal to the skies;
And up above the angels read
How we have helped the sorer need.

Never a day is given
But it tones the after-years,
And it carries up to Heaven
Its sunshine or its tears;
While the to-morrows stand and wait
The silent mutes by the outer gait.

There is no end to the sky,
And the stars are everywhere;
And time it eternity,
And here is over there;
For the common deeds of the common day
Are ringing the bells in the far away.
—Henry Burton.

He Didn't Smoke.

Several of the villagers were seated around the stove in the general store at Selkirk yesterday afternoon when Coroner Ray dropped in on his way back from a call just below the village. The Coroner invited all hands to have a good cigar and only one of those present failed to respond.

"Don't you smoke?" queried the Coroner.

"I reckon not," was the reply.

"Well, have something else," said the Coroner.

"Very well," said the tardy one, looking around, "give me two loaves of bread."—Albany Journal

NO JOY IN FORGETFULNESS

There was once a poor woman whose life had been such a bitter one that she wanted her memory taken away. He to whom she had given the love of her young heart had not fulfilled the promises of his youth; his weaknesses had developed into crimes, so that he was compelled to flee for his life; and the sons and daughters she had borne and brought up had repaid her care and kindness with neglect and abuse, and at last, one by one, had wandered far from her fireside. So the heart of the poor woman was broken, and she passed, a sad and desolate soul, down the dark valley of the shadow of death. She came at last to the dim river, and asked the boatman to take her over.

"This is the river of forgetfulness," said the boatman. "Will you stop and drink before you cross?"

The woman's face brightened and her voice was full of eager longing. "Yes," she said, "I will drink; I will forget then that my hopes have failed."

"You will forget that you ever hoped," replied the boatman.

The woman drew back; then she bent forward once more. "I will forget that I came to hate him so," she said

"You will forget that you ever loved him," came the response.

The words seemed to stir a faraway memory. There was a long pause. Then the woman leaned forward to drink.

"I will forget that my little ones left my arms. I will forget how I wept for them in the darkness when they did not return at night. I will forget that they lost the right path and wandered away, never to return to me."

"Yes," said the boatman, "you will forget that you ever pressed them to your bosom, forget that you ever felt the tiny fingers wandering caressingly over your face. You will forget the visions you saw, the fond hopes you cherished as you used to rock them to sleep at night."

The woman was not stooping by the river now; she had raised herself and was walking toward the boat.

"You may row me across," she said, "I shall not drink of the waters of forgetfulness."

Have you ever said, dear reader, in a moment of despair, "there is nothing in all my past to be thankful for?" Never say it again. Have you ever wished that you might drink of the waters of forgetfulness? Never wish it again.—A. B. Curtis.

Much Learned Through War

War is abhorrent, but it has at least one innocent use, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. It is an efficient educator in geography. War teaches this branch of education with more interest and thoroughness than the most accomplished professor in his classroom and, on the other hand, it is urged by many eminent military men that an accurate knowledge of geography is necessary for successful warfare.

The art of war and geography are in intimate association. The latter is called "the handmaid of tactics and strategy." So important is the relation of geographical education to war that the London Times has opened its columns to the discussion of the subject. One of its correspondents, in true British fashion, says that "to think imperially with any profit we must think geographically."

The technical importance of geographical knowledge in war and the importance of "thinking imperially" may not appeal to the American reader, but there can be no question as to the educational value of the dispatches and accompanying explanations chronicling the movements of armies on the war scene and describing more or less minutely regions and peoples of which the reader has had very limited and imperfect knowledge.

Recalling conflicts within easy recollection, the South African and the Spanish-American wars were great educators. No one who followed these wars closely, as gazetted by the newspapers, could have failed to learn much respecting Africa, Spain, Cuba, the Philippines and Porto Rico of which he was previously ignorant. The pending titanic struggle in Asia has produced a deluge of valuable information, geographical, political, social, respecting Russia, Japan and Manchuria, quite apart from the intensely dramatic features of the war.

The school books are always years behind that universal school master, the live newspaper. The mass of information and permanently useful intelligence presented in the voluminous war correspondence is one of the astonishing evidences of modern progress and of the development of the newspaper's function as a popular educator. The daily newspaper, faithful to its trust, is the world's best textbook in many lines.

Benefit in Short "Naps"

The majority of people take a meal of some kind between the hours of 12 and 2 daily, says the London Chronicle. With a number of persons this meal assumes the form of a substantial dinner, while with others it amounts to nothing more than a light luncheon. In either case, however, the repast requires to be digested, and this necessitates some modification of the activities of the brain, since neither that organ nor those concerned in the processes of digestion are capable of good work when an attempt is made to put forth their energies simultaneously.

A tendency to drowsiness, confusion of thought and inability to make any great mental effort are among the results of a diminished cerebral circulation. These feelings are, therefore, experienced by most persons after a meal, and they are the more pronounced in proportion to the greater amount of digestive energy expended.

Since brain work of good quality cannot be produced while the processes of digestion are in active operation, it is wise not to attempt it. It is never prudent to thwart the beneficent intentions of nature. Many persons struggle against the mental and physical lethargy that accompanies the earlier stages of the digestive act, apparently under the delusion that all time given to the important business of building up and repairing by their tissues is time wasted. So far from this being the case a well spent postprandial interval tends to the preservation and prolongation of life. If a tendency to drowsiness is felt sleep should be allowed to prevail, for the proverbial "forty winks" is justified of science. A ten or fifteen minutes' nap after a meal curiously enough will enable many a brainworker to arise refreshed who might have spent an hour or two in a vain and mentally confused struggle against the "drowsy god."

The Chosen Ones

That fellowship of genius, unconstrained
Of place or riches; nor its precincts gained
Of loud alarum; for a brazen gate
Thick-metaled, bids the wanderer await
Until the sacred password is approved
By Him who loveth art for art beloved.

Nor ever ringeth false upon His ear
That magic word that bids the gate swing clear.
The moated ditches close, the drawbridge fall.
The sentinels move harmless on the wall.
The feast be spread, the laureled wreath be wove.
For him who bears the signet-ring of Love.

Nor any soul discordant at the feast.
Not any greatest one or any least,
But all of common stature, having sipped
The cup whose golden sides have dripped and dripped
With the rare wine of Song, whose vineyards lie
Where the clear blue of the Parnassian sky
Dips down to earth to lift the souls of men
That fell from Heaven back to Heaven again.

And in that din and clamor I await
The message that He sends who guards the gate.
To bid me come within or bid me lay
My dreams aside and diligently stray
By field and stream and under the blue sky,
Seeking the truth afar with eager eye.

Through many a sleepless night and weary day
To serve with patience, suffer, learn, and pray.
Until I gain the Secret, and the gate
Shall be flung wide and those great souls await
To welcome me, who, like me, unafraid,
Untiring, patient, at the altar laid
Their offerings once and once and once again,
And once a hundred times, and more; 'till then
They learned that Patience was the word that bade
The gate swing wide and waiting souls be glad!
—New York Times.

When Silence Is Golden

The best of us talk too much. "The essence of power is reserve," said a man who knew.

Many a reputation has been built on silence. Many a one is spoiled through rushing prematurely and volubly into speech.

It is safe to be silent when your words would wound. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend," says the old proverb, but one wants to be mighty sure one's friend needs the wounding and that we are qualified to administer it.

Keep still when your words will discourage. It is infinitely better to be dumb forever than to make one fellow-being less able to cope with life.

Keep still when your words will incite to anger or discomfort. An incredible amount of breath is used in the evil practice of trying to make our friends dislike their friends.

Never speak when what you have to say is merely for the purpose of exalting yourself.

Shut your lips with a key when you are inspired to babble incontinently of yourself—your ailments, accomplishments, relations, loves, hatreds, hopes and desires. It is only to the choice, rare friend that one may speak of these things without becoming a fool.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A GRAND OPPORTUNITY.

Is now given you to win a valuable prize. The terms are simple and easily understood. You pay $1 and get THE UNION, your BEST county paper, and "Madame" (which is the recognized organ of the WOMEN of America) for six months with one chance for a successful count. Or you pay $2.00 and get the same papers for a WHOLE year with THREE chances at the count. Any of our subscribers who are now paid in advance can come in and have their new subscription credited to them on our books. Don't delay, but send in your money and count. This golden opportunity only lasts until July 1st. The financial responsibility is shown by the reference to any bank in Indianapolis, Ind. tf

THIS IS ONE.

The following article from the Yellow Jacket hits in this county, particularly at the postoffice in Clanton. We again ask our subscribers to let us know AT ONCE when they don't receive THE UNION or any of the papers that they have subscribed for in connection with it:

"There are certain sections of the country where it seems impossible to have the Yellow Jacket delivered to our subscribers. We are in receipt of letters every day from parties saying that they only get a Yellow Jacket about every third or fourth issue. There should be no such trouble as this. The Y. J. is mailed promptly each issue to every subscriber on our list. Such irregularities as are reported to us is downright cussedness on the part of some one or ones who handle the mail. We have called the attention of the P. O. inspectors to some of these cases and we expect to go for others just as fast as we can locate the trouble."

THAT LOST HAT.

Verbena, June 10, '05.

To the Union:

My hat has been returned by Mr. W. H. Killingsworth, of Jemison, as per his letter of 9th inst. I freely accept all he says as true, holding him blameless in the premises.

Yours truly,
F. A. GULLEDGE.

So Mr. Gulledge has got his hat back, but Mr. Killingsworth tells us that the hat that belonged to him (Mr. K.) was a brand new one. Now the banner said that the hat left in the place of Mr. Gulledge's was an "old greasy one." How do you reconcile these two statements, or is it just the banner man's usual way? The banner said last week that an examiner was at work on the county's books by petition of "well known citizens," that sounds like some of its campaign statements. A state examiner spent one day here examining the local bank, and no doubt there will be an overhauling of the county's accounts in the near future, but not by petition of any "well known citizens" in the banner ring. They don't want it.

CORRESPONDENCE.

We've been mighty busy this week on other matters, and some letters lay over which will be published next week.

ROCKY MOUNT.

Children's day exercises were a grand success from start to finish. The music was the best ever heard at this place. Among the many beautiful pieces given by the class was the "Beautiful Golden Gate" anthem, "Does Jesus care?" Prof. Durham with his matchless voice sang two beautiful solos, "The Dream of Home" and "Shall I Meet You Up There?" The young ladies who presided at the organ were Misses Cassie Northcutt, Nettie Matthews, Cora Green and Bertha Durham. Among the many young ladies that spoke so beautifully were Misses Pearl Mitchell, Emma Lowery, Laura Robinson, Myrtle Sims, Minnie Martin, Fay Matthews, Cassie Northcutt, Ida Collum, Maudie Northcutt, Lelia Collum, Bessie Mitchell and Maggie Martin and many others whose names we haven't space to mention. Among the boys who had nice recitations were Clifton Green, Luther Glass, Arnie Matthews, John Thames, Dewey Northcutt and many others. In the afternoon Prof. Durham sang a lesson in "Revival Special," after which everybody stood up and sang "When the Roll is Called Up Yonder," then after prayer by J. M. Glass everybody went home, wishing that "Children's Day" came once a month instead of once a year.

J. B. N.

NOTES.

We were there also and enjoyed the day very much. The church could not hold half the people who were there, but those who could not get in dispersed around the grove. The behavior of all was perfect and nothing occurred to mar any one's enjoyment of the day. There was a good and plentiful dinner provided for all. As to ourselves personally we acknowledge our indebtedness to Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Northcutt for their kind hospitality. Pastor Carroll was everywhere and to his vigorous personality backed up by his community, Rocky Mount will owe the reputation of being one of the most orderly gathering places in our county. We wished to publish the entire program, with the names of all participating, but failed to get it. We were especially struck with the general improvement in the singing over last year. The music was very good indeed. Thanking you all for a pleasant day, I'll try to be with you next year if Providence permits.

Farmers are getting along well with their crops. R. L. Barrett and wife visited friends near Kinchen last week. Mr. and Mrs. James Johnson had a visit from their son, who lives in Selma, last week. Will Cherry and wife spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moore. J. C. goes past my house every Sunday and up the path, and I'd like to know where he goes to. I think W. K. Gentry never lived in stock law or he wouldn't say he wanted it. What does he make of himself, a doctor or lawyer or school teacher? We've got more in those professions now than money to support them. If Mr. Gentry lived in Dallas and had to water 5 cows every morning before he went to school, and carry that water a good way, too, he wouldn't be so anxious for stock law.

BEAT NINE ITEMS.

A good rain and our farmers are all smiles. Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Scott were in Clanton Friday and Monday. Oscar Bean and wife visited Clanton Saturday. Harvey Collins made a business trip to Clanton Saturday. Major and Lum Hayes went to Elmore county Friday on a visit to relatives returning Monday, and report a nice time. Rev. S. Smitherman filled his appointment at New Salem Saturday and Sunday. Children's Day service will be held at Cedar Grove Saturday before the first Sunday in July. A large attendance is looked for. J. W. Hayes robbed his bees on Saturday morning, and invited a number of friends to dinner. They all had a sweet good time.

MARS HILL NEWS.

Farmers are getting on nicely with their work. J. N. Scott is on a visit to his brother, O. P., Jr., who resides near Parkwood. O. P. Scott, Sr., was at Rocky Mount Sunday and reports the best he ever saw. Jemison B. B. team played our team Saturday afternoon, score 18 to 6 in favor of Scotland. Prof. R. E. Sessions made a very satisfactory umpire. Our S. S. is progressing nicely with an average attendance of 50 scholars. A. J. Scott went to Montevallo Saturday and sold a bale of cotton for 7 7-8 cents.

BEAT 3.

Editor Union:

I notice a lot of letters in your paper concerning stock law, some of which seem to be founded on good reason and sound judgment, while others are to the contrary. I want to say to "Lonesome Joe" that I advocate stock law, and that I'm not asleep nor am I ready to move, and haven't had any bad dreams, but I believe that a man who saw (or says so) a cow carrying a tick to every ten hairs will have bad dreams if he hasn't had them already. "Lonesome Joe's" statement makes me think of the fellow who went squirrel hunting once and found (as he thought) a fox squirrel on a tree, and he shot at it, and shot at it until he'd fired 13 times; then he called a neighbor to come and help him kill the blamed squirrel, but when the neighbor came he couldn't see any squirrel, but discovered a tick on the hunter's eye brow. So I think that "Lonesome Joe" saw ticks that were not on the cow. Success to THE UNION and its many readers.

"A TO Z."

THORSBY LETTER.

The work on the new depot is nearly completed and the carpenter will leave this week, the painters following them. Thorsby will have one of the best depots between Birmingham and Montgomery. Work on O. Schive's new residence is progressing fastly. Gust. Berlin also has a new residence in progress of construction. A carload of peaches left Wednesday afternoon for Chicago markets. Thorsby is surely coming to the front. Rev. Hautilius arrived last Thursday from the north with his family and has taken hold of the college and dormitory and we will have a good school next year. Rev. Hautilius preached at the Swedish church last Sunday. Rev. Hinson preached at the public school building to a large audience last Sunday. Miss Ada Nelson arrived from the north last week on the excursion. Mr. Guy Gerald visited Clanton last Monday. The game of ball between Thorsby and Jemison last Saturday was again forfeited to Thorsby 9 to 0, Jemison failing to appear. Thorsby plays Hubbard next Saturday at Thorsby. The Thorsby Lawn Tennis Club would like to arrange for games with other town tennis clubs. The many friends and scholars of Miss Anna Howard will be pleased to know that she is enjoying her trip in the north. She left Chicago for Milwaukee last Tuesday. Amy and Camille Winslow arrived in Thorsby last Friday from Marion, Ala., and we welcome them back again. Flowers are in full bloom at the carnation farm. Come and see them, as they have nothing to do with the case. If you want to have a good time (piece) call on Olaf Schive, our new jeweler. The shower Tuesday was very refreshing, but frightened many, as balls of fire played pranks at the Thorsby Inn and at J. A. Williams' residence, but no damage was done. Miss Carrie Mims is visiting at Chas. Robinson's this week. Parties desiring peaches who come to Thorsby can obtain them at A. M. Johnson's store. Carl Langville has a new machine for setting tires on all kinds of vehicles without removing the tires from the felloes. We are to have a mail route from Thorsby running west to Forsman's brick yard and Honeycutt's mill. The route will be twenty-five miles long and the question is "Who is to get it?" J. A. Williams, who recently met with a serious runaway accident, is improving. He returned last Monday from Birmingham, where he has been visiting friends.

CHATTERBOX.

PLEASANT GROVE.

The grass is almost destroyed at last, and crops are needing rain. W. E. Thomas attended church at Macedonia Sunday. Albert Jones and Misses Tillie, Franklin and Ellen Thomas went to Rocky Mount Sunday. The young people were entertained at Albert Patterson's Saturday evening with ice cream, etc. Rev. R M. Honeycutt filled his appointment at Center Hill Saturday and Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Merchant, of Bibb county, are visiting their son, Frank, of this place.

"OMEGA."

BETH SALEM.

Editor Union:

Just a few words on the stock law question. I certainly think that it is the wrong thing for the renter, because he'd have to pay a dollar a month for pasture, and at the end of the year give half of his crop and about all he'd have left would be a wife and six children and a yearling tick cow. I don't want Bro. Jones and the rest of the stock law opponents to get abashed at our "big buddy," Mr. Gentry, I expect he never got an education because he grew too big for his pants, and his father couldn't control him and he went off to work for himself, and it took all he could do to make a living, much less an education. Mr. Observer, please give your name, don't be a coward and stand behind the door. Come out and let me take a peep at you. Success to THE UNION and its many readers.

Yours respectfully.
U. J. VINSON.

LOMAX.

Editor Union:

We have the grass about conquered. A. E. Teel and wife have a new comer. It's a girl. A. A. Jackson had the misfortune to lose a lot of cord wood by fire one day last week; loss estimated at $100.00. I don't like the principle "Lonesome Joe" advocates as to those that want stock law moving where it is. I think that those that are in favor of stock law have the same right to express themselves as do those that oppose it. No man should advocate such principles as "if you oppose what I advocate, you can go." This is the old principle of "rule or ruin." I have to see such in our paper. It is out of its place in THE UNION, which stands for FREE SPEECH, FREE BALLOT, MAJORITY RULE and "Equal rights to all, special privileges to none." If all the advocates of stock law were to leave this would be a most deserted community, as the advocates are in a large majority here. We don't want to see this county go backwards, but to see her press forward and enact such laws as would be best for the majority of her citizens, laws that would induce more good people to come here. We need more people to take more of the forest in cultivation, so let us be careful and not stand in the way of the upbuilding of our county.

"UNCLE NOAH."

See our $6,000.00 contest.

RANDOLPH.

Crops are needing rain. Mr. J. C. Harrison returned from Prattville Monday. Mrs. Alex Glasscock and Mrs. F. J. Fitts, of Hubbard, were in town last week en route to Ashby to visit V. L. Hubbard. Miss Evie Waldrup of Macedonia, was in town Saturday. Parties were here last week looking over Major Howison's land. They were originally from Sweden. They were contemplating settling a colony here. One man among them represented the would-be settlers among the Swedes. Asa Franklin, of Pleasant Grove, was a visitor Saturday. F. M. Merchant, of Eolin, passed through town Saturday. G. W. Gothard, of Mars Hill, was a welcome visitor Saturday. In thinking of our former commissioners we are pleased to note the spirit of true devotion to the people's interests manifested by ex-Commissioners Smitherman, Riggins and Pate. They were not office seekers, but honest men, and quietly withdrew from public service with honor. Such men the people can always depend on, and we are glad we have them. Success to the Union. We believe it is meeting with success.

Editor Union:

With your permission I will give your readers a brief account of my recent visit to Chattanooga, Tenn. I left here on June 2nd to attend a "Bible students' convention" held in that city. I spent the first night pleasantly in Birmingham, where I met two young men formerly of Chilton, John and Wiley Logan. Next day we arrived in Chattanooga and found a beautiful city full of life and bustle. The convention was held in the city auditorium, East Ninth street, under the auspices of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, of Allegheny, Pa. The attendance was good. Nearly all the Southern States were represented. Also representatives from St. Louis, Ohio, Washington, D. C., and Vermont. The chief speaker was Mr. C. T. Russell, editor of "Zion's Watch Tower" and author of "Millennial Dawn." It was the grandest meeting I ever saw. We were particularly impressed with one lady from St. Louis. She had formerly been a member of the Catholic church. The singing was good. A lady from San Antonio presided at the instrument. First day was prayer and praise services and preaching by Mr. W. E. Van Amburgh, then a discourse at night from the chart of the ages by B. H. Barton, of Philadelphia.

Sunday preaching by W. H. Hay in the afternoon preaching by C. T. Russell, subject "The Oath-Bound Covenant to Abraham and His Seed." At night preaching by C. T. Russell, subject "Begotten of the Holy Spirit."

Monday praise service and question meeting. In the afternoon at the Walnut St. Christian church discourse by C. T. Russell, subject "Baptism." Then 18 men and women were baptized by immersion. The convention was glorious indeed.

Seedless apples, wireless telegraphs, and now they have discovered a brainless man in New York! If someone will now invent an acheless cucumber the halcyon days of the good old summer time will be all that they are cracked up to be by the poets, declares the Pathfinder.

The desire to better the lot of the working classes has caused Count Manassi of Terni to offer a prize for the invention of a durable and cheap material which would serve as a substitute for leather in boots and shoes, says the Frankfort Schuhmarkt. The Count has opened a subscription.

A darning machine, one which will in ten minutes cover a hole that an industrious woman could hardly fill in an hour, is a recently invented piece of labor-saving apparatus. Needle-less to say, it will encounter no opposition from the American housewives' union.

Prof. J. W. Moore returned from Montgomery Friday, where he had been attending the educational gathering.

The Misses Rosalie and Gertie May Moore are visiting their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Thompson, who reside at Prattville.

"Buck" Arledge was in Clanton Saturday, accompanied by his wife and Miss Daly Miller. He says he has harvested his wheat and oats and is looking for a thresher.

J. R. Robinson was a pleasant visitor Saturday.

J. H. Ray and children, Zora May and David Horace, were in Clanton Monday.

J. T. Barrett and son were in town Monday.

G. W. Pate and son, Alonzo Melvin, were pleasant callers Monday.

Tax Collector Hubbard went to Montgomery Tuesday and made his final settlement with the State Auditor. Mr. Hubbard was the sixth to settle. That is he is ahead of 61 collectors in the state. Mighty good record he has, always in the front rank to pay up.

Dr. N. S. Johnston has been appointed local surgeon for the L. and N. railroad, which is a well merited compliment to his efficiency in his profession.

John W. Johnston, the Thorsby P. O robber, was sentenced to two years in the Atlanta penitentiary.

Attorney A. C. Smith spent several days in Sylacauga the past week. He says it's a live town, with plenty of public spirited men to help push the enterprise.

The County Commissioners adjourned Tuesday, after putting 8 days hard work on the taxes. See notice in this paper.

G. S. Gerald, of Thorsby, was in Clanton Monday and bought in a number of pieces of real estate that were sold for unpaid taxes by Collector Hubbard.

Judge L. H. Reynolds and Tax Collector Hubbard went to Montgomery Tuesday.

The "habeas corpus" proceedings in the Melton case came to a sudden end Friday, when the Def. Solicitor J. O. Middleton offered a motion to quash the writ on account of a number of defects in the petition. Judge Reynolds allowed Mr. Middleton's motion and dismissed the case.

PRINCE FREDERICK WEDS

...Son of German Emperor Takes Duchess Cecilia as Bride.

CEREMONIES IN ROYAL CHAPEL

Royalty Gathers in Berlin to Do Honor to the Occasion—Ritual of the Lutheran Church Used—Description of the Services—Wedding Gown of the Bride an Elaborate Affair

Berlin, Germany.—Crown Prince Frederick William and the Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin were married by Dr. Dryander, the court chaplain, in the small chapel of the palace at 5 o'clock in the afternoon according to the ritual of the Lutheran Church, which is the same for a prince as for a subject.

About half of the 400 persons present were princes or special ambassadors of other countries with their aides-de-camp. Ambassador Tower was present as the extraordinary ambassador for the United States. Mrs. Tower was with him.

The other guests were the diplomats accredited to this court, the members of the Cabinet, generals and admirals. When Chancellor von Buelow took his place in the chapel he received the quiet congratulations of those about him on his elevation to princely rank by Emperor William.

Royalty Present.

After the other persons were in their places the visiting members of royal families entered. Especially distinguished among them were the Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria, representing Emperor Francis Joseph; the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, Prince Henry, consort of the Queen of the Netherlands; the Duke and Duchess of Aosta, representing the King and Queen of Italy; Prince Arthur of Connaught, representing Great Britain; Prince and Princess Albert of Belgium, the Duke of Oporto, representing Portugal; Prince Ferdinand of Roumania and the Crown Princes of Denmark and of Greece. The junior members of the house of Hohenzollern followed, and finally came the Emperor and Empress.

Crown Prince Frederick William entered by a side door of the chapel and waited at the altar for the Duchess Cecilia, who, on the arm of her brother, the reigning Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and followed by ladies and gentlemen-in-waiting, had left her rooms in another part of the palace and passed through a long corridor hung with pictures illustrating the glory of the house of Hohenzollern, among them being battle scenes of the time of Frederick the Great and the coronation of Emperor William I. at Versailles.

The Wedding Gown.

The duchess wore a wonderful train of silver brocade made at Moscow and the gift of the Grand Duke Michael. It was borne by two pages.

The embroideries on the train, which was nearly fourteen feet in length and seven feet wide, were done after the designs of Professor Doepler in pink and silver. The corsage was cut low and trimmed with lace.

The veil was of old Brussels lace of great delicacy and beauty. She wore a tiara and the broad blue ribbon of the Grand Star of the Luisen Order, bestowed on her by the Emperor.

The Crown Prince wore the light blue uniform of a major of the First Foot Guards, with red and white facings. Across his breast was the light blue ribbon of the Wendische Crown, the highest decoration of the dukedom of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. He also wore the Prussian Order of the Black Eagle.

The Services.

The service began with the cathedral choir, high up in the circular gallery around the dome of the chapel, singing in double quartet, "He Shall Give His Angels Charge."

It is the privilege of the pastor, according to the Lutheran rite, to read either one of the several admonitory addresses to the bridal couple or to make one of his own. Dr. Dryander elected to lay aside the book, taking as his subject the Book of Ruth, Chapter I., verses 16 and 17, beginning:

"For whither thou goest I will go."

Dr. Dryander spoke briefly on the beauty of love, the large responsibilities resting on the youthful pair, their need for the support of faith and spiritual vision. The pastor then asked His Imperial Highness if he took out of God's hand to have and to hold according to God's word and will Her Highness Cecilia.

The Crown Prince answered "Yes."

The same question was addressed to the duchess, with the additional question of "and obey," to which she also answered "Yes."

These were the only responses. The rings were then exchanged and the bride and groom knelt while Dr. Dryander read the liturgical prayer closing the ceremony, which had taken exactly twenty minutes.

HIGH PRICE FOR FIRST EDITION.

Big Offer For Discovery of Shakespeare's "Richard III." Refused.

London, England.—A copy of the first edition of Shakespeare's "Richard III.," only three copies of which are known to be extant, was discovered accidentally among a lot of old, unvalued books in a private house at Great Missenden. The Sothebys offered £800 to the woman owning the book, but she refused it. It has been insured for £1000 for exhibition.

Broke His Leg.

Plantersville, Ala.—James Russell, a young man, who runs the engine for Barnes & Snow at this place, in a play with some other young people at his boarding house fell while running and broke his leg between the ankle and knee, the most painful manner in which a limb can be broken. The accident broke up the game. He is resting quietly.

BABY SHOW.

The "Ladies' Aid" of the Methodist church will hold a "baby show" at the grove near Mrs. Phillips' residence on Second avenue on June 20th. The hours of exhibition are 4:30 to 5:30 p. m. Entries must not be over 3 years old. The prize will be a handsome gold ring, and the judges are to be two bachelors of uncertain age, whose names will not be given until the last moment in order to keep them from being tampered with. The Misses Willie Reynolds, Winnie Reynolds, Ruby Downs, Marie Campbelle, Jewel Campbelle, Glennie Eugene Evans and Emmett Matthews will have tickets for sale, bunch of tickets from these little ladies, and thereby help a good cause and incidentally see some good fun, and some mighty pretty babies.

The Want of Hospitality

By Charles Marshall.

WHEN the at home day is at an end, and the last hand-shake has been given, who has really benefited by these social observances? No one to whom a good meal would be a welcome boon has been fed; in fact, nobody has been fed at all. A little gossip has gone round, the shortcomings of the servants have been discussed, and the children compared. As each visitor leaves, little remarks have been dropped, probably regretted later—but the faults of our poorer relations are so temptingly patent to all the world. At an at home can any one say that the real hand of friendship is held out? No, the tendency is to acquaintance only. The limited time, the ceaseless comings and goings, preclude anything like friendship.

If there still remains with us the duty of taking an interest in those less blessed with worldly goods than ourselves, we have a vast field for hidden charity unconnected with any subscription list.

The exercise of a more extended and liberal hospitality toward friends who have not the means to enjoy little luxuries in their own homes would do much to lessen the enforced sordidness of the lives of many. I know that the constant appeals from so many large institutions naturally dwarf individual charity, yet without apparently curtailing these responses, and, indeed, without much self-denial, numberless gentlewomen who feel the bitter sting of poverty, but hide it so bravely, might thankfully accept the kindnesses proffered by those known to them, without losing their cherished independence.

The Professor's Repast.

Professor Brieger, of the Berlin medical institute, was busily at work in his laboratory, surrounded by a formidable array of chemical and bacteriological utensils. A distinguished foreign physician called upon him, and watched his absorbing labor with interest. The professor's attention seemed to be anxiously but still hopefully, concentrated on a vessel which was enveloped in smoke and steam. "Guess what I am boiling here in this pot," said the professor. The visitor began to enumerate the entire scale of micro-organism. "Micrococci?" "No." "Sonococci?" "No." "Spirochaete?" "No." "What then?" "Sausages," replied Brieger.

Russians Like Roosevelt.

London, Eng.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times says:

"It is no exaggeration to say that President Roosevelt is the most popular man in Russia today. The president's rare insight, aided by the skill and tact of his ambassador, Mr. Meyer, enabled him to gauge the proper moment at which to offer advice which the initiator of The Hague peace conference could not refuse."

Begging in Jerusalem.

According to the American Hebrew, begging in Jerusalem "has been reduced to a fine art." Jews not only beg of travelers, but, getting the addresses of American Jews from reports of institutions, they send them not only begging letters, but articles of olive wood to be purchased. Lest there may be no response, they register these things, and wait for returns.

MILK CRUST ON BABY

Lost All His Hair—Scratched Till Blood Ran—Grateful Mother Tells of His Cure by Cuticura For 75c.

"When our baby boy was three months old he had the milk crust very badly on his head, so that all the hair came out, and it itched so bad he would scratch until the blood ran. I got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. I applied the Cuticura and put a thin cap on his head, and before I had used half of the box it was entirely cured, his hair commenced to grow out nicely again, and he has had no return of the trouble. TWO OPEN LETTERS

IMPORTANT TO MARRIED WOMEN

Mrs. Mary Dimmick of Washington tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her Well.

It is with great pleasure we publish the following letters, as they convincingly prove the claim we have so many times made in our columns that Mrs.

Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., is fully qualified to give helpful advice to sick women. Read Mrs. Dimmick's letters.

Her first letter:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I have been a sufferer for the past eight years with a trouble which first originated from painful menstruation—the pains were excruciating, with inflammation and ulceration of the womb. The doctor says I must have an operation or I cannot live. I do not want to submit to an operation if I can possibly avoid it. Please help me."—Mrs. Mary Dimmick, Washington, D. C.

Her second letter;

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"You will remember my condition when I last wrote you, and that the doctor said I must have an operation or I could not live. I received your kind letter and followed your advice very carefully and am now entirely well. As my case was so serious it seems a miracle that I am cured. I know that I owe not only my health but my life to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to your advice. I can walk miles without an ache or a pain, and I wish every suffering woman would read this letter and realize what you can do for them."—Mrs. Mary Dimmick, 59th and East Capitol Streets, Washington, D. C.

How easy it was for Mrs. Dimmick to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and how little it cost her—a two-cent stamp. Yet how valuable was the reply! As Mrs. Dimmick says—it saved her life.

Mrs. Pinkham has on file thousands of just such letters as the above, and offers ailing women helpful advice.

View of King Leopold.

An American who has ample opportunity to observe King Leopold, of Belgium, describes him as "a man of extraordinary fine physique, an accomplished linguist, widely read and traveled and holding advanced liberal views in all matters pertaining to statecraft and social science. He had the prescience to see in the Congo section of Africa an opportunity to found a colony for the surplus population of the small state over which he rules, Belgium being the most densely populated of European countries."

Joke on Justin McCarthy.

In a recent article on political conditions in England Justin McCarthy quotes the expression "By the skin of his teeth," and parenthetically apologizes for using what he calls "such a vulgar expression." Humorous writers are enjoying a laugh at Mr. McCarthy's expense, calling his attention to the 19th chapter of Job. 20th verse, where he may find the words: "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth."

Alaska, Terra Incognito.

We scracely know Alaska as yet, not even the number of square miles of land and water surface. Of wholly unknown regions in the vast territory of nearly 578,000 square miles (estimated) there are three of considerable extent. The smallest embraces the great snow-covered St. Elias range, which, though but a short distance from tide water, is so inaccessible that practically nothing is known of its geography or geology. A second unexplored area lies adjacent to the Arctic coat and the international boundary, extending southward down 40,000 square miles. A third unexplored area lies in the northwestern part of the territory, which also includes about 10 000 square miles. The Kuskokwin basin embraces 15,000 miles of unexplored country.

Railway Rate Legislation.

At the biennial convention of the Order of Railway Conductors, recently held at Portland, Oregon, resolutions were unanimously adopted voicing their sentiments as to the effect of proposed railway rate legislation on the 1,300,000 railroad employes, whom they in part represented. These resolutions "indorse the attitude of President Roosevelt in condemning secret rebates and other illegalities, and commend the attitude of the heads of American railways, who, with practical unanimity, have joined with the President on this question." They then respectfully point out to Congress the "inadvisability of legislation vesting in the hands of a commission power over railway rates, now lower by far in the United States than in any other country," because such regulation would "result in litigation and confusion and inevitably tend to an enforced reduction in rates, irrespective of the question of the ability of the railroads to stand the reduction, especially in view of the increased cost of their supplies and materials." They further protested against such power being given to the present Interstate Commission because "the proposed legislation is not in harmony with our idea of American jurisprudence, inasmuch as it contemplates that a single body shall have the right to investigate, indict, try, condemn and then enforce its decisions at the cost of the carriers, pending appeal, which is manifestly inequitable."

The conductors base their demand for only such legislation, if any, as would "secure and insure justice and equity and preserve equal rights to all parties concerned" on the ground that the low cost of transportation "is the result of the efficiency of American railway management and operation which have built up the country through constant improvement and development of territory, while at the same time recognition has been given to the value of intelligence among employes in contrast to foreign methods, where high freight rates and lowest wages to employes obtain."

In pressing their claim against legislation adverse to their interests, they point out the fact that "the freight rates of this country average only two per cent. of the cost of articles to the consumer, thus making the freight rate so insignificant a factor in the selling price that numerous standard articles are sold at the same price in all parts of the country."

THE PULPIT.

A BRILLIANT SUNDAY SERMON BY DR. M. W. STRYKER, PRESIDENT OF HAMILTON COLLEGE.

Subject: Service.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Dr. M. W. Stryker, President of Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., occupied the pulpit of the Hanson Place M. E. Church in the absence of Dr. Locke, the pastor. He preached the following sermon on "Service:"

My text is that verse in the twelfth chapter of the epistle to the Romans in which the apostle says that there are some things hard to be understood which the unlearned and the unstable wrest to their own destruction. It is true that Satan often hides in the dark passages of God's word. It is also true that the hardest things to understand are not those that the intellect has to unravel and explain, but the things that concern the deeds. For my part, whoever else may have found it hard, I have not found the ninth chapter of Romans as hard as the twelfth. Even if I did not do it very well it was easier to think straight than it is to be good. It is a wonderful thing that, after all these mighty, reverberating words, that search the very heights and depths of the plan of God that make this letter so compact up to this point, it all broadens out in the most natural fashion into administrative matters. I notice that the thing about the twelfth chapter is that it does not say anything about what we must not do. It is always true that if you get light in darkness will go out. The way to keep our hearts empty of evil is to fill them up to the brim with good. We do not get the darkness out of this room with a broom, but with a match or a spark. Dr. Thomas Chalmers used to speak about the "expulsive power of the new affection." To many a man who never amounted to anything the honest, pure love of a true woman has been an incentive to him to make something of himself for her sake; and whenever the love of God comes into the human heart it drives out evil and seeks to clothe itself with living and loyal action; and if there is any one who thinks the deed is easy and the doctrine hard, that is not my experience.

I want to speak to-night upon this special admonition to service which Paul says is reasonable. God does not ask anything that is not rational. Christianity and Christian living can give account of themselves. There is nothing so silly as to be a sinner. It makes angels weep and devils laugh to see a man trying to serve God and himself. That man is walking north and south; it is a straddle. Now Paul says it is a reasonable service. He said, try it, put it to the proof, and he was an expert who had tried it for thirty years. I am going to take one special line of analogy. You have often heard it said of a man of intense activity that he was a "perfect steam engine," and that would be said more often if there were more men who were what they ought to be, "a perfect steam engine." I think there is a sermon in that, and I am going to try to get at it. You will help. You will think a great many things which I won't and preach a sermon to yourselves about being perfect steam engines. For our present purposes we will talk about that particular style of steam engine, the railway locomotive. America is doing a great business in making these, and wherever they are sent—Africa or South America or Asia, every one of them is a kind of missionary force, a living testimony of that force and skill which are resident in free mankind. The call now is loud and clear for Americans who shall be more committed to teach the world manhood. The tide of time is rising and sinew and muscle are called into the service of God. This is no time for limping or loitering.

Look out upon this world and see how God is compressing and packing it together. If we won't take our Gospel in the missionary ship, it shall go in the warship. Somehow men are going to be brought together. We are a conceited lot, we Americans, but we do not like to be told so. We have a good thing, and like to keep it. We say of the Chinese, "shut them out; put them aside." And perhaps of some others, also, "Don't let those good-for-nothing Russians, Poles and Italians come." Bless your heart! Your great grandfather or grandmother was nothing but an emigrant—mine was a Dutchman, at that. We are all the children of immigrants; we are all intruders on this continent. The only Americans are not now citizens, but live on pensions. We have stolen everything they had that was in sight. You had better not talk about that. God's plan is to keep the races of this world marching and moving. Yet, somehow, some cannot get it through their thick heads, their gold-plated heads, their noddles, hard with cruel ambitions and paltry pride, that when the Scripture says, "He made of one blood all nations," it means what it says. If you won't learn it by peace you will learn it by war; if you won't learn it in Bibles, you will learn it by bullets; if you won't learn it in packed Europe and Asia and go there, God will bring those people here. Let them come. I laugh at all this talk about checking immigration. King Canute might just as well have tried to throw back the waves with his mandate. In a certain sense it is proper to say that God is a mighty utilitarian. It is a great time for service; we need to wake up, it was nearly daylight, it is dawn, great things are coming. Therefore, I think that our churches, colleges, schools and homes ought to engage in the manufacture of locomotives.

That wonderful, intricate engine—who made it? Did a baby locomotive grow up into that great machine? You say it is evolution. Evolution describes the way a thing is made, but never made anything. The process of making is evolution. If you ask me if I believe God made this world by process, I say yes. That is the way He makes everything. When He makes anything that can grow He gives it a chance to grow. His plans are made and I don't care where He began! I care more for where He ends. You say it took a long while. Yes, the larger the pattern, the larger the plan. Our steam engine is a fine instance of evolution. It is man's creation and it represents his Creator's idea and intention. It is a wonderful epitome of mind working for an intended end; of a purpose perfected by thought. And your bodies? They just happened? The steam engine had to be made and you are an accident? A master mechanic and designer, he is a mere chance? Do not think it. Where is our reason? God is back of this adaptation, this mighty thing that we call life. Our purposes are the service. That is first.

And, second, your perfect steam engine is made with a purpose. The railroad company owns it. They employ an engineer to run it. Now in a sense it is his; it is his to use and control, but it is not his to sell. It is his to take care of and to get as much as he can out of, but in no other way. But if he takes a notion that he can run the whole road and ignore schedules and orders then very soon from him will be taken even that which he seemed to have. Now, we do not own our bodies—these engines. We are the engineers, but not the owners. My body is mine only in a relative sense. I am to give account for it. You say, "May not a man do what he will with his own?" Certainly, if you own anything. What is the engine for? To look at? No, for use. Is it made to be destroyed? If so it might just as well be made of wood and paint or a chromo engine. Some men are such they look like the real thing, but they do not act like it. You have seen a model engine under a glass case; that you wind up. The wheels go, but the engine does not. The wheels work easily because they don't touch the track. I have seen some men and I suppose there are some women, who are wound up with keys. The wheels buzz, but there is nothing done. There are people who sit in a theatre, and the tears run down their cheeks, and they think they are good because they can cry. They pay $1.50 for the privilege of weeping. We all know how we smooth ourselves when a tear comes. We feel penitent and say, "We are not so bad as we thought." It is a toy engine, the wheels go, but it does not advance. A perfect engine is meant to do something in the world, and so are we if coupled to the task that God gives us. Some people don't want to pull, they want to be pulled. You always see a dead engine in the middle of a train. Which end of the train do you like, the front or somewhere in the middle? God give us the front, with all its dangers and perils and joys.

Perfect engines get hold of the track. Orders come with lightning rapidity to the engineer, and they must be obeyed without question. The responsibility for the orders is not with him, his responsibility is to execute them. God can run this world, but He has put it into your hands to run yourself. When you stop at the end of the road you can be perfectly certain that if the passengers are too busy to take notice of you, you will not be forgotten by the manager. Well, I have mixed it. The engineer and the engine together—that is the way we are. We are the engines? Yes. We are engineers? Yes. I said at the outset, "You preach the sermon." I think there is a great analogy in it. I think there is a living parable for those who have eyes and ears. Respoisibility? Yes, lot's of it. But, then, who will shirk that? Danger? Plenty, but you are a man. Work? Yes, but that is all you are for. We are not made for nothing. Covet the place. Ride with hand on the throttle, making the best time, within safety, that a man can make. Ride right over the driving wheel. There is where the best men have always sat. Then, by and by, when this engine is worn out, you will get a better one.

Morbus Sabbaticus.

Morbus Sabbaticus, or Sunday sickness, a disease peculiar to church members. The attack comes on suddenly on every Sunday; no symptoms are felt on Saturday night; the patient sleeps well and wakes feeling well; eats a hearty breakfast, but about church time the attack comes on and continues until services are over for the morning. Then the patient feels easy and eats a hearty dinner. In the afternoon he feels much better, and is able to take a walk, talk about politics, and read the Sunday papers; he eats a hearty supper, but about church time he has another attack and stays at home. He retires early, sleeps well and wakes up Monday morning refreshed and able to go to work, and does not have any symptoms of the disease until the following Sunday. The peculiar features are as follows:

1. It always attacks members of the church.
2. It never makes it appearance except on the Sabbath.
3. The symptoms vary, but it never interferes with the sleep or appetite.
4. It never lasts more than twenty-four hours.
5. It generaly attacks the head of the family.
6. No physician is ever called.
7. It always proves fatal in the end—to the soul.
8. No remedy is known for it except prayer.
9. Religion is the only antidote.
10. It is becoming fearfully prevalent and is sweeping thousands every year prematurely to destruction.

A Hard Lesson.

Of all the lessons that humanity has to learn in life's school, the hardest is to learn to wait. Not to wait with folded hands, that claim life's prizes without previous effort, but, having struggled and crowded the slow years with trial, seeing no result such as effort seemed to warrant—nay, perhaps disaster instead—to stand firm at such a crisis of existence, to preserve one's poise and self-respect, not to lose hold or relax effort, is greatness, whether achieved by man or woman.—Reformed Church Record.

The Past a Guarantee For the Future.

If we would reassure our restless hearts that our future is in the hands of God we have but to scan our past. Can any man that is not altogether blind look over the way he has traversed without surprise and awe as he sees it marked everywhere by mysterious footprints of the living God? We thought we were going a way of our own, and all the time we have been on the King's highway.—J. E. McFadyen.

Looking For the Saviour.

Some people live looking within at their failures. Some live looking around at their hindrances. Some live looking for the Saviour—they face the sunny South.—Mark Guy Pearse.

Many would rather be in sin than out of style.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JUNE 18.

Subject: The Heavenly Home. Rev. xxii., 1-11—Golden Text, Rev. iii., 21—Memory Verses, 3-5—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. The heavenly state (vs. 1-5). 1. "And." The first five verses complete the description of the new heaven and earth. The entire passage 21:1 to 22:5 should be read as one unbroken description. "He showed me" (R. V., It was the angel interpreter of 21:9, 17, who "showed" John this wonderful vision. "Pure river." This is evidently a reference to the garden of paradise, and the river by which it was watered. "Water of life." This is a familiar scriptural image. Living, pure water is everywhere the type of blessing (Psa. 36:8; 46:4; 105:41; Joel 3:18; John 7:37-39). "Proceeding," etc. The supply is exhaustless. Here is an unfailing fulness of love, joy and peace.

2. "Street of it." This refers to the city described in the preceding chapter. "Tree of life." The symbol of perpetual immortality. The heavenly paradise, like the paradise in Eden, has its river and tree of life. The tree of life is a favorite image of Solomon's wisdom; the fruit of the righteous, the fulfilled desire, the wholesome tongue, each is "a tree of life." What possibilities of blessing these figures shadow forth, who shall say? "Twelve manner of fruits." Rather, twelve fruitages, or fruit harvests. The idea is not that there were different species of fruits, but successive crops. "Leaves of the tree." The very leaves, in their fadeless beauty, are a universal guarantee that perfect health is the constant and everlasting blessing of the glorified state. "No more curse." As there shall be no more sinning against God, so there shall be no more curse of God upon the people, for they shall be all His servants and serve Him. 4. "Shall see His face." This is that "vision of God" of which theologians have much spoken, constituting the highest glory of heaven. See 1 Cor. 13:12; 1 John 3:2. "In their foreheads." Saints of God in this life often reflect the image of the heavenly in their countenances.

5. "No night there." John in his vision sees one eternal day. This is figurative language. Darkness is the emblem of sin, sorrow, pain and death; none of these will be found in heaven. "Giveth them light." The divine glory never dims. No revolving of the orb renders the opposite hemisphere dark. Who can anticipate what honors God may have awaiting the saints. "For ever and ever." "Unto the ages of the ages." R. V., margin. "Unto eternities of eternities."

II. God's sayings are true (vs. 6, 7). 6. "And." The visions which John saw are now ended. The remaining verses of the chapter are his epilogue. "He said." The interpreting angel (v. 1) here reaffirms the words of God (21:5). "These sayings." The utterances and revelations of this book. "Of the spirits of the prophets" (R. V.) The God who called and commissioned the prophets to reveal His word. "Shortly be done." There are many things in this book which, if taken literally, would intimate that the prophecies were to be fulfilled in a short time after their delivery. This would support the idea that they referred to those times in which the apostle lived, and to the disturbances which took place among the Jews and in the Roman empire. What they all mean, and when and how they are to be fulfilled, God in heaven alone knows! 7. "I come quickly." There is a difference of opinion as to what this coming refers: 1. Some think it refers to Christ's coming at the end of the world. 2. Others think it may refer to His coming in the gospel dispensation. 3. Christ comes to each of us at death, and in this sense His coming, at the longest, will be soon. "Blessed." Blessing and woe are dependent on the spirit in which the truths of this book are read and practiced.

III. God only is to be worshiped (vs. 8, 9). 8. "I John saw." The R. V. is better here. "John had placed his name in the title of his book (chap. 1:4, 9), and now at the close he names himself again, so that we might perfectly know that he, the Apostle John, had written this testimony as to the coming of Jesus Christ." "I fell down." Overwhelmed with wonder and reverence at the extraordinary revelations made to him, and filled with praise at the amazing blessedness God has prepared for His children, John felt the impulse of worship, and it may be that Barnes is right in his suggestion that the apostle "not improbably entertained some suspicion that it was the Redeemer Himself who had manifested Himself. There was the same attempt and refusal in chapter 19:10. This twice offered and refused worship is full of teaching. "Thy fellow servant." One bond of service unites angels and men; to be servants of God is the highest title they can attain; worship is for God alone. The words "worship God" are most emphatic; "to God give thy worship, and not to me."

IV. In the future world character is fixed (vs. 10, 11). 10. "Seal not the sayings." Isaiah (8:16; 30:8) and Daniel (8:26; 12:4, 9) were commanded to seal up their prophecies. Their prophecies related to far-distant times. John was directed not to seal up his predictions, but to leave them open so that a persecuted church might have access to them. 11. "He that is unjust." See R. V. The words contain that solemn lesson often taught in the Scriptures that we are fixing our own character every day we live and that, if judgment overtake us at the last, the result will be traceable to no arbitrary decree, but to the manner in which, as moral beings, we met the conditions of that moral system in which we have been placed.

College and Poverty.

A recent bulletin of the Massachusetts labor bureau shows that in Harvard, often called "a rich man's college," nearly 10 per cent. of the young men and nearly 11 per cent. of the young women are the children of poor, classed by statisticians as wage-earners. In Boston University, the great Methodist institution of New England, 35 per cent. of the students are sons and daughters of wage-workers. The record of Clark University is more remarkable. This is devoted entirely to post-graduate and research work—that is, to the kind of work which must wait long years for money returns. Yet nearly 57 per cent. of its students are from wage-earning families.

FEED YOUNG GIRLS.

Must Have Right Food While Growing.

Great care should be taken during the critical period when young girls are just merging into womanhood that the diet shall contain the right elements and nothing harmful.

At that age the body is being formed and if the right food is taken a sturdy character, both mentally and physically, will follow; on the other hand, if unhealthy cells may be built up, a condition slowly but surely developed that cannot be checked, may result in life long disease and even death.

"A young lady friend of mine," writes a Mich. girl, "was in poor health. Coffee began to disagree with her, and on my stomach also. Finally I was compelled to leave it entirely and was brought on the verge of nervous prostration, my muscles, and nerves all being affected.

"I tried to use Postum Cereal Food Coffee, found its effects very beneficial. I suffered from constipation, but in a short time I drank Postum I was relieved. I didn't fancy it. But I had it brewed right, and found it delicious in flavor and soothing to my stomach. I have many persons who have been benefited by its use that I personally know of. I had it brewed right, and found it delicious in flavor and soothing to my stomach. I have no words to express the gratitude I owe to Postum Food Coffee.

"In every respect it has been a wonderful improvement. My headaches, nervousness, pains in the side and back, all the disagreeable symptoms yielded to the use of Postum. My health is much better in the betterment of my condition; it seems to me I am much brighter. I am, in fact, in better health now than I ever was before, and I am sure I owe it to the use of Postum Food Coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

...has come to pass that the day laborer uses gas as his only fuel for cooking, because of economy, and the rich man uses gas on account of its convenience. Gas for lighting, with modern improvements in burners, is cheaper, better and more satisfactory than any other kind of light. Acetylene is a more perfect illuminant than the gas sold by the big gas companies in the cities, and the cost to the smallest user is about the equivalent of city gas at 85 cents per thousand.

...cetylene is the modern artificial light, the latest addition to the many sensations that have become daily necessities.

...he light from an acetylene flame is clear, steady and brilliant, and in quality is only rivaled by the sun's rays. ...ater and a solid material known as ...cium Carbide are brought into contact, the immediate result is the making of this wonderful gas. The generation of acetylene is so simple that expert knowledge or even apparatus is not necessary to make it. If it is desired to use it for practical lighting, and to keep it for immediate use, then a small machine called an "Acetylene Generator" is employed. There are many responsible concerns making acetylene generators. In practice this gas is distributed in small pipes throughout houses, grounds or entire cities and towns in the same manner as ordinary city gas. Acetylene is the only satisfactory means of lighting isolated buildings located in the country or suburbs at a distance from city gas or electric plants.

If the wishes of the American people had prevailed, Fitzhugh Lee would have been buried in the Campo Santo at Arlington, and a stately shaft would have risen there to his memory. But his own desire has prevailed, very fittingly, thinks the Hartford Courant. Years ago, as we now learn, he told his family he wanted to be buried in the Hollywood Cemetery at Richmond when the time came and on one occasion at least he pointed out the very spot—near Jefferson Davis's grave—where he wished his grave to be made.

Several Atlantic liners arrived in New York harbor within a single day, bringing to our shores 12,000 immigrants. The New York newspapers say the new arrivals are a sturdy lot, and that few or none of them will be sent back. The steamship companies closely scrutinize applicants for passage on the other side, and few deportations, therefore, become necessary.

The construction of a navy, like any other experiment in the application of modern science and invention to any other department of the public service, was an experiment which involved great risk as well as great boldness in design and conception, and as history shows that Mr. White was the first officer of competent authority to inaugurate the system of instruction and armament which has placed our navy upon a plane of efficiency, proportioned to the number of its vessels, with the advanced navies, it seems but just that he should be accorded due credit for his work, the Louisville Courier-Journal declares.

As the question stands today the problem of turbine installation in time of war is vexing because of the variety of duties imposed by ordinary cruising and by the necessity in emergencies of a sudden rush. At the higher speeds turbine machinery is more economical in fuel, but at the lower speeds the coal advantage lifts with equal decision to the reciprocating type. This raises at once the tactical question whether the gain in maximum speed is more than equivalent to the greater steaming distance possible at the lower speed, the New York Herald points out.

TERRIBLE PENANCE OF NYEN-DE-KYI-BUK MONKS

Percival Landon, the Traveler, Tells of the Most Uncanny Thing He Saw in All Tibet.

Perhaps the most terrible penance suffered for religious reasons anywhere in the world is that of the monks of Nyen-de-kyi-buk, as described by Percival Landon in "The Opening of Tibet." These monks live in the ordinary manner during the novitiate; then they go into cells for a period of six months; then, after an interval, for three years and ninety-three days; later, for life.

And such a cell! "Almost on a level with the ground," says Mr. Landon, "there was an opening closed with a flat stone from behind. In front of this window was a ledge eighteen inches in width, with two basins beside it, one at each end. The abbot was attended by an acolyte who, by his master's orders, tapped three times sharply on the stone slab; we stood in the little courtyard in the sun, and watched that wicket with cold apprehension. I think, on the whole, it was the most uncanny thing I saw in all Tibet. After half a minute's pause the stone moved, or tried to move, but it came to rest again. Then very slowly and uncertainly it was pushed back and a black chasm was revealed. There was again a pause of thirty seconds, during which imagination ran riot, but I do not think that any other thing could have been as intensely pathetic as that we actually saw.

"A hand, muffled in a tightly wound piece of dirty cloth, for all the world like a stump of an arm, was painfully thrust up, and very weakly it felt along the slab. After a fruitless fumbling the hand slowly quivered back again into the darkness. A few moments later there was again an ineffectual effort, and then the stone slab moved noiselessly across the opening.

"Once a day water and an unleavened cake of flour is placed for the prisoner upon that slab, the signal is given and he may take it in. His diversion is over for the day, and in the darkness of his cell, where night and day, moon, sunset and the dawn are all alike, he—poor soul!—had thought that another day of his long penance was over."

WISE WORDS.

History fades; mythology endures.

Trust must either be accepted as absolute, or not at all.

He who can not rule himself has no right to condemn others.

Religion has triumphed only when it has remolded the desires.

Facts are obdurate, unplastic to the spirit's artistic, creative fingers.

A man is never so liable to fool himself as when trying to fool others.

The world's best work is done far from the haunts of gilded mediocrity.

There are none so lonesome as those who fail to keep abreast of the times.

Few men regret their evil deeds so much as the fear the consequences thereof.

To know when to let go is as essential to success as to know when to hold on.

O friend, never strike sail to a fear! Come into port greatly, or sail with God the seas.

He has not learned the lesson of life who does not every day surmount a fear.—Emerson.

The millennium will be with us when the best impulses of men shall also be their strongest.

The soul shows itself best in works of pure imagination, because it works there unimpeded by the limitations of fact.

You can help your fellow-men; you must help them; but the only way that you can help them is by being the noblest and the best man that it is possible for you to be.—Phillips Brooks.

There can be no real and abiding happiness without sacrifice. Our greatest joys do not result from our efforts toward self-gratification, but from a loving and spontaneous service to other lives. Joy comes not to him who seeks it for himself, but to him who seeks it for other people.

Success of Liquid Fuel.

A successful method has finally been invented for injecting liquid fuel into the furnaces of passenger boats. The fuel is brought under a pressure of from ten to twenty pounds to the square inch and evaporated by a somewhat modified "Kortings" burner, without use of steam. This apparatus works very satisfactorily, without noise and without the loss of fresh water. Formerly the liquid fuel was injected into the furnaces by means of a steam jet, making very great noise, a great inconvenience, annoying to the passengers and causing the loss of much fresh water in the form of steam. A suitable furnace arrangement, recently invented, also, guarantees proper and perfect burning of the fuel, so that very little smoke escapes from the funnel, steam is kept regularly at the same pressure during the voyage, and the boiler is kept at a uniform temperature, thus preventing much trouble from leakage and other damage.—Chicago Journal.

A Boy's Wit.

An English schoolmaster promised a crown (about $1.25) to any boy who should propound a riddle that the teacher could not answer. One and another tried, and at last one boy asked: "Why am I like the Prince of Wales?" The master puzzled his wits in vain, and finally was compelled to admit that he did not know. "Well," said the boy, "it's because I'm waiting for the crown."

Norse Legend.

According to a recent work on Norway, the scantiness of the soil in that country is explained by some of the country people as follows: At the creation of the world the angels whose duty it was to scatter the soil forgot Norway. Seeing this, the guardian angel of the land made complaints to the Creator. What was to be done? Impossible to restart the whole of the creation for the sake of Norway. "Come, my little angels," said he, "look carefully and perhaps you may find a little earth." The conscience-stricken angels swept the floor of heaven and the little dust they found they gathered in their draperies and scattered over the Norweigian rocks.

The Man Who Laughs.

Senator Depew recently gave utterance to this burst of philosophy: "The man who laughs is a doctor without a diploma. His face does more good in a sick room than a bushel of powders or a gallon of bitter draughts. People are always glad to see him. Their hands instinctively go out half way to meet his grasp, while they turn involuntarily from the clammy touch of the dyspeptic who speaks in the groaning key. He laughs you out of your faults, while you never dream of being offended with him and you never know what a pleasant world you are living in until he points out the sunny streaks in its pathway."

Large Subterranean City.

The town of Epernay, France, is a vast subterranean city, the streets for miles and miles being hewn out of the solid chalk, flanked with piles of champagne of all blends and qualities. There is no light in this labyrinth of streets, crossings and turnings, except that which the spattering candles afford. All is dark and damp, with the thermometer down about zero. The largest champagne manufacturers in Epernay possess underground cellars which cover no less than forty-five acres and contain 5,000,000 bottles of wine.

Sultan Hates Darkness.

The Sultan of Turkey strenuously objects to darkness and his apartments in the palace and the surrounding gardens as well are flooded with light every night. He is read to sleep by a brother or favorite servant, and if he dreams an interpreter is summoned directly he awakes to explain the meaning of the dream to him.

Gift from a Stranger.

Mrs. C. Durga, of Bethel, Vt., has received $20,000 by the will of Alfred Lurte, of Liverpool, England, almost a total stranger. A few years ago, while Mr. Burte was visiting in Bethel, Mrs. Durga did some writing for him and would take no pay. She had not heard from him since.

Cheap Chinese Newspapers.

Chinese newspapers, owing to the cheap quality of paper used and to the low price of labor, both literary and mechanical, are issued at an extremely small figure. The price of the ordinary Shanghai journal is 4 cash or about 1-5 of a cent.

It is proposed to erect a tablet to Lord Bacon in Liverpool town hall in memory of the fact that he was once member of parliament for Liverpool.

THREE YEARS AFTER.

Eugene E. Lario, of 751 Twentieth avenue, ticket seller in the Union station, Denver, Col., says: "You are at liberty to repeat what I first stated through our Denver papers about Doan's Kidney Pills in the summer of 1899, for I have had no reason in the interim to change my opinion of the remedy. I was subject to severe attacks of backache, always aggravated if I sat long at a desk. Doan's Kidney Pills absolutely stopped my backache. I have never had a pain or a twinge since."

Ducks and Geese.

In raising ducks never keep anything but white feathered stock. The Pekin duck is the best and always brings the top of the market. With geese only the largest breeds should be kept. The Toulouse, African or any other large breed is all right, and it cost no more to raise a large bird than a small one. The market is never overstocked on large, fat geese.

The region between the Manchurian cities of Mukden and Simmintin has for centuries been notorious for brigandage. The brigands, however, allow anyone to travel in safety after paying a certain percentage of the goods carried in advance.

HON. JOHN TIGHE.

Assemblyman Tighe's letter should be read by every brain worker leading a strenuous life.

Hon. John Tighe, No. 98 Remsen St., Cohoes, N. Y., Member of Assembly from the Fourth District, Albany County, N. Y., writes as follows:

"Peruna has my hearty indorsement as a restorative tonic of superior merit. At times when I have been completely broken down from excess of work, so that my faculties seemed actually at a standstill, Peruna has acted as a healing restorer, starting the machinery of mind and body afresh with new life and energy.

"I recommend it to a man tired in mind and body as a tonic superior to anything I know of and well worthy serious consideration."—J. Tighe.

Excess of work, so common in our country, causes impaired nerves, leading to catarrh and catarrhal nervousness—a disease that is responsible for half of all nervous troubles.

Peruna cures this trouble because it cures catarrh wherever located.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

ARE YOU SICK?

Let a SAMPLE BOTTLE of CHECKERS HELP YOU to GET WELL!

Perhaps you have the most stubborn and fatal disease the doctors know about.

Perhaps you've suffered untold agony and daily torment.

Perhaps you are unable to look after your daily work, may be not well enough to give it a fraction of the time it needs.

Perhaps you're discouraged with life—never expect to get back your youthful vigor again—lost your ambition, take no interest in your business, no longer enjoy old pleasures, find home and friends less attractive. The above are the usual penalties of disease suffering.

Perhaps you've tried a dozen doctors and a dozen different medicines. Then given up with disgust. It's a common experience.

Do you expect to stop trying and risk the fatal end? Or are you still open for a positive cure? Your confidence, no doubt, has been shattered before by a dozen trials, but because you have grasped at straws in the past, will you refuse now to try a proven life preserver? Won't you bolster up your faith in human nature and try again? A positive cure depends on your answers.

Dr. Checkers, of Austria, gave his country the famous Checkers formula—this wonderful Medicine to be taken into the stomach, there to be absorbed by the blood—making the people new all over. Checkers is just beginning to be known in the U. S. It has cured thousands, it has cured wherever it has been tried. It is not a drug; it's like nothing you have ever tried—but it will cure you. It checks and stops the ravages of Consumption, it cures Stomach, Liver, Kidney, Nerve and Blood Diseases, Catarrh, Bronchitis, Coughs, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Heart Disease, Indigestion, Malaria, Chills and Fever, Nervousness, General Debility and all known Female Complaints. We promise sufferers quick relief and a permanent cure. Good druggists have it—also the leading stores. Get a mammoth dollar bottle TO-DAY, you will forget it tomorrow.

THE UNION and "MADAME" Offer You

$6,000.00 IN PRIZES

MADAME is a magazine for women who think and is the only magazine in the world endorsed by OVER THREE MILLION WOMEN, being adopted as the Official Organ of the National Council of Women. It is full of bright stories, clever articles on art, music, literature, with beautiful pictures galore.

TEST OF SKILL. This is not a lottery, guessing or estimating contest. It is absolutely a test of skill. There is no trick or deception about this, whatsoever. The dots are visible to the naked eye and can be counted. If you can count the dots correctly and give a good plan of counting them you should win. Your chance of winning is as good as any one's.

Money must accompany all subscriptions otherwise your count will not be registered. If you are now a subscriber to either paper your subscription will be extended.

If this map gets destroyed, another printed on heavy paper will be sent you upon receipt of 2 cent stamp for postage.

$50.00 IS OFFERED AS A SPECIAL PRIZE TO THOSE SENDING IN THREE COUNTS (SEE CONDITIONS)

A TOTAL OF 757 PRIZES

CONDITIONS—$1.00 pays for six months to MADAME and six months subscription to THE UNION and entitles you to 1 free count. $2 pays for one years subscription to Madame and one year's subscription to THE UNION and entitles you to three free counts and makes you eligible for the $50.00 prize given to winners of the first prize if they have three counts. See below.

$50.00 PRIZES—We believe every one should have three counts so they can have one on each side of what they think is correct, to be more sure to hit it. To encourage this we will give $50.00 extra to winners of first prizes if they have three counts. Remember if you have one count you get first prize ONLY, BUT IF YOU HAVE THREE COUNTS AND WIN YOU GET $50.00 EXTRA,

AWARDS will be made as follows: The person giving correct or nearest correct count will get first prize. Next nearest correct, second prize, etc. In case of a tie for any prize it will be awarded to the person giving best plan for counting dots.

JUDGES. The awarding of prizes will be wholly in the hands of disinterested judges. The Hon. John W. Holtzman, Mayor of the City of Indianapolis, is chairman of the Committee of Judges. We are bound our contests must be ABSOLUTELY FAIR.

OUR FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES—As to whether we are abundantly able to do as we say, we refer to any bank or trust company in the city of Indianapolis. Our offer will be carried out to the letter

In the event of more than one person submitting the same plan and it being considered the best plan by the judges each person so tying will be asked to tell in fifty words how best to improve MADAME. The one making the best suggestion gets first prize, next best next, etc. UNDERSTAND THIS IS ONLY IN CASE OF TIE IN PLAN, WHICH IS NOT AT ALL LIKELY. No one connected with Madame or The Union will be allowed to compete. Contest closes July 1, 1905, but get your counts in at once. Anybody having THREE COUNTS entered may enter additional counts at 25c each. Be careful to give your plan of counting, as the best plan used will decide all ties.

PRIZES GUARANTEED—We will guarantee to give a prize worth one dollar at least, to every person who sends a correct count and $2.00 for a year's subscription to Madame and The Union.

The Money-Getting Faculty The Meanest and Lowest Possessed by Man

By a Wall Street Banker.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER'S fortune is now a round half billion dollars and he is adding to the pile an income of $6,000,000 a month. Many people are grieving over John D's wealth, but as for us, we are not coveting a cent of it. Spring is coming, and we do not believe that the Standard Oil Co. is going to cvorner up the sunshine or the flowers or the million other beautiful things which are the common property of all those capable of enjoying them. What if the Standard does monopolize oil; it is a dirty, ill-smelling and totally unesthetic product anyway, and we ask very little odds of it. Daylight is far pleasanter, and cheaper.

Moreover, John D. cannot take a single kopeck of his money with him, and the property he has accumulated will ultimately be redistributed for the good of the world. The water in a mill-dam is of no use to the mill-owner except to turn his mill; he can't drink it up, and as fast as he makes use of it it escapes and goes on its way, making the earth blossom and eventually being taken up by the sun, to be showered down again on the thirsty soil for the benefit of the whole human family.

Wealth, in the same way, is of no value except for its potential power, and no matter how much a man has he can consume only a certain modicum of it himself, and the rest goes to enrich the whole world.

A successful business man who has made his pile said to us the other day: "The faculties required for money-getting are the meanest and lowest of those possessed by man." Why, then, covet wealth that is produced by such faculties; why not rather strive for those higher objects which have no price-mark attached to them, and which indeed are above valuation in dollars and cents.

Mr. Rockefeller can buy some things which the rest of us cannot, but on the other hand, all his money cannot procure some of the simple pleasures which are within the reach of the average mortal. As between the lot of a healthy tramp and Mr. Rockefeller's, for instance, we think the tramp has a little the better of it. As for us, we envy the tramp his freedom more than we do Mr. Rockefeller his money.—The Pathfinder.

The Coming American Type

By Edward Meyer.

I MAINTAIN that the typical American beauty (and therefore the beauty of the world) is a brunette. I shall try to go further and to prove by the following historical facts that the future American girl will be an extreme specimen of the brunette. In proof of this I shall cite history.

In the seventeenth century Christopher Meyer and his wife came from Palantinate, Prussia, and penetrated the untrod forests of Pennsylvania, where they built their log cabin home—the first touch of civilization in that region. Christopher Meyer was a blonde, of not extraordinary stature; so was his wife. They spread the glories of the New World among their friends across the sea. The result was the immediate emigration of hundreds of others to this new home, which Christopher Meyer namer "Muhlbach" (now Lancaster county, Pa.). The point I want to make here is that all these German pioneers were pronounced blondes, with blue eyes and flaxen hair. From that time down through the centuries this colony of first settlers has remained intact. They have been loyal to each other, and have never married into the different nationalities who came later. Now, here I want to emphasize point No. 2. It is this: My forefathers (Christopher Meyer was my direct ancestor) were all blondes. Today the sixth and seventh generations are nearly all extreme brunettes, with black hair end eyes. What has caused the change? Climate, say I, for one thing; secondly, freedom—freedom of mind and soul that has been working toward the ideal—namely, brunette type.

Another remarkable thing is this: Our race has grown in stature. My ancestor, Christopher Meyer, was a man of ordinary height, the present generation is a race of giants ranging from 6 feet to 6 feet 6 inches in height. I myself being 6 feet 2 1-2 inches. This characteristic increase of height is noticeable throughout central Pennsylvania; all the boys and girls now growing up to manhood and womanhood are growing taller than their parents (on an average) and their complexion is darkening. I predict that the American girl of a hundred years from now will be a magnificent creation—about 6 feet in height, perfectly formed, with black hair, black eyes, a complexion almost Indian bronze in color, features strong, clean cut, classical—the most beautiful work of the Divinity since the Garden of Eden—and a brunette.

St. Petersburg in Line.

St. Petersburg.—The municipality of St. Petersburg has decided to give its adhesion to the address of Emperor Nicholas, adopted by the all-Russian congress at Moscow, and has appointed a number of its members to join the deputation from the Moscow congress which will present the address to the emperor.

Greenville Bank Fails.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Merchants and Planters bank, of Greenville, Miss., made an assignment, Dr. J. T. Atterbury, vice-president of the First National bank, of Greensville, being appointed as assignee. The failure of the bank, it is said, was due to drafts going to protest in New York. Depositors, it is asserted, will be paid in full.

Drinks Carbolic Acid By Mistake.

Atlanta, Ga.—Mrs. Ellis Markles, of 264 Auburn avenue, died at the Grady hospital as the result of drinking carbolic acid from a bottle which she supposed contained lime water. She had recently purchased both at the same time, and got the bottles mixed. She was 24 years old and leaves a husbnd and two small children.

Police Charge on Moscow Mob.

Moscow.—Police with drawn swords charged a mob of 2,000 workmen yesterday, wounding many of them. The workmen refused to disperse when ordered and the police fired blank revolver shots at them. The mob stood firm, however, and the police charged, shattering it. There were no further disturbances.

No Fines Remitted.

Anniston, Ala.—Mayor Thomas E. Kilby has an enviable record thus far in his administration compared with former mayors of Anniston, and of other cities. This record is the fact that since assuming the reins of government on April 13 not one fine imposed by the recorder has been remitted.

No Changes in Cabinet.

Paris, France.—Rumors to the effect that there would be a rearrangement of the cabinet have brought out an authoritative statement that the portfolios will remain as at present until Premier Rouvier finally decides whether to retain the foreign office portfolio for himself or hand it over to another minister, which decision will not be arrived at for several days

Assistant Postmaster Arrested.

Hot Springs, Ark.—Postoffice inspectors Thursday caused the arrest of Assistant Postmaster J. S. McConnell on a charge of rifling registered mail. The inspectors state that McConnell admitted extracting money orders. The office has been under investigation since last winter when the disappearance of money orders was first reported.

Sixteen were Hurt in Coal Mine.

Iverness, B. C.—Sixteen men and boys employed in the coal mine of the Iverness Railway and Mining Company here were injured Thursday by an explosion of powder about 500 feet down the slope. The physicians say all will recover.

Spreading Rails Cause Wreck.

Flint, Mich.—Fast through train No. 3 on the Grand Trunk railroad, bound for Chicago from the east was wrecked Thursday about ten miles east of here near Davidson, by spreading rails. No one was killed. Mrs. Cora Waltrous, of Roxbury, Mass., was, it is thought, fatally injured and ten others were less seriously hurt. Three coaches were ditched.

Japan Orders More Cars.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Japanese government has placed with a Pittsburg car building company an order for 900 box cars for early delivery. This is supplemental to the order for $1,000 box and gondola cars placed a few days ago.

Bank President Indicted.

St. Paul, Minn.—Thomas B. Clements, who was president of the defunct First National bank of Fairbault, Minn., was indicated by the United States grand jury on twenty-seven counts, alleging embezzlement, misappropriation of funds and the making of false entries in the bank's books.

The schoolgirl who got married because she could not do her arithmetic lessons showed she knew how to add one, observes the Chicago Post.

A large crowd was in town, assembled about the court house and jail. Just before the execution the crowd was ordered to leave the court yard, which they did. There was no trouble. The prisoners were accompanied here by troop D cavalry, of Birmingham. The company returned to Birmingham at 3 o'clock.

Was an Outrageous Crime.

The crime for which Collier and Smith were convicted was the most outrageous that has ever [illegible] the annals of the criminal records of Alabama's fair history. Miss Bessie Bloodworth was a young lady in the prime of young womanhood, popular, beautiful, highly educated, refined, and a charming woman who had all of those graces and charms that go to make up the womanhood of this land of the free and the home of the brave.

On the afternoon of January 21 of the present year Miss Bloodworth went to her father's store on Second avenue in Decatur, to carry her father's supper, as was her custom. It was about 6 o'clock. Leaving her father's store she crossed the street, going over to T. D. Wilkin's, where she telephoned to her mother, "I am coming home at once." As she passed out the door a little negro girl, who nurses for Mrs. Wilkinson, was sitting in the door. "Ain't you afraid to go home by yourself Miss Bessie?" said this girl. "Yes, it is rather late and rather dark," said Miss Bloodworth. This is perhaps the last words that ever came from her lips, unless she uttered a prayer thinking it might bring her assistance.

Failed to Reach Home.

At 8 o'clock Miss Bloodworth had failed to reach home. Her parents became uneasy and a search was at once instituted. About 10 o'clock that night the lifeless body of the young lady was found in an alley in the rear of Colonel Dick Adams' residence, within less than two blocks of the young lady's residence. Her body was covered with blood and mud, her clothing badly torn and cut by a most ugly character were found on her person.

Near by the scene of the crime was found a bloody stick of stove wood which gave the evidence of the three licks on the young ladys skull which caused her death. Lying near [illegible] was discovered to Miss Bloodworth's [illegible] was sprinkled over the face and bloody finger [illegible] and on the fence. Assistance [illegible] was absolutely necessary for the officers to work on.

ROPE SLIPPED ON SMITH.

Murderers of Miss Blood Protest Innocence, as Did Slayer of Officer Steele.

John Collier and were hanged Friday of Miss Belle Blood- Jackson was hanged Sanitary Officer E were placed on 1:58. The drop fell at 1:10 the attend- pronounced Collier and death being due to rope on Smith's neck to the balcony. Upon leaving the "I am free. I am cause vengeance to people for my death.' their innocence her confessed religion considerably be Collier said: to my God; they on which to con Rev. T. H. Hem and Rev. were their spiritual Smith was led back to the by the assistance of the three and when the drop fell the doc- pronounced his neck broken and dead at 1:25 p. m.

The bodies of Smith and Collier were shipped to Tennessee for burial. Jackson's body was buried in the jail yard. A large crowd was town, assembled about the court house and jail. The com- pany returned to Birmingham at 3 o'clock.

Was an Outrageous Crime.

The crime for which Collier and Jackson were convicted was the most brutal that has ever blotted the criminal records of Ala- bama's history. Miss Belle Blood- worth, a young lady in the prime of womanhood, popular, beau- tiful, educated, refined, and a host of friends who had all of those graces of character that go to make the noblest type of this land of the free and home of the brave.

On the afternoon of January 21 Miss Bloodworth left her father's store on Second avenue, as was her custom, at 6 o'clock. Leaving the store she crossed the street over to T. D. The scene of the crime was marked by a stick of stove wood and other evidence of the three fiendish men left the lady's skull which was crushed. Lying near by was a handkerchief belonging to Miss Bloodworth with blood spattered over the same and finger marks were plainly visible. Aside from this there was nothing for the officers to work on.

Some time during the day in his own mind Collier and Smith had planned the crime. He spoke to no one that he thought knew of the contemplated crime. This negro was well known all over the state of Alabama.

Important Discovery Made.

It was not until after the trial, while Mr. Heflin was preparing the case, B. M. Blood- worth, a brother of the young lady, whose home was walking one day in the vicinity of the mur- der when the lad discovered some- thing in a sink hole near by. Calling his father's attention to the matter the case was investigated and it was found that the object in the sink hole was a pair of bloody overalls. Upon examination it was found that the pockets of the overalls contained a small note book, bearing John Col- lier's name. Mr. Heflin caused the arrest of Collier. Collier was taken to a private office in the Morgan County National Bank building, where he was accused of the crime. Collier broke down when accused of the crime and said Harvey Smith was the guilty man, as Smith had told him that he had killed the young lady. Smith was then arrested, but would not talk.

Harvey Smith was convicted on May 3. John Collier was convicted on May 4. Will Jackson was convict- ed on May 5 and all three were sen- tenced on May 6—the date of the hanging being fixed at June 16th.

The evidence against these negroes although mostly circumstantial, was most conclusive. The strongest evi dence against Smith, and in a sense against Collier as well, was given by the 14-year-old son of Harvey Smith. He told how he went down town with his father that night and told their every movement until the time when they were in the store of T. D. Wilkinson while Miss Blood- worth was telephoning. He said his father was there, that John Collier was also there, that John Collier pre ceded the young lady when she left the store and that Smith followed her.

This boy also testified that he went home early that night and that his father came home late and was "blow- ing" when he came in.

Calf is Blown Over Fence Unhurt.

Girard, Ala.—Girard has been vis- ited by two severe rain, electrical and wind storms within the past two days, the second occurring early Friday morning. A good deal of damage was done in both Girard and Phenix City. Several houses were struck by lightning, many houses were blown down and several persons had narrow escapes from serious injury if not death.

A calf a year old was blown from one lot to another, over a fence, with out being hurt. Lightning played a number of queer freaks. The resi dence of Mr. Coursen ignited in two places, but was extinguished. Mrs Coursen was knocked down by the lightning, but got up and pluckily went about the work of extinguishing the fire.

Sentenced to Hang.

Birmingham, Ala.—In the criminal court Thursday Wesley Hale, a negro charged with the murder of Edward G. Almon, a young brakeman on the Louisville and Nashville railroad, at Oxmoor, several months ago, was tried and convicted, his punishment being fixed at death.

No Sympathetic Strike.

Birmingham, Ala.—W. R. Fairley Alabama member of the United Mine Workers of America, has announced that the rumors that there would be a sympathetic strike among the min ers working for the commercial coal companies was without ground. The scale committee of the convention made its report and the scale to be presented to the joint meeting of min- ers and operators has been adopted As is customary, the contents of the scale committee's report are usually kept quiet until presented to the joint meeting of miners and operators.

Will Maxwell Killed.

Adamsville, Ala.—Will Maxwell, a white man, was shot and killed by Marshal E. L. Taylor, of Adamsville late Thursday afternoon. About 6 o'clock the following telegram was sent to the sheriff's office by Marshal Taylor:

"I have shot and killed Will Max well. Have notified Deputy Sheriff Abernathy. Will give up at anytime."

Engineer Is Killed.

Mobile, Ala.—L. L. Pierce, of this city, in charge of a Louisville and Nashville wrecker, was instantly kill- ed Thursday by the overturning of the engine at Magazine Point, a few miles out of this city, while en route to clear the track near Pollard, Ala., where a Louisville and Nashville passenger train was wrecked without fatality.

ANOTHER WRECK

In Maryland Saturday Which is One of the Worst of the Season.

THIRTY KILLED AND INJURED.

Fatalities and Injuries Confined to Members of the Working Crew Returning Home.

Baltimore, Md.—At least eighteen persons are believed to have been killed and a score of more injured in a wreck on the Western Maryland railroad near Patapsco, a small sta- tion between Westminster and Finks- burg, Saturday evening. The fatali- ties and injuries were to the crews of the engine and to the workmen em- ployed by the railroad. Passenger train No. 5, westbound, was running at a high rate of speed when at the point named it crashed into a double- headed freight running east. All three of the engines were reduced to scrap iron, the express and baggage cars were smashed and a number of the freight cars were splintered. The pas- senger coaches sustained little injury, and almost without exception their oc cupants escaped with nothing worse than a bad shading up.

Had Been Clearing Away Wreck.

The workmen employed by the rail- road had been repairing the damages caused by a small freight wreck at Mount Hope station, near this city. They were on their way to their homes in small towns along the Western Maryland to spend Sunday. Not be- ing regular passengers they had boarded the baggage car and engine. When the crash came the more for- tunate, who were on the engine, jump- ed or were thrown from the train and were only slightly injured. Those in the baggage car were terribly man- gled, and the crews of all three en- gines were killed. Their bodies are all believed to be under the wreckage of the engines.

Just before the first relief train bringing injured to the hospital of this city left the scene, the wreckage be- gan to burn.

The first relief train to reach here brought eleven badly injured and one who had died on the trip.

The point at which the accident oc- curred is so situated that the news of the wreck was slow in reaching Balti- more. As soon as the news arrived the railroad company sent relief trains and as many physicians as could be gathered together.

An express following the freight acted as a relief from the other side, and the passengers on both trains gave every possible aid to the victims.

Not Known Who Is Responsible.

No one could be found Saturday night willing to say who was responsi- ble for the disaster. The fact that another schedule goes into effect to- morrow may have caused some con- fusion.

Brewer Guest of Honor.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Justice David J. Brewer, of the United States su- preme court, was the guest of the Chattanooga bar. An elaborate recep- tion was planned in his honor and the jurist shown over the Lookout Moun- tain, Chickamauga Park and other places of interest around the city. He will be the guest of Federal Judge C. D. Clarke.

Western Oil Was Cut Three Cents.

Independence, Kan.—The price of Western oil was cut 3 cents a barrel Saturday. The Standard Oil Company is now paying 50 cents a barrel for high-grade Kansas and Territorial oil and 5 cents less a barrel for each half degree of gravity under 32 down to 30 cents a barrel.

New York.—Mrs. William Jennings Bryan and Miss Bryan sailed for Europe Saturday on the steamer Vaderland.

Disastrous Cloudburst.

Buda Pest.—The eastern districts of the province of Szathmar have been devastated by a cloud burst. Homes were swept away and 111 lives lost. Crops were destroyed and railroad communicattion interrupted.

Man and Wife Killed by Train.

Bryan, O.—Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Brown, of Edgerton, were killed and horribly mangled, and Mrs. Rathburn was fatally injured Friday night by be- ing struck by the fast mail train on the Lake shore road near their home. They had stepped out of the way of a freight train and were hit by the mail train.

WASHINGTON CHOSEN

As the Place to Hold the Rus- sian-Japanese Peace Conference.

THEY MAY USE ENGLISH.

Armistice Will Be Signed on the Plains of Manchuria Equi-Distant Between the Armies.

Washington, D. C.—The American national capital has been selected as the seat of negotiations between the plenipotentiaries of Russia and Japan for a treaty of peace. The choice of Washington as the locattion of the peace conference marks another for- ward step in the negotiations toward the ultimate peace in the far east in- stituted by President Roosevelt.

Official announcement of the selec- tion of Washington was made by Sec- retary Loeb at the White House Fri- day. It was in typewritten form and read as follows:

"When the two governments were unable to agree upon either Chefoo or Paris, the president suggested The Hague, but both governments have now requested that Washington be chosen as the place of meeting and the president has accordingly notified both governments that Washington will be so selected."

May Adjourn from Washington.

This statement was supplemented shortly afterwards by a semi-official announcement that "after meeting and organizing, the plenipotentiaries of the two governments, if it should be found to be uncomfortably hot in Washington, may adjourn the meeting to some summer resort in the North and continue their sitting until such time as the weather in Washington shall be more comfortable."

Now that some of the details of the negotiations which have been proceed ing for more than two weeks are known, the selection of Washington is regarded as the only logical solu- tion of the problem presented to the belligerent governments.

After the acceptance by Russia and Japan of President Roosevelt's propo- sition that they consent to consider the question of peace, Russia indicat- ed Paris as the most desirable place for the meeting to negotiate a treaty, and Japan indicated Chefoo. There the subject rested for forty-eight hours. Finally Japan declined to con- sider Paris for obvious reasons, and Russia objected to the holding of the conference in any oriental city.

Japan Opposed to Paris.

He indicated that both for practical and sentimental reasons The Hague would be a most desirable place of meeting for the plenipotentiaries. Further consideration of the subject developed the practically unalterable objection of Japan to any European capital as a place. She objected to The Hague, saying it was too far with- in Russian influence, and for a simila: reason she declined favorably to con- sider Geneva.

Until today, however, Japan's irre- conciliable opposition to the selection of any European capital was not known definitely. At a conference which Kogoro Takahira, the Japanese minister, had with President Roose- velt, he conveyed to the president the Japanese refusal to consent to holding the conference in Paris.

Russian Ambassador Notified.

The refusal of Japan to agree to the holding of the conference in Europe was communicated by the president to the Russian ambassador and likewise cabled to St. Petersburg. While the president did not act in the capacity of arbiter between Russia and Japan, he was in a position after the confer- ence with Minister Takahira and his communication to Ambassador Cassini to formally announce the selection of Washington as the seat of the confer- ence.

In view of the selection of Washing- ton as the place for the conference it is expected that within a few days at most Russia and Japan will announce formally the names of their respective plenipotentiaries. It is deemed likely also that coincidentally with the announcement of the plenipotentiaries an agreement will be reached as to the time of holding the conference.

While the date is not so important a detail as the place, it is of particu- lar concern, especially at this season.

To Sign Armistice.

Alone on the plains of Manchuria midway between the two great armies the Russian and Japanese command- ers will meet to sign the armistice which will pave the way for the Wash- ington conference if the present ten- tative program is followed.

Exchanges on this point are now in progress between Tokio and St. Petersburg via Washington, but no final conclusion has been reached. It was first thought a preliminary pro- tocol might be signed at Washington pending a temporary cessation of hos- tilities, but in view of the fact that this concerns directly the armies in the field, it is believed the belliger- ents will agree that arrangements of the armistice be best entrusted to Linevitch and Oyama, the respective commanders-in-chief, who in such event would be telegraphed special powers to sign.

Will Be Headed by Nelidoff.

Prior to the signing of an armistice, however, will come the official an- nouncement of the Russian and Japan- ese plenipotentiaries. Russia has in- dicated that her mission will be head- ed by M. Nelidoff, the Russian am- bassador at Paris, and it is under- stood the Japanese emperor has re- quested Marquis Ito to head the Japanese mission.

Should M. Takahira be placed on the commission the chances are that M. Nelidoff will be accompanied by a second plenipotentiary from Russia and would be joined in Washington by Baron Rosen, the new Russian am bassador.

Neither country has suggested the names of the other plenipotentiaries nor has the number been agreed upon although the belief is that there will be three on a side. With Marquis Ito, it is believed, there will come an other great statesman of Japan, who has had wide diplomatic experience and Mr. Takahira, the Japanese min- ister, it is suggested here, may be named as the third plenipotentiary.

May Use English Language.

Another important detail which has been the subject of informal conversa tions at the White House is the lan guage to be used at the conference Russia will ask that the French lan guage be used. Japan will express a preference for English, and in recogni tion of the courtesies to be extended the plenipotentiaries by the Washing- ton government diplomatists believe that the English language will be usee jointly with French, the proceedings of the conference being recorded in both languages.

Hanking at Wetumpka.

Wetumpka, Ala.—Wilse Pugh wa hanged Friday at 10:30 o'clock in an improvised enclosure connected with the jail. He mounted the scaffold without a tremor and paid the penalty of his crime with a steady nerve The condemned man addressed those present for a few moments, admonish ing them to meet him in heaven where he declared he would soon be.

The crime for which Wilse Pugh paid the extreme penalty of the law was committed last fall near Jackson's Lake, where he shot to death his wife whom he had not seen for two years till a few minutes before the shooting

Drowned in the Warrior.

Jasper, Ala.—T. J. Davis was drown- ed in the Warrior river near Cordova Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock. Ac- cording to reports received here, Davis, in company with W. H. Parker and George Williams, was in a boat, and all the men are said to have been under the influence of whiskey. A row came up and it is reported that oars were used, the result being that Davis was thrown or knocked over- board and drowned. Coroner Moses Newburger went to Cordova in inves- tigate the affair, and it is probable that arrests will follow.

Life Sentence for Robbery.

Birmingham, Ala.—J. F. Latham has been found guilty in the criminal court of highway robbery as charged in the indictment and his punishment fixed at confinement in the state peni- tentiary for the term of his natural life.

First Boat for Weeks.

Selma, Ala.—The steamer "Hard Cash," the first boat on the Alabama river to come this far up in several weeks, reached here early Friday. The boat brought a good load of freight and a full passenger list and will regularly from now on ply up and down the Alabama river.

The "Hard Cash" is owned by Win- ston Jones, of Mobile, and heretofore has been running on the Tombigbee river. A few days ago it was decided by her owner to put the "Hard Cash" on the Alabama river for the purpose of fighting the alleged combination that had been formed by the other steamers which had been running on the Alabama.

Dwelling Burned.

Florence, Ala.—The two-story frame dwelling house of W. F. Givens, near Hope, this county, was burned Friday, together with the barn and smoke house. The contents of the barn and smoke house were all consumed in the flames and only a small amount of furniture was rescued by the family and neighbors. Mr. Givens carried $1,100 with the Dillard Insurance Company, of this city.

If Davy Jones had claimed the bones of John Paul, this rising cloud of doubt as to their present whereabouts would never have appeared, and the great naval hero's fame would shine as bright and last as long. On one point both parties to the controversy agree—John Paul Jones is dead, comments the Portland Oregonian.

WHEN WE TWO WALKED IN ARCADY.

When we two walked in Arcady
How sweet the summers were!
How thick the branches overhead,
How soft the grass beneath our tread,
And thickets where the sun burned red
Were full of wings astir, my dear.
When we two walked in Arcady
Through paths young hearts prefer.

Since we two walked in Arcady
(How long ago it seems!)
High hopes have died disconsolate;
The calm-eyed angel men call Fate
Stands with drawn sword before the gate
That shuts out all our dreams, my dear;
Since we two walked in Arcady
Beside the crystal streams.

Beyond the woods of Arcady
The little brooks are dry,
The brown grass rustles in the heat,
The roads are rough beneath our feet,
Above our heads no branches meet,
And yet, although we sigh, my dear,
Beyond the woods of Arcady
We see more of the sky!

"How the Ghost Was Laid."

By Mary Kyle Dallas.

"I cannot marry you," she said, "I am afraid. You laugh at me, and talk about superstition, but Dick Pardon has kept his word twice, and he will keep it again. When I, a girl of seventeen who was not able to control her feelings, refused him with scorn and contempt, asking him how he dared to speak such words to me, his master's daughter, he caught me by the wrist and looked into my face as no one had ever looked before. 'Avis Shaw,' he said, 'you're proud and airish, and you refuse to marry me because I am one of your father's hands, but you'll rue the day you spoke such words to me. I understand I can't get you, but no other man shall.' Living or dead, I will stand between you and every man that comes near you. Living or dead, Avis Shaw, I'll have my revenge!'

"Well, I thought nothing of his threats. I told my father that Dick had asked me to marry him, and he dismissed him. From that time forth every young man who offered me any attention was set upon and beaten or shot at, or in some way injured on his way home from our house.

"At last Hall Grayson, the young lawyer, was killed. That was two years before you came here. The poor young man was not in love with me—his business was with my father; but you know how country folk gossip and pair people off. He was stabbed in the back, and this time the men of the village caught the wretch red-handed. They were carrying him to jail when he escaped from them, led them a chase for miles, and ended it by jumping from the cliff near Hunters Hole into the sea. By the time the inspector and the rest of them got to the edge of the cliff the body of the murderer had disappeared.

"But, Raymond, Dick Pardon had said that he would carry out his revenge, alive or dead, and, though every one thought that with his drowning my troubles would end, it has not proved so. No one can come to our house in a way that makes it appear that the object is my society but he is warned away. If he does not take the warning he is shot at by some one he cannot see.

"As I did not care for any of the men who came to see me, I made up my mind to endure my fate calmly; but now—"

Here the poor girl burst into tears, and her lover caught her hands and pressed them to his lips.

"If you love me, no man shall part us, Avis," he said; "and as for the ghost of your murderous farm hand, I'll exorcise him if he attempts to frighten me."

"Papa likes you," said Avis, "but we feel the tales you and all reasonable people laugh at are not mere superstitious fancies, and because we both like you so much he joins me in begging you never to come to Shaw farm again."

"Nevertheless, I shall come," said Raymond, "so expect me whenever I can get here."

"If you come I will not see you," said Avis, in a terror-stricken voice. "I will not lead the man I love to his doom: I will never marry you. Leave me, I pray, and never see me more."

Raymond Bell answered by a look which needed no interpretation, and kissed her tenderly.

It is strange how much men can forgive in women they truly love. If any other person in the world had expressed belief in such an absurd superstition, his derision would have been so great as to blot out all respect for that individual; but Avis could do no wrong in Raymond Bell's eyes. After all, he thought, her anxiety for him was proof of her love. Thinking thus he passed a little stone house by the roadside which was said to be haunted by the ghost of Dick Pardon, and paused a moment to look at it.

It was evening, and stars were in the sky, but it was a moonless night. The ruinous little building was covered with ivy, and so dilapidated that tall weeds grew within the almost roofless walls; but as Raymond stood loking at it he saw a strange blue light begin to glow in its lower windows, and in the midst of the radiance stood a tall figure draped in white, who for a moment lifted his arm with a warning gesture.

Gripping his walking stick, the young man dashed toward the window; but suddenly reflecting that as the seeming ghost was probably a human being bent on mischief, and that he was unarmed save for the stick which he carried in his hand, he resolved that it would not be wise to expose himself further. Consequently he passed on, but, turning to look back, saw once more the strange appearance, this time at an upper window.

Again the hand menaced, again the figure faded, and this time Raymond was angry at himself for feeling certain of those chills and thrills which the most sensible of us have at times experienced. A laugh drove them away, and coming to the open doors of a smithy, he walked in among the men who were watching the proprietor as he shoed a restive horse.

"Good evening," he said. "I want half a dozen men and boys to come with me to the old stone house on Mr. Shaw's farm. Some idiot is playing ghost up there with blue lights and a white sheet, and I'm raising an army to put an end to his capers."

The loungers looked at Raymond while he spoke; the smith finished his job in silence. Then lifting his head, he spoke gravely:

"You're Mr. Bell, the architect that has come down to build the church, I believe!"

"I am, Mr. Jones," replied Raymond.

"Glad to know you, sir," said the blacksmith; "but I'm sorry to say that you are wrong in your idea about what is seen—what even some here have seen in the old stone house on Shaw's place. It's a real apparition, that is no trickster's work whatever.

"Nevertheless I desire to enlist my army. I offer a sovereign to every recruit," said Raymond.

But, despite this offer, not a soul would accompany him to the stone house, and he was obliged to give up his plan for that occasion.

On the following Sunday evening, just as twilight fell, everyone in the village saw the young architect take his way along the road to the Shaw farm. There, upon the porch, old Mr. Shaw met him and shook his hand kindly.

"Avis is not here," he said. "Of course I know what has passed between you, and I like you. I should be delighted to welcome you as a son-in-law, but what folks say is too true for that, for your own sake, young man, you'd better give up all idea of her."

"I will never do that, sir," said Raymond.

He talked a little while to Mr. Shaw, allowed the shadows to gather ere he bade him adieu, and walked slowly down the road.

It was not a very clear night, but the moon now scudded through the clouds piled white and high. In her light the old stone house was plainly visible, and once again he saw the vision that had affrighted so many of the villagers, the shrouded figure surrounded by blue light, the hand lifted in warning.

On the instant he drew a pistol from his pocket, took aim at the lifted arm, and fired.

As he did so out of the bushes sprang six stout men, employes of the village brewery, armed and bearing lanterns.

Headed by Raymond, they dashed into the old house, and the lights they bore revealed the figure of a man lying on the floor beneath the broken casement at which the ghost had appeared. A white sheet had fallen to the ground, a lantern with blue glasses lay beside it. The man was senseless.

"Your bullet hit the mark, Mr. Bell," said one of the brewers; "you've done for him."

"And, by the Lord Harry, it is Dick Pardon himself," said another.

"I thought so," said Raymond. "The man did not jump into the sea; he contrived to secrete himself among the rocks, and has been playing ghost ever since, hiding here, probably."

This proved to be true, for Pardon before he died made a full confession, and a little while later Avis Shaw became the bride of the ghost-layer.—New York News.

Where Silence Is Really Golden.

This story from the Kansas City Star is told as being illustrative of the absolute silence and loneliness of the typical Australian bush camp:

Two men were camping together, but rarely exchanged a word.

One morning one of the men remarked at breakfast, "Heard a cow bellow in the swamp just now."

Nothing further was said and they went about their business for the rest of the day. Twenty-four hours later, once more at breakfast, the second man said, "How d' you know it wasn't a bull?"

Again no comment. Again a pause of twenty-four hours. Next morning the first man began to pack up his "billy" and "swag."

"You going?" inquired the other.

"Yes."

"Why?"

"Because," said his friend, "there's too much argument in this camp!"

"Turned Down."

The American editor uses some variation of the formula, "Declined with thanks." The French editor's phrase is "Impossible—mille regrets." What does the Chinese editor say about the MS. he is returning? asks the Boston Transcript.

"We have read it with infinite delight. By the holy ashes of our ancestors we swear that we have never seen so superb a masterpiece. His majesty the emperor, our exalted master, if we were to print it, would command us to take it as a model and never publish anything of a less striking quality. As we could not obey this order more than once in ten thousand years, we are compelled to send back your divine manuscript, and beg a thousand pardons."

Coming American Type

By Edward Meyer.

I MAINTAIN that the typical American beauty [is] the beauty of the world) is a brunette. I [will] further and to prove by the following historical [facts] the future American girl will be an extreme [type] the brunette. In proof of this I shall cite the [case]

In the seventeenth century Christopher Meyer [and his] wife came from Palantinate, Prussia, and penetrated [the] trod forests of Pennsylvania, where they built [their] cabin home—the first touch of civilization in [that] Christopher Meyer was a blonde, of not extraordinary stature, wife. They spread the glories of the New World among the [people] the sea. The result was the immediate emigration of hundreds of this new home, which Christopher Meyer named "Muhlbach" (now [Lehigh] county, Pa.). The point I want to make here is that all these Germans were pronounced blondes, with blue eyes and flaxen hair. From [then] down through the centuries this colony of first settlers [has] They have been loyal to each other, and have never married into the nationalities who came later. Now, here I want to emphasize point I is this: My forefathers (Christopher Meyer was my direct ancestor) [were] blondes. Today the sixth and seventh generations are nearly all brunettes, with black hair end eyes. What has caused the change? [Climate] I, for one thing; secondly, freedom—freedom of mind and soul [from] working toward the ideal—namely, brunette type.

Another remarkable thing is this: Our race has grown [taller]. My ancestor, Christopher Meyer, was a man of ordinary height, [while] ation is a race of giants ranging from 6 feet to 6 feet 6 inches in [height] self being 6 feet 2 1-2 inches. This characteristic increase of [height] able throughout central Pennsylvania; all the boys and girls [are] to manhood and womanhood are growing taller than their parents' [average] and their complexion is darkening. I predict that the [average] a hundred years from now will be a magnificent creation [in] height, perfectly formed, with black hair, black eyes, a [complexion] dian bronze in color, features strong, clean cut, classical—[the] work of the Divinity since the Garden of Eden—and a brunette.

The Want of Hospitality

By Charles Mark

WHEN the at home day is at an end, and the [question] has been given, who has really benefited by [the] servances? No one to whom a good meal would [have] come boon has been fed; in fact, nobody has. [Everybody] A little gossip has gone round, the shortcomings [of] vants have been discussed, and the children [have] each visitor leaves, little remarks have been [made] ably regretted later—but the faults of our [friends] are so temptingly patent to all the world. Ah—[who] can any one say that the real hand of friendship is held out? No [one] ency is to acquaintance only. The limited time, the ceaseless [comings] goings, preclude anything like friendship.

If there still remains with us the duty of taking an [interest] blessed with worldly goods than ourselves, we have a vast [field] charity unconnected with any subscription list.

The exercise of a more extended and liberal hospitality [towards] who have not the means to enjoy little luxuries in their own [homes] much to lessen the enforced sordidness of the lives of many. [The] constant appeals from so many large institutions naturally [appeal] charity, yet without apparently curtailing these responses, [there] out much self-denial, numberless gentlewomen who feel the [pinch] poverty, but hide it so bravely, might thankfully accept the [kindness] fered by those known to them, without losing their cherished [independence]

We confidently hoped that we could at this meeting report our building at least commenced. But we then reported that the only obstacle in our way was that the $40,000 balance due from the Rouss estate was hung up by an attachment gotten out by the former secretary and superintendent, J. C. Underwood, in the suit he had instituted against the C. M. A., in the United States court at Brooklyn, N. Y., for the alleged commissions due him. We regret to have to report now that this same obstacle still exists.

Delayed by Suits.

Despite our earnest efforts to get a trial of this suit, we were not able to do so until February last, and then, to our great surprise and that of our able counsel, the jury gave a verdict for about $16,000 against us. Regarding this verdict as very unjust, our counsel took an appeal to a higher court, and are very confident that they will be able to set the verdict aside. But we have to encounter once more "the law's delays," and meantime the Rouss estate is inhibited by the attachment proceedings from paying us the balance of the $40,000 due, or any part of it.

Report of Executive Committee.

Following the report of the Board of Trustees of the Memorial, the report of the Executive Committee was made.

Women to Build Davis Monument.

"The work of erecting a monument to our great president, Jefferson Davis, has been turned over to the women of the South, and we will now have a report showing what these great and good women have done for the cause."

The report of Mrs. N. V. Randolph, president of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, was then read. It showed that $69,000 has been raised and is now in hand.

"The monument is an assured fact and will be unveiled in Richmond on June 3, 1907," the report stated, and the reader was interrupted by a strain of applause. The report was received and filed amid enthusiasm. Gen. Lee paid a high tribute to the women and the work they have done in such a good and noble cause.

Gen. Lee Wanted No Controversies.

"A man named Miles is having a controversy with our own Mrs. Jefferson Davis and we want to express our condemnation of that man and his action," said a grizzled, bearded veteran from Texas.

"No, we must enter into no controversy," said Gen. Lee. "We must not go into politics and there must be no stirring up of such things." Gen. Lee's remarks were received with approval and the man who had made the motion sat down.

The Memorial Exercises.

Dr. Jones, the chaplain general, presided at the memorial exercises. In opening them he said he would not even mention the names of those who died during the past year, as they are too well known. He mentioned the names of Gen. Bates and Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, and then asked the Rev. Dr. N. M. Woods, of Louisville, a Confederate soldier, to open the exercises with prayer. The convention stood while Dr. Woods asked God's blessing on the old soldier who are so near the life's journey end.

Elect Old Officers.

The United Confederate Veterans re-elected their old officers as follows:

Commander-in-Chief, Lieutenant General Stephen D. Lee.

Commander Trans-Mississippi Department, General W. L. Cabell, Texas.

Commander Army of Tennessee Department, General Clement A. Evans, Georgia.

Commander Army of North Virginia Department, C. Irving Walker, South Carolina.

The nominations were made by acclamation, although there was an attempt to defeat the re-election of General Cabell. Post No. 2, of Texas, entered a protest to the re-election of General Cabell, saying that he was not the unanimous choice of the Texas delegation, but the protestor was hooted down and three cheers given for "Old Tige" Cabell while the secretary recorded the election of the old Texan.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session began at 3:15 o'clock with the convention hall only about half filled. The first thing was the address by Gen. N. E. Harris. It was the regular annual address which is always delivered by some Confederate.

"The convention will come to order," said Gen. Lee, rapping on the table. "I am sorry that so few persons are here to listen to this address. Those who are not here will be the losers."

"That is right," called out a Georgian who belonged to the camp of the speaker.

"We will now have the annual address," continued Gen. Lee. "It will be delivered by a man who was with Gen. Morgan and it will be worthy the careful attention of the delegates. I now take pleasure in introducing to you Gen. Nat E. Harris, of Macon, Ga.

Gen. Harris was received with a burst of applause, and the sentiment expressed by him woke up the veterans, who cheered him to the echo. The speaker painted a picture of the battle of the post, with the soldiers in line of battle and the famous generals in command. He said he could see them as they stood waiting for the signal to fire. As he named the men who are loved by the South the convention expressed by their voices their great affection for these dead heroes. Mr. Harris is an orator and made a magnificent and eloquent address, discussing the causes of the war.

Wanted More Speech.

"We've got half an hour yet, and we would like to hear you," said a delegate. Gen. Harris yielded to the demand and continued his speech, telling of the burning of a city and the extinguishing of it by a storm of water from the heavens.

Sleeping as sweetly as if he had been in his bed at home, a one-legged Confederate sat on the stage during the address, enjoying life. He was dreaming of the days of the war, and when touched by a comrade he almost climbed over one of the press tables. He said he was dreaming of a battle in which he had fought and thought some one was cutting at him with a saber.

Gen. Harris closed after speaking for more than two hours, and he and his wife were congratulated by those of the veterans who could reach him on the stage.

"Order! Come to order!" We have business before us," said Gen. Lee, rapping with his gavel. After order had been restored, Gen. A. B. Booth was introduced, and on behalf of New Orleans invited the veterans to meet them next year. He read a number of inducements which have been offered by the mayor and common council of New Orleans. As he began to speak there were cries of:

"New Orleans! New Orleans! We want to go there next time!"

New Orleans an Easy Winner.

Gen. Booth then read an invitation from the governor of Louisiana to meet in New Orleans in 1906. He spoke only a few minutes, and when he said: "Good!" He was hot and dry and wanted to get away.

Miss Louise Blanchard sang "Dixie," and if there had been any doubt about where the convention would go, this settled it for good and all, for the old soldiers simply went wild over the young girl who was singing to them.

"I move we make the selection of New Orleans unanimous," said a delegate, but Gen. George W. Gordon, of Nashville, insisted upon being allowed to speak, and Gen. Lee required silence when Gen. Gordon spoke.

He extended a hearty invitation to the veterans to meet in Nashville in 1906, and introduced G. H. Baskette, editor of the Nashville Banner, who seconded the nomination of Nashville and gave reasons why that city should be selected as the next meeting place.

Dr. W. J. McMurray seconded the nomination of Nashville and Gov. Jones, of Arkansas, seconded the nomination of New Orleans. Texas seconded the nomination of New Orleans, and when Gen. Lee called on all those in favor of New Orleans to stand up it seemed that the whole convention rose as one man. Later a motion was made to make the selection of New Orleans unanimous, and this was called.

Alabamians in Line.

Raphael Semmes Camp, of Mobile, led the Alabama division, which was commanded by Gen. George P. Harrison. E. K. Jones Camp, Huntsville, was in second place, and then came Camp Hutto, of Jasper, the members of this organization being few in numbers but old in years. The average age of the twelve members of this camp is beyond the four score mark, the oldest being 96, while the youngest is 74. The Fourth brigade, of Anniston, was the last of the Alabamians in line.

Plaudits for Gen. Lee.

His form as erect and his carriage as perfect as it was when he first entered the army of the South so many years ago, looking every inch the soldier in his gray uniform, the commanding general of these veterans, Gen. Stephen D. Lee, stood in the center of the gathering and received the plaudits of the throng which could not cheer him enough. This same man delivered an address in defense of the South and the cause for which it fought that was a masterpiece.

Old Friends Meet.

The scenes at the meetings between some were full of pathos. At the Seventh street station there was a meeting between a man who fought in the Tenth Tennessee and another who went to the front in one of the Virginia regiments. Neither had seen the other since the surrender at Appomattox. One was without an arm, and the other had lost an eye. The trains bearing the two arrived at the station at about the same time, and they met at the gate. The recognition was instantaneous. They forgot all else, dropped their baggage and were in each other's arms in a second, while great tears rolled down their cheeks. "A drink of water from that man's canteen saved my life at Richmond," remarked the soldier from Tennessee, and arm in arm they strode up the street to live over again those old days.

All in Good Humor.

Then there was the amusing side to the scene. Many of the old veterans were in fine humor, despite their long ride, and when they reached the station platform they stretched their legs in a fashion that indicated they had lost none of their nimbleness. The old "rebel yell" resounded through the building, and many a citizen was greeted with a "Hi there, Yank," as they marched up the street. But everybody was in good humor with himself and his fellowman, and the jibes and "kids" were taken good naturedly by everyone.

All Had Mementoes.

Nearly every veterans brought with him some memento of the war to show to some comrade and he always had its history at his fingers' ends and one did not need to urge him to get the story. An old fellow from North Carolina brought along half a cannon ball which he had picked up on the field of Lookout mountain after the batter. He has retained it all these years and never fails to take it to a reunion.

The most notable relic of all was the sword said to have been worn by Gen. John H. Morgan, Kentucky's noted cavalry leader. It was in the possession of Capt. Patrick M. Griffin, of Company B, Tenth Tennessee infantry, of Nashville. It came into his possession at Nashville Monday night. He secured it from Samuel Holt, a union veteran, who found it in the possession of a negro, who said he secured it from his father, who was Gen. Morgan's cook. Capt. Griffin gave $100 for the sword, and if it is found to be genuine he proposes to give it to the Kentucky Confederates of Morgan's men in this state. The sword appears to be genuine, and is in an excellent stage of preservation. On the scabbard is engraved: "Presented to Gen. John H. Morgan by the Lexington Rifles, 1861." It is gold mounted and at the end of the handle is a golden eagle.

Other veterans brought old pistols, guns, bullets, broken shells, and in fact almost every conceivable object that could possibly be used in a war of extermination.

Where They Met.

Under a canopy of crimson symbolic of blood shed by the men of the South for the cause which they believed to be right, the surviving soldiers who followed the stars and bars of the Confederacy gathered Wednesday in fifteenth annual reunion. With the gentle and kindly face of their old leader, Robert E. Lee, looking down on them from the end of the hall, and about them the flags for which they fought, the gray-aired and glay-clad veterans of the Confederacy came together for another renewal of old friendships, and to further signalize the glory of the South.

Their number woefully diminished, but their spirit undismayed; their strength weakened, but their wills unconquered, they took off their old army hats, waved them about their heads, and cheered for the South and the men who made her famous to all the world. The "rebel yell" sounded once more. That yell, which came to be feared by their enemies, now meant no animosity, no feeling but reverence, and no defiance but to age and the ravages of time.

"Dixie's" Words Not Changed.

"Shall we change the words of Dixie," said Gen. Lee.

"No, no, never, don't change the old words, let it stay as it is," yelled the veterans with one voice.

Gen. George P. Harrison, of Alabama, chairman of the Committee on Dixie, reported against, making any change in the words of the famous song and the report was adopted by acclamation.

Ex-Gov. Fleming, of Florida, chairman of the Resolution Committee, made his report. The first resolution condemned war and expressed the hope that universal peace shall prevail. Another resolution called on the camps to have each member write a brief sketch of his life and deeds during the war. The third resolution urged the appropriation by Southern states of sufficient money for the erection of monuments in public battlefield parks.

Gen. A. P. Stewart Sends Greeting.

Borden Springs, Ala., June 15, 1905.—Gen. William E. Mickle, Chief of Staff, U. C. V. Convention, Louisville, Ky: My most grateful acknowledgements to the convention for their very kind message which is a great comfort to me. I am happy to say my health improves and I have in the good providence of God a fine prospect of recovery. My cordial, heartfelt greeting to the old soldiers. No truer men walk this earth.

ALEX. P. STEWART.

The following telegram of greeting from the Pacific coast to the United Confederate Veterans was received last night, addressed to Gen. William E. Mickle, the adjutant general:

Greetings from Albert Sidney Johnston Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy of San Francisco, and a cordial invitation to attend convention on October 3.

ANNIE B. VOORHIES.

Sons of Veterans Elect Officers.

The apparent lethargy that characterized the first day's session of the convention of the United Sons of Confederate Veterans had no part in the last session. The silence that grew monotonous under the reading of long reports on Wednesday gave way to the wildest enthusiasm Thursday and the old building fairly shook with the shouts that shot up from the pit to the dome. The sponsors and maids of honor who accompanied the Sons to the city occupied seats on the stage and in the boxes, while many of Louisville's fairest daughters swelled the audience in the main auditorium.

The first outburst from the sons and daughters was due to the appearance of a delegation of Confederate Veterans, consisting of Gen. I. C. Walker, of Charleston, S. C.; Col Bennett H. Young, of Louisville; and Capt. William T. Ellis, of Owensboro. No sooner had it been announced by Commander Tisdal that these veterans were in the hall and that addresses would be made by them than a tremendous yell went up. The demonstration was kept up for some minutes after the delegation had been seated on the stage. It was soon realized that all efforts toward transaction of business would have to be put aside until the three representatives of the lost cause had been heard from.

Mr. Owen By Acclamation.

There was little time wasted in the election of officers for the ensuing year. All were elected by acclamation, there being no opposition for any office. C. J. Owen, of Anniston, Ala., placed the name of Thomas M. Owen of Montgomery, Ala., before the convention for the office of commander-in-chief. He paid a high compliment to the fitness of his candidate for the position. The nomination was seconded by Thomas P. Stone, of Texas, delegations for other states joining in to make the election unanimous. After the adjutant general had cast the entire vote of the convention for Thomas M. Owen, he was declared elected. Thomas P. Stone, of Waco, Texas; R. B. Horton, of St. Louis, and W. McL. Fayssoux, of New Orleans, were appointed a committee to escort the newly elected commander-in-chief to the platform, where he made a short speech in recognition of the honor. He said he was greatly touched by the honor conferred upon him by the Sons of Veterans. Said he:

"I propose to put my whole energy in the work of carrying forward our banner to more glorious success and achievements. We must keep the beacon brightly burning before the coming generations. This organization is a business one. We must do as well as be enthusiastic. I propose to go home and go to work. We must pledge ourselves to maintain the honor of the old soldier."

Other officers were chosen by acclamation, as follows:

Department Commander of Army Northern Virginia, E. Leslie Spence, of Richmond, Va.; Department of Army of Tennessee, R. L. E. Bynum, of Jackson, Tenn; Department of Trans-Mississippi, I. J. Stockett, of Tyler, Texas. R. E. L. Bynum was re-elected to the office of department commander of the Army of Tennessee. I. J. Stockett, who was chosen to succeed C. A. Skeen as commander of Trans-Mississippi department is the retiring adjutant general of the United Sons of Confederate Veterans.

The Last Day.

Beneath the shot-riddled battle flags that floated over many a sodden field and to the thrilling strains of "Dixie," the song that cheered them on to victory, the veterans who wore the gray marched Friday in proud review before thousands of people gathered in Kentucky's chief city to do them honor.

Bowed with age and mingling the scars of battle with the marks of time and conclous, perhaps, that for many of their number this would be the last review, the veterans donned their uniforms, unfurled their banners and with heads erect as years would permit, "fell in," ready to take their part in the last event of the fifteenth annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans.

There was not much in the way of formation and order in the line as far as the old boys were concerned, but they marched with sparkling eyes to the old tunes, and heard the same cheers that have stirred their blood annually since the reunions became a part of life in the South. Many of the captured battle flags, recently returned by the government were carried in Friday's parade and were the objects of interest and veneration.

Three Veterans Overcome.

The temperature was near the 80 mark, and John Cocke, of Lawrenceburg, Ky.; J. B. Allen, of Virginia, and William Potter, of Nashville, were overcome and taken to hospitals.

The parade, which formed at First and Main streets, was in three grand divisions, comprising the Trans-Mississippi department, the department of North Virginia and the department of the Army of Tennessee, Col. Bennett H. Young, commander of the Kentucky division, was the chief marshal and the following were in command of the three divisions:

Gen. W. L. Cabell, Texas, the Trans-Mississippi department; Gen. C. Irving Walker, South Carolina, the department of Northern Virginia; Gen. Clement A. Evans, the Army of Tennessee.

At the head of the column as special guests of the reunion, rode Gen. Joe Wheeler, in citizen dress, and Jefferson Hayes Davis, grandson of the president of the Confederacy. They were escorted by Wheeler's cavalry. Next came the commander-in-chief, Gen. Stephen D. Lee, and staff. The distinguished leader was cheered at every turn. The commander's immediate escort was the Columbus Rifles, from the general's home city, Columbus, Miss., and then followed carriages containing Miss Carrie Peyton Wheeler, sponsor for the South, and her maids of honor.

Indian Girl Is Maid of Honor.

The Indian Territory division, commanded by Gen. John L. Galt, was also small in numbers. In the sponsor's carriage was an Indian girl, acting as maid of honor, and she attracted general attention.

Alabama Departments.

Washington, D. C.—Capt. John C. Goodfellow, artillery corps, is detailed to attend the encampment of the organized militia of the state of Alabama from June 15 to August 1.

The salary of the postmaster at Marion has been increased from $1,600 to $1,700 and that of the postmaster at Tuskegee decreased from $1,900 to $1,600 per annum.

Rural routes ordered established August 15: Bango, Blount county, routes 1 and 2, population 732, houses 103; Blountsville, Blount county, route 1, population 404, houses 101; Columbia, Houston county, route 3, population 481, houses 107; Gum Springs, Blount county, route 1, population 480, houses 119.

Fourtsen Injured.

Birmingham, Ala.—A collision at a crossing occurred Friday morning shortly before 6 o'clock between the regular Boyles employes' accommodation train, engine No. 810, of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, and engine No. 1096 of the Central of Georgia.

Fourteen workmen on the Boyles train were more or less injured, but no one was killed or fatally hurt.

The accident took place at East Birmingham at the point where the tracks of the two roads intersect.

Fire at Tallassee.

Tallassee, Ala.—Thursday night about 11:30 the church bell began to toll sounds of distress and the city of Tallassee had to pass through what every town has to witness without fire protection. The beautiful two-story building, hall and store house of Postmaster W. M. Leavy, situated in the southwestern part of town was totally destroyed. The origin of the fire is unknown. Loss about $1,400; insurance, $750.

Has Fingers Mashed Off.

Anniston, Ala.—D. T. Smith has happened to two very singular and painful accidents lately. While handling lumber at Kaplan's new building one of the fingers of his left had were crushed off. Tuesday afternoon he was watching men load ice at the factory, and thoughtlessly rested hi left hand on the ice slide when a big block of ice came along and mashed off another finger of the same hand.

St. Petersburg.—It is probable no successor to Grand Duke Alexis, who resigned his position as high admiral of the navy Thursday will be appointed, and that the affairs of his department will be entrusted to a responsible ministry likewise of the war office. Both departments will come under the proposed committee of national defense, which will be headed by one of the grand dukes or by the emperor personally.

Shot from Ambush.

Luverne, Ala.—Telephonic news has just reached here that Dr. Joseph Merrill, a prominent young physician of Dozier, this county, a station on the Central railroad, was shot from ambush Thursday night. He was shot a shotgun loaded with bird shot and the shot entered the right side. The wound is painful, but not regarded as fatal. No clew as to the person who attempted to take his life.

Fire in Tuscaloosa.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—Quite a disastrous fire occurred here Thursday. The residence of Mr. Chitwood near the Alabama Great Southern was completely destroyed before any assistance could be rendered by the fire department. Mr. Chitwood was fortunate in saving a large part of his furniture, however, with the help of friends who were on hand. The properly was owned by Mr. J. Luther Foster.

Mutiny on Italian Bark.

Mobile, Ala.—Thursday night Lieutenant Brockway, of the United States revenue cutter Winona, was summoned by the captain of the Italian bark Stella B, lying in the river, to quell a mutiny. He went aboard the bark with an armed squad, arrested the mutineers and lodged them in jail here to await a trial by a United States commissioner.

Dies on Train.

Troy, Ala.—Trying to wake up a dead man to collect his fare was the unusual experience of a conductor on the Alabama railroad train Thursday. The conductor was Capt. E. L. Persons, of the Central of Georgia train running from Columbus to Andalusia, Ala., and the passenger was a man by the name of Crawford, living at Host, Ala., near Brantley.

HABEAS CORPUS AGAIN.

Habeas corpus proceedings were brought several days ago by R. H. Knox, acting as attorney for Lawrence Foshee (col.) before Justice Dake, which were resisted by Attorney J. O. Middleton, who represented the respondents, on the ground of their illegality, etc., and the case was continued by the justice. In the meantime Attorney Middleton went before Circuit Judge Brewer and had "rule nisi" issued against Knox, Dake and Knox's client, also the negro who the justice had appointed special constable. This action of Mr. Middleton's compels them all to desist from further proceedings in the case, and to appear at the next term of Circuit Court to show cause why a "writ of prohibition" should not be issued against them. Mr. Middleton is making his mark in his profession, and is to be complimented on the success of his efforts to prevent the use of this grand old bulwark of our liberties in illegal or frivolous cases.

AT LAST.

On the 15th inst. was incorporated the "Chilton Warehouse and Manufacturing Company," with factory and office at Clanton. The company can conduct a general fertilizer business, general warehouse, cotton factory, oil mill, cotton gin, electric plant and railroad, especially between Clanton and Maplesville, acquire and deal in real estate of all kinds, run commissary stores and buy and sell merchandise. Capital stock $30,000 in 1,200 shares of $25 each, of which 749 shares are sold, leaving 451 shares which are held in the treasury for sale to our farmers, if they wish to purchase, but applications for the stock are coming in all the time, and those that wish to become shareholders will have to make up their minds quickly. The officers for the first year are: Moses Robinson, President; L. H. Reynolds, Secretary-Treasurer; G. T. McElderry, General Manager. Directors, W. H. Conway, J. W. Sorrell, Moses Robinson, L. H. Reynolds, W. I. Mullins, W. M. Wilson and G. T. McElderry. It is a limited liability association, the shares being non-assessable after being paid up. The vote as to the location of the plant was for Clanton, despite the big bonus offered by Thorsby, the joint committee evidently thinking that Clanton was the ideal location. The company has purchased the McMorries property (about 4 acres) for $2,600.00, which lays west of the L. and N. R. R. and depot and will immediately start the building.

FOURTH OF JULY.

We understand that the committee on arrangements have got together at last and are formulating a plan for a big affair. Sec. J. N. Dennis, of the Cotton Association, has received a letter from Prof. C. A. Cary, of Auburn, who says he will be on hand with several other professors on that day prepared to address the farmers of Chilton. Now, all get together and make the occasion one to be remembered by all.

Get into the American spirit, admonishes the Louisville (Ky.) Courier Journal. Learn the value of an hour. Do not allow a solitary one of the precious hours to flit past unutilized. If you are at work, work hard and reap the reward; if not at work, pick up a good, substantial book and add to your learning; if you are not reading a substantial book, take some physical exercise and benefit your health. But do not lie around and kill time. Stir yourself today—this morning.

BIRMINGHAM EXCURSION.

The L. and N. R. R. will run an excursion to Birmingham on Monday, June 26, leaving Montgomery at 1 p. m., Clanton at 2:47 p. m. on that day; returning leave Birmingham at 6 p. m. the next day (Tuesday). The fare is $1.50 for the round trip for Clanton and all points south of that, Thorsby and points north $1.00.

C. A. CARY,
tf Director of Farmers' Institute.

THORSBY LETTER.

Thorsby did not get the fertilizer factory, warehouse, etc., but we citizens hereby thank our committee and property owners for their efforts to bring the industry to our town. We still have hopes that we will also have a similar industry, as the farmers in this section seem to be determined to have one here. Thanks are due Postmaster Bice and G. W. Freeman for their success in locating a rural route from Thorsby west. E. Cooper and John Patton, of Jemison, were visitors here last week. A party from Clanton had a banquet at the Thorsby Inn last Friday night, among whom we noticed Messrs. P. D. Wilson and N. A. Kicker, who were accompanied by Mrs. Gamma Anderson and Miss Sallie Watts. Another car load of fruit and vegetables left Thorsby for Chicago markets last week. The ball game between Scotland and Jemison on the Thorsby grounds last Saturday was won by Jemison, score 11 to 9. It was an exciting game, two double plays by Jemison spoiling Scotland's chances, though they made a brave up hill fight. Mr. and Mrs. Strong, of Marlborough, were visitors of the Saebers Sunday. Henry Hudson, colored, accidentally put a load of shot in his foot, while hunting Saturday, but under Dr. Stabler's skillful treatment he may save the foot.

MARS HILL.

Editor Union:

Crops look good. General Green is about licked after a hard fight. Some bottom land is unplanted and will likely lay out. Wheat is harvested and found tolerably good. I hope more will be sowed this fall than last. Let's raise our own flour. This community all visited Oak Grove Sunday and report a fine children's day and a good dinner. Marion Scott and wife visited his grandfather (G. W. Langston) Saturday and Sunday. Well, since "Dad's Plow Boy" changed from stock law, I don't see any one writing from here in favor of it, though the majority are for it here. Don't back down, for it's the road to prosperity. I've been in six different stock law states in ten years, and in all that time never knew a law suit about stock damages, so it's hard to make me believe what some write about law suits. The widows and the renters all got along well in these states where I've been and had good stock of their own. I've seen enough hogs in one man's lot cut there to make as much meat as half of Chilton county does now. Brother farmers, our country is just what we make it. Mr. Buck Whittaker, who was raised in Georgia, is the strongest in favor of stock law of any man in Beat 2.

"WHIPPOORWILL."

BENSON.

Death has visited the home of Elmore and Lula Benson, and taken from their arms their little daughter, Unna May, born April 16, 1905, died May 28, 1905. She was a very bright and loving babe, only seven short weeks here when the blessed Savior called her to his loving arms. Words cannot comfort the young parents, but we say weep not, for little Unna May is in heaven, beckoning you to come. Unna May is gone away; she is happy over yonder, safe within the endless day. She was fair and oh! so precious, with her little golden hair. She was smiling, ever smiling. Now she's smiling over there.

We laid on her bosom, as pure as snow, the fairest, sweetest flowers that grow; her eyes are closed to earthly light, but they'll shine again in that land so bright.

Weep not, mother, for your darling; she is happy over there; she is singing with the angels, she has climbed the golden stair.

Week not, father, for you can meet her in the happy far away; then you'll never more be parted from your little Unna May.

Her hands are folded on her breast, 'neath the daisies, out of sight, your darling is at rest. But, oh! beyond the shadow land, where all is bright and fair; I know full well those little hands will palms of victory bear.

Where crystal streams through endless years flow over golden sands; where the good again shall meet, you'll clasp your Unna's hands.

In loving remembrance,

LUCY E. HOUSE.

JEMISON MASONS.

Jemison lodge, A. F. and A. M. No. 411, at the communication on Saturday night, June 17, elected the following officers for the ensuing Masonic year: L. H. Reynolds, W. M., re-elected; Alex Glasscock, S. W., re-elected; J. M. B. Johnson, J. W.; J. H. Patton, Sr., treasurer; J. L. Langston, secretary, re-elected; E. G. Cofer, S. D.; J. R. Martin, J. D., re-elected; R. H. Gaines, tyler, re-elected. As for many years has been their custom, Jemison lodge will have a public installation and picnic on June 24 (St. John's Day), and will be joined this time by the Odd Fellows, Red Men and Daughters of Rebekah. A feature of the Masonic ceremonies in the morning will be the address by Judge Dan H. Greene, of Birmingham, at 11 o'clock.

The joint lodges will furnish the roast meats, but every one that can is requested to bring a full basket. All look forward to a most enjoyable day, one to be long remembered.

ATTENTION, ALLIANCE MEN!

Chilton County Farmers' Alliance will meet with Rocky Mount Alliance on Wednesday and Thursday, July 19 and 20, 1905. Business of great importance will come before the Alliance.

MONTEVALLO.

Editor Union:

We've had some nice showers in the last few days and crops are looking well. A few words about stock law. I live in Dry Valley, and there is some stock law up here, and I can't see it is very much service. I wish the people would sign their real names. I don't reckon they are ashamed of their names, but I don't like to read a letter and then not know who wrote it. With best wishes to THE UNION and its many readers.

A. P. BEAN.

STANTON.

Farmers are getting along with their crops, killing the grass in the dry spell the Lord sent them. J. R. Barrett and wife visited F. D. Moore's Sunday. Miss Ida Barrett was a visitor of Miss Rena Blount Saturday. Miss Kemp was at Mrs. Blount's Sunday. There was a dinner at Fellowship Sunday. Thomas Mitchell and Wm. C. Harris went to Dallas county on Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Will Cherry visited Jim Mitchell Sunday. We don't have any talk of stock law here, and if the people of Lomax and Cane Creek lived down here they'd find that everyone is against stock law; they might go to Dallas and rent land at $1 a month for pasture.

"WASH BOY."

COOPER'S.

Our community is in mourning with our sister (in Christ) and friend, Mrs. Davis. About three months ago one of her married daughters died and last Sunday, (the 11th) her precious husband died and Wednesday (the 14th) one of her dear boys (about 14 years old) died. Oh! how sad for us to lose our loved ones, but what is our loss is their eternal gain. I've only lived in this community since January last, but I feel that I've made friends, and I'm glad to know that I live in a neighborhood of generous citizens. When we laid to rest (at Selam church) the son of Sister Davis, it was suggested that all that felt disposed to help work out the crop of Sister Davis, to meet there on Friday with plows and hoes, and by good work time there were ten plows and five hoe hands, and they went to work, and I don't think I ever knew men to work more steady or more cheerfully. Bro. Davis and two sons were taken sick the same day and there wasn't any work done on the farm for about two and a half weeks. The young man who has survived is so that he can sit up some, and we trust that he may get well, and may God's richest blessings rest on our widowed sister and her children. Well, we've had recent showers that have refreshed our crops wonderfully. Everybody seems to be busy. We think, Mr. Editor, if you would come down in this part of the moral vineyard and spend some time looking over our fields and some old time farm dinners such as beans, beets, cucumbers, onions, white-head cabbage, home-made bacon, yellow-legged chickens, etc., you would feel better and we'd be glad to have you. So come.

Respectfully,
G. A. CONVILLE.

Bro. Conville's list looks so well we think we'll have to go see him some day when our business cares let up a little. We thank him for his hospitable offer all the same.—Editor Union.

RANDOLPH.

Refreshing seasons all around us. Still Randolph is dry. Mrs. Capehart, of Chattanooga, Tenn., came down Saturday on a visit to Mrs. Meroney. C. W. Brand and family attended church services at Tabernacle Sunday. Ebert Gothard and family, of Mars Hill, were among our visitors Saturday. Saturday was an extremely busy day. Ross Hebson visited his old home at Sylacauga Saturday. Mr. J. C. Champion, of Pleasant Grove, was a welcome visitor Saturday. Mr. A. J. Lumpkin brought in a nice lot of potatoes Saturday. He is largely engaged in potato culture, and is a hustler. Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Fitts, of Hubbard, were in town Saturday. Mr. Fitts is one of the strongest advocates of the people's cause in Chilton. He has been frequently spoken of as the next sheriff of Chilton. While he is not seeking office, still if the people desire his services we believe he will ever be true to their interests. Mrs. Meroney has been sick, but is now better. Mrs. J. L. Smith was in town Friday. M. L. Cleveland and sons, and Dr. A. P. Wooley and wife, went up to Ashby Thursday to attend the marriage of Gordon Cleveland to Miss Oakley. Harvey Nix attended church at Tabernacle Sunday. John Helton went to Meridian, Miss., last week. Thomas Cofer was in town last week. Mr. Heller, of Fenwood, was in town Monday. A freight train was derailed just below the depot Monday. By going a few feet further it would have pitched down a steep bank. Since the foregoing was written we have had a refreshing shower. Health and abundant success to THE UNION and its editor.

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

AMUSING PRACTICAL JOKE ON A BRITON.

Gave Him an Exhibition of Our Native Freedom of Manners For Use in His Forthcoming Book.

The two men were seated at a table in the farthest corner of the restaurant.

"May I ask you for the score card?" said the one with the bristling mustache, pointing to the bill of fare.

"You may, sir," replied the other, a man with closely cropped hair; "but that's all the good it will do you. I'm not a waiter."

"Maybe not, sir," returned the waiter. "But if you had requested such a favor of me I should have taken pleasure in complying."

"Quite likely. Some men are born that way. They'd just as lief be taken for a waiter as not."

"And some men are born boors. They couldn't be a gentleman if they tried."

"Think you'd know a gentleman if you happened to meet one?"

"I think I should. He'd look as different from you as he possibly could."

"How do you know anything about what a gentleman would do or what he'd look like?"

"I'm intimately acquainted with several, and they don't any of them act like you."

"That so? Say, who began this conversation, you baboon-faced——"

"I did, you bullet-headed barbarian. I asked you in a civil way if you would be kind enough to hand me the bill of fare, and you insulted me. You haven't the manners or decency of a walrus. You're a hunk of mule meat in a shape something like a man, with a——"

"You can't talk that way to me and live! I'll——"

"Don't you do it! If you move your hand one inch nearer your hip pocket I'll fill you full of holes right here!"

But the other did not stop.

He thrust his hand into his hip pocket, pulled out a silk handkerchief, wiped his eyeglasses, picked up a paper and began to read it.

Then the man with the bristling mustache turned to the unmistakable Englishman who had been sitting at the next table and listening with horrified astonishment to the conversation.

"We thought you'd like to have a little exhibition of our native freedom of manners," he said, pleasantly, "to use in your forthcoming book, don't you know."—Chicago Tribune.

The Elixir of Youth.

Every age sees its earnest scientists still seeking how they may discover the elixir or the force which shall give us the energy, the vitality and the appearance of youth. A German who has been struggling with the subject is convinced that the secret lies in keeping sound our blood vessels. We are just as old as our hearts, he declares, and this is no pretty poetical sentiment, but a cold, scientific fact. As years creep on our arteries and the heart lose vigor, and we then begin to "age." Now, we can train this organ, it appears, to work better than it does. Like an old clock, if treated judiciously, it will go on as well as a new one, but it does not do to give it any of the liberties of the latter. We must carefully regulate the exercises we take, the food we eat, the mental efforts we make, the muscular work we do. We should neither walk too much nor too little; we should get as much air as possible, yet never oversleep; we should never coddle, still less should we be rash about colds, fatigue and so on.—London World.

Length of a Shave.

"I should say it took about 500 strokes of the razor to shave a man," a barber said in answer to a man sprawled out in a red plush chair.

"You are wrong," said the man. "To shave me, going over my face twice, won't take 250 strokes."

"How do you know?" asked the barber.

"For years," said the other, "I have had the habit of counting the strokes of the razor while being shaved. It is a silly habit, yet I can't get rid of it. You and I will count your strokes together now."

The shaving proceeded in silence.

"Done," said the barber at the end. "I make it 210."

"That is right, 210," the patron agreed. "It always runs thereabouts. Once I got a good shave in 165 strokes. Once I got a bad one in 240. The average is about 210."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Telephone as a Reformer.

Congressman Bingham, at a dinner of the Philadelphia Clover Club, spoke of modern life in the most optimistic vein.

"The world is growing better," he said. "Daily it becomes cleaner, kinder and more upright. Nearly everything makes for reform. Even the telephone has a tremendous reforming influence.

"Let me give you an example of the surprising effect that the telephone exercises over our morals.

"A certain man, at breakfast one morning, said to his wife:

"'My dear, I'll not be home to dinner to-night, and you had better not sit up for me, as I shall be detained very late at the office posting my books.'

"'Very well,' the lady answered. 'Before I go to bed I'll say good-night to you over the telephone.'

"The man had forgotten, you see, that a telephone now connected his office and his house."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Whitechapel Changed.

Whitechapel, London, the district where so many crimes were committed several years ago, including the notorious "Jack-the-Ripper" murders, has been transformed by the police into a fairly respectable district.

LITTLE THINGS WORTH KNOWING

A law suit between two families in Spain has been in the courts for 338 years. A settlement has just been reached by the parties that the case will be settled in the highest court in 1907.

A Waterville (Me.) man once referred the question of sudden disappearance of a man at different times to the Smithsonian institution, and the reply all the gray squirrels. The flock may be seen in Tennessee in the fall.

For the first time, it is said, one of the persons struck by lightning and struck has been thus killed, the fact is another instance of gradual change that is about in the climate. The great dam at Assouan, Egypt, works made the Nile's annual occupation of the valley.

A special to the Chicago Record relates that the Independence ever known in the town of Rock, Iowa, resulted in the young men by the issue being whether they should be permitted to keep company." The board of education against allowing young beaus, on the ground that they interfered with school work. The boys rebelled, and carried their candidates for directors.

The degree to which the senses can be trained to make up for those lost was illustrated in a recent walk by two blind men on Thirty-sixth street and Lancaster avenue, Philadelphia. They came from opposite directions and approached each other. Coming on the corner they could hear one of the blind men say, "Hello, Ed; what are you doing?" When the blind man was asked how he had known his friend at a distance of five yards he answered: "By the sound of course. I can tell a man a block of half a square the sound of any man in the dense crowd.

A curious question has arisen in Spanish feeling, and strong feeling has only been avoided by the bottom being permitted to fall out of the way. The Cortez recently passed a law ordaining general peace on Sunday labor. This law has been secured, opponents of the measure at the time promptly compared it to bullfights, which by custom take place on Sunday. Indignation arose an outburst of public sentiment, so strong that the Spanish State took the matter in hand and by a series of meetings concluded that the law did not apply to tauromachy or bullfighting labor, but an art, like [illegible]

LITTLE THINGS Worth Knowing

A law suit between two of the families in Spain has been in courts for 328 years. An amusement has just been made by the parties that the case will be finally tried in the highest court in Spain in 1907.

A Wisconsin (Mex.) naturalist has recently entered the question of the disappearance of gray squirrels from certain localities in the State. Another reply was that the gray squirrels are migrating to the Gray Inc. in Mexico.

The first time a woman was elected to membership in the Royal Society of Literature of London was in 1835, when Lady Morgan was chosen. Since then there have been but few women members.

Another strange fish has been found in the Amazon. It is a species of catfish, and has been named the "upside down" fish, because it swims with its back toward the bottom of the river and its belly toward the surface.

A special to the Chicago Inter-Ocean says that the bitterest school fight ever known in the town of Rock Town resulted in the defeat of the young men by the family machine being whether school teachers should be permitted to "keep company." The board had taken action against allowing teachers to keep company, on the ground that it interfered with school work. The ticket was rebelled, and each side named candidates for directors.

The degree to which the remaining senses can be trained when the sight is lost was illustrated the other night by two blind men from the home on Thirty sixth street and Lancaster avenue, Philadelphia. The men were coming from opposite directions, and as they approached each other a man standing on the corner was surprised to see one of the blind men say, "Ed, what are you doing out this time of night?" When the blind man was asked how he had known the other was a distance of five yards between them he answered: "By the sound of his footsteps. Of course, I can tell at the distance of half a square the tap of the cane of any man in the home."

A curious question has been raised in Spanish feeling, and strong against it has only been avoided by popular sentiment being permitted to have its own way. The Cortez recently passed a law ordaining general prohibition of Sunday labor. This law having been secured opponents of the national sport promptly sought its application to bullfights, which almost always take place on Sundays. Instantly arose an outburst of popular feeling so strong that the Cortez of the State took the matter into their own hands and by a series of special decrees concluded that the law did not apply to Lauromachy, which is not, strictly speaking, an art, like the drama.

Colorado's Soda Lake.

One of the most remarkable things ever made in the region of the lake of liquid soda in the mountains between Crestone and Poncha, in the San Luis Valley. The lake is an acre and a quarter in extent, lies at the bottom of a crater many in the desert. Out of the crystals have collected to the depth of eighteen inches, the appearance with a hard snow fall. Various examinations by the Colorado Mines shows that the deposit seven inches deep consists of 98 per cent of soda. It is offered on the market by E. M. Pack, the land owner, who is now installing machinery to convert the native crystals into soda.

Women Who Value Real Love.

The woman that really wants her husband to be happy, and does not delight in saving her blacker self for the doleful side for him, rests before him to come home to her, work hard until she has forgotten them, worried and fretted, to meet him with a complaining face. She stops work before the children come home from school, slips into a pretty dress, and when the husband and the children come in they are appreciative of the woman who is not always complaining, but who comes only from one source, that gentle rest. Too many women fail in this and others happy simply because they are always tired.—Kansas City World.

CLANTON COTTON MARKET.

Total receipts to June 21, 05, 7,503. Price same date.
Total receipts season 1903-04, 6,648.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

John Mims No. 1 was in Clanton Thursday with a fine cotton bloom picked from his place 2 1-2 miles south of Clanton. We regret it was brought in too late for publication last week.

Thorsby R. F. D. No. 1 will start on August 15th. It has 102 houses with a population of 428. If Thorsby had what rightfully belongs to her she'd have had at least two routes long since.

Rev. J. H. Thomas and S. P. Franklin were in Clanton Thursday.

R. W. Littlejohn was a pleasant visitor Saturday. We wish him luck.

John Garner, of Owenton, was in Clanton several days last week.

L. D. Riggins was a pleasant visitor Saturday.

T. W. Atchley was in town Saturday.

T. V. Davis and daughter, of Cloddy were in Clanton Saturday.

R. F. Bates and H. M. Mahan were in town Saturday.

Dr. and Mrs. J. P. Hayes lost their little daughter, Myrtle, by death last Saturday. The little one, who had just passed her first birthday, was laid to rest in Clanton cemetery on Sunday.

J. W. Littlejohn, Jr., was in town Saturday.

W. R. Maddox was a welcome visitor Saturday. He is on his way from LaGrange, Ga., to Prattville, Ala., and will visit around Clanton several days.

Lum Smith was in town Saturday.

S. R. Letcher and W. T. Nelson, of Dixie, were in Clanton Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Taylor were in town Tuesday.

Charlie Reynolds was in Clanton Tuesday.

Dudley Collins and son were in town Tuesday.

THE UNION received a pleasant letter from E. Bearden, of Jemison, Tuesday. Thanks.

Squire John S. Dennis was in Clanton Tuesday.

Sheriff Morgan started from Clanton Friday morning in response to a message from a turpentine camp near Riderville, and on his return that evening one of the horses he was driving dropped dead in the road about 5 miles from Clanton. The team belonged to Robert Popwell's livery stable. In this extreme hot weather a driver has got to watch his team.

R. L. Harper, of Helena, and Miss Maimie Jones, of Saginaw, were married at the court house on Friday morning, Judge Reynolds performing the ceremony. The young couple start out with the hearty good wishes of all who know them. May their only troubles be little ones.

There was a meeting at the court house Friday night to consider the school question for Clanton, and a resolution was passed asking the Town Council to buy a plot of ground suitable for the erection of a school building thereon, and pledging the support of the citizens of Clanton to the council in behalf of a good school building.

A cotton bloom has been sent to THE UNION by Charles Johnson, of Dry Valley, who says he is just two days later than last year, which shows he must be way ahead of the average.

Dora Miller, colored, working at the Culbreth and Davis turpentine camp in Beat 11, who was complained against in the county court for assault and battery, came in Monday and surrendered and pleaded guilty. Judge Reynolds fined her $3 and she went back to the camp to work.

Mrs. S. A. Foshee, of Maplesville, is visiting her sister, Miss Alpha Smitherman, and W. M. Wilson.

A party of Clantonians went on a picnic Wednesday to Kincheon, among whom were Wiley Littlejohn and family, W. M. and P. D. Wilson, Miss Alpha Smitherman, Mrs. E. A. Foshee, Mrs. Mary Smitherman and N. A. Kicker. Some one said he didn't suppose there would be a fish left by the dam site.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Shelby Davis, a son, on June 14th.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Wesley White, a girl, on June 15th.

John Davis, formerly of Chambers county, died at his home on the Joshua Downs place June 11. Arthur Davis, son of the above, died June 14th.

Edgar Dennis is at Tuscaloosa attending the summer school for teachers.

The baby show came off, and the judges, Messrs. P. D. Wilson and Dennis, gave the prize to Master Anthony, a 7-months-old son of Mrs. J. T. Anthony. Mrs. Anthony is a sister of Crit. Jones and lost her husband several months ago.

J. W. G. Kicker was in Clanton Tuesday, and sold his cotton (20 bales) for 8 2-5 cents; that beats 6 1-2, don't it?

Nute Gentry and Jim Collins went to Birmingham Wednesday on business.

The Calera ball team, of which Miles Collins is the affable manager, played three games in Clanton last week with the local club, but were not able to solve the delivery of the imported battery, and took three defeats home with them.

The "Milton Habeas Corpus" case will come up again for Judge Reynolds today (Thursday).

WHY EYESIGHT FAILS

INFERIOR ARTIFICIAL LIGHT FREQUENTLY THE CAUSE.

Eyesights of the Past, One and All, Have Serious Defects—Acetylene Gas, With Its Clear, Unwavering, Yet Soft Flame Cannot Hurt the Eyes.

New York, June 20.—No one can go into our schools or meet a group of children on the street without noticing how large a number of them wear spectacles. The proportion seems to increase yearly, and there are many more who ought to wear glasses. The experience of one teacher might be duplicated by the score. She knew Alice was inattentive and she thought she was unusually stupid. She said so to the principal and sent a note to the mother, requesting that the child be helped at home if she wished her to keep up with her class. One day after a blackboard explanation, the teacher called upon the child and found that she had not seen what had been written. She was kept after school and by dint of much sympathetic questioning Miss C. found that Alice had never been able to see what was put on the board and that her head had ached so often and so hard that she frequently failed to hear what was said.

Such a condition may be caused by lack of proper food, but in our American homes it is usually due to the poor quality of the artificial light. The yellow, insufficient light of the ordinary kerosene lamp, with its smoky chimney, is about as bad for the eyes as can be imagined. The flickering light from a coal gas jet is but little better, and even the electric light, brilliant as it usually is, has an unsteadiness due to variations in power, and a glare peculiarly trying to the delicate nerves of sight. The comparatively new illuminant acetylene gas produces as nearly perfect an artificial light as has yet been found. It gives a clear white, unwavering light, very brilliant, yet perfectly soft, and so nearly like the rays of the sun that even colors appear as in daylight.

Fortunately, acetylene is very easily and cheaply produced, and the simple apparatus necessary can be purchased and installed in any home at a very moderate cost, and the acetylene can be piped to convenient points in the house where a light is needed. It is then lighted and extinguished and used exactly like common city gas.

Acetylene is rapidly coming into common use in homes, churches, schools and institutions of all kinds, and it is reasonable to expect that as its use in the home increases, there will be fewer defective eyes, particularly among children. Poor eyesight and the many ills resulting therefrom will undoubtedly be much reduced by the use of this new illuminant.

Race in Shipbuilding.

That the efficiency of government labor may sometimes be made to exceed that of private labor continues to be shown by the race between the New York navy yard, which is building the battleship Connecticut, and the Newport News company, which is building the Louisiana. During the last month the Connecticut, which was begun two months later than the Louisiana, made further gains, and may yet be the first completed.

Refused the Sacred White Bull.

Recently a sacred white bull was brought from India for exhibition at the Crystal palace, near London. But the British authorities refused to let it be landed, except in the form of beef.

Prof. J. D. Quackenbos, formerly of Columbia University, declares that the success of Marshal Oyama was due to his hypnotic power and highly cultivated knowledge of telepathy.

Some Chinese Bans.

China has recently issued an edict prohibiting, except in the treaty ports, the sale of metal rimmed spectacles. Tan shoes are also forbidden, and any one dealing in them renders himself liable to decapitation. This latter drastic regulation is due to the fact that yellow is there the imperial color, to be worn by none save members of the royal family.

Still in Rebellion.

Culture in Topeka.

SOUTHERN FARM NOTES.

TOPICS OF INTEREST TO THE PLANTER, STOCKMAN AND TRUCK GROWER.

Rotation of Crops.

There are various methods of increasing the yield of crops besides tillage and the use of fertilizers; and one of the most important of these methods is crop rotation, or the growing of different kinds of plants on the same land from year to year instead of taking the same kind of crop continuously from the same land, and that some crops will not grow well after others, and that some kinds of plants actualy grow better immediately after the land has been occupied by certain other kinds. For example, red clover ceases to thrive after wheat; also wheat seldom does well when sown after barley.

All plants remove from the land more or less of the fertilizing matters when carried off from the land. But all plants do not carry off the same kind of fertilizers, nor do they carry off the same amounts. All plants do not draw equally upon the fertilizing ingredients of the soil. For instance, one crop may consume a large amount of nitrogen, another may exhaust the soil in phosphoric acid, while still another may require potash. However, all plants require some of these three ingredients, but in different proportions. "Root crops," for example—such as potatoes, beets, turnips, etc.—need a liberal amount of potash and phosphoric acid. Forage plants—corn, for instance—needs nitrogen to produce the leaves and stems, while cotton requires a small amount of nitrogen and potash, but a liberal supply of phosphoric acid, which goes to form seed and lint. Hence it is obvious that some plan of rotation should be adopted in order to prevent the land becoming deficient in some one or more of these essential elements.

The following rules for rotation may be of advantage:

Such plants as tend particularly to exhaust the soil, like grain crops, should only be sown on fertile land, and they should not exceed one another, but may best be followed by plants that are less exhausting.

On heavily manured fields, such crops should be planted as can bear the most fresh manure, while less exhaustive plants may follow.

It is generally advantageous to alternate crops that have top roots with those that have spreading roots.

No two crops favorable to the growth of insects and fungi should be permitted to succeed each other. It is very essential in many cases to change the crops frequently to hinder the increase of these pests. There are various insect injurious to grain which would increase to an alarming extent if the land were devoted exclusively to grain crops year after year. But when a crop of beans or turnips follow a grain crop, the whole tribe of grain insects may perish or disappear from the field. The clump-foot, or as is sometimes commonly known, the "big root" in cabbage and collards, in like manner prevent their continual cultivation on the same land. Farmers and market gardeners in vicinities near cities would be glad to grow cabbage year after year upon the same land, but they cannot because of this disease.

One form of rotation of crops commonly practiced in this State, and in most of the Southern States, is the growing with reference to their manurial value. Red clover or cowpeas sown in spring, or rye sown in fall and plowed under when it has made a fair growth, are the most common methods of green manuring. The effects are often very noticeable. By this method we largely increase the vegetable matter in the soil, and this much improves the physical condition of the soil.—L. M. Oden, A. and M. College, West Raleigh, N. C.

Utilizing Sorghum For Silage.

Sorghum will make a very fine quality of silage if properly managed. One of the best varieties to grow is the Redhead, because of the stout, stiff nature of the stalk. It stands up much better than the Amber and some other similarly stalked varieties, and yet is not so coarse but that it is readily eaten by livestock. Plant the sorghum in rows about three feet apart, using about twelve pounds of seed per acre. Cultivate as an ordinary corn crop and cut when ready for the silo with the corn harvester. Do not cut for silage, however, until the heads are matured and the seed is virtually ripe. Most persons who attempt to use sorghum for silage cut it too green and make a serious mistake by so doing. Sorghum holds its juices with remarkable tenacity, and owing to the considerable amount of saccharine matter contained makes an unusually fine quality of silage. You may plant sorghum anywhere from the first of May to the first of June. Fairly early planting is advisable, as it gives the plant longer to mature. It is claimed by many, as you doubtless know, that sorghum is hard on the land, but in proportion to the yield obtained it is not harder than other crops. Sorghum has some manifest advantages over corn, as it will grow better on thinner land, as it is hardier and more vigorous and therefore withstands drought better, and as a rule it will outyield corn. In other words, where ten tons of corn are put in the silo per acre, you can count on from thirteen to fifteen tons of sorghum. Sorghum can be handled as easily as corn, and will keep just as long if not put up too green. If placed in a rotation so as to come on the land once in five years it will not injure the ground. It would be a mistake to attempt to grow sorghum year after year on the same land, unless it were possible to plow under some crop like crimson clover, and apply heavy amounts of phosphates and potash each year. By utilizing sorghum for silage on many Southern farms and growing some peas for hay, the crop can be fed as grain and the shredded stover and pea hay used as dry roughness and a much larger number of animals maintained than is the general practice at the present time.—Professor Soule.

The Cabbage Louse.

The cabbage louse, having safely passed through an unusually hard winter, is now satisfying his ravenous appetite at the expense of cabbages, turnips, mustard, etc.

This insect must not be confused with the harlequin bug or with the common cabbage worms. The cabbage louse is a very small, gray, soft-bodied louse that gathers in great numbers on the leaves and stems of the cabbage and does damage by sucking the sap from the plant.

On account of the fact that it sucks the sap, instead of eating the leaves, it cannot be fought satisfactorily by using Paris green or other similar poisons.

Last year we had experience with this insect, and found a very simple and effectual remedy. Ordinary laundry soap, dissolved in water at the rate of one and one-half pounds to four gallons of water and applied thoroughly with a spray pump, will certainly kill them. If the soap be cut into thin pieces and boiled in two gallons of water it will quickly dissolve, when cold water may be added to make the four gallons. It should then be applied while still warm.

It may not be altogether easy to make a thorough application. When the plants are badly infested the leaves become very much curled, so that it is difficult to reach the lice. Here we see the advantage of making the application early, before the leaves get curled. But even if they are curled it is quite practicable to have a boy, barefoot and with sleeves rolled up, to accompany the sprayer and rapidly turn the leaves from side to side while the application is being made.

If taken in time, one application will usually be sufficient. Otherwise, it may be necessary to give a second treatment, a week or ten days later.

By following these directions many thousands of plants were saved last year.—Franklin Sherman, Jr., Entomologist, Department of Agriculture, Raleigh, N. C.

Cheapest Way to Get Flowers.

We want shrubs on every home place in America because they furnish more flowers for less money and care and for a longer period of years than any other plants. True, some trees have big flowers and lots of them, but they are higher up in the air, while a bush is just where you can see it and smell it. Shrubs are more permanent than "perennials," and they are nothing like the bother annuals are. You plant trees for posterity, but shrubs for yourself, also. You get flowers the second year, if you pay a decent price, and if you go away for a summer, the place does not look like an abandoned home. The plain truth is that a home without shrubbery is all wrong. Shrubbery is just as necessary to a place as clothing to a man. Nine times out of ten the straight line where a building meets the ground should be hidden by shrubs. —Garden Magazine.

Feeding Value of Corn and Cob Meal.

There is no reason why corn and cob meal should not be fed to cattle, sheep and hogs. It can be fed to these classes of stock without regrinding, though better results will as a rule follow regrinding, as the particles are finer and more quickly acted upon by the digestive juices. In a finely ground condition the sharp particles of the cob are not so likely to injure the digestive organs. One of the great advantages of grinding the grain and cob together is that it lightens the grain which is rich and heavy and not always thoroughly digested and assimilated. Corn and cob meal will, of course, give better results as a rule when fed in combination with other grains, and if used for young and growing stock a liberal amount of some concentrate rich in protein should be incorporated in the ration.—A. M. Soule.

Seven Are Drowned.

Vancouver, B. C.—The worst canoe accident in the history of Northern British Columbia is reported in a special from Hazelton. The drowned, seven in number, were C. R. Renard and Charles Stewart, miners of Lorne Creek; J. P. Fultz, mining engineer, Louisville, Ky.; Mills Johnston and Fred Slight, miners of Bellingham, Wash., and J. Ward Cook of the party also from Bellingham.

The party were on the way up the Skeena river from the coast.

Met Fatal Accident.

Tuscumbia, Ala.—Ike Cole, son of T. J. Cole, section master on the Florence branch of the Southern railroad, met with an accident Saturday morning which is likely to result in his death. Young Cole is with his father's section gang, and while coming to his work jumped off the Florence train on the double tracks leading from Tuscumbia to Sheffield, and was struck by the Southern's "transfer" going in the opposite direction.

MAPS OF MILITARY VALUE.

AGRICULTURAL SOIL SURVEYS IMPORTANT FOR THE ARMY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The entire lack of co-operation between the several departments of the Government has frequently been made the occasion of criticism in debates in Congress, Senator Lodge, among others, having more than once pointed to this as one of the grave mistakes in the conduct of the Federal Administration.

A striking instance of this lack of co-operation which has just come to light is the failure of the War Department and the General Staff to avail themselves of the maps, invaluable from a military standpoint, which are annually being produced under the direction of Professor Milton Whitney, of the Bureau of Soils. So far as can be ascertained, the General Staff has never even learned that the Bureau of Soils is conducting a soil survey of the entire country and preparing maps which contain most of the important features usually shown on military maps prepared as the result of reconnoissances.

For the last five years the Bureau of Soils has maintained approximately twenty parties of geologists and soil experts in the field, and the results of their observations have been embodied in maps which now represent almost 60,000 square miles of the United States. The value of this work to the agricultural interests of the country has led Congress to appropriate constantly increasing amounts for the carrying on of the work, and, as the maps are furnished to all foreign agricultural institutions, it is probable that European military authorities have a better knowledge to-day of the topography, and soil conditions of the United States than have American military officers.

Certain general officers of the army have long urged that military maps of all parts of the country, and especially of those parts adjacent to the seaboard, be prepared by the engineer corps, but little or no work in that line has been accomplished by the army, and the valuable data compiled by the Bureau of Soils have been persistently ignored. The soil maps give not only the general topography of the country, using the base maps of the Geological Survey for that purpose, but in addition thereto the nature of the soil for a depth of not less than three feet, thus indicating the character of the roads to be met with, the probable effect which heavy rains would have on them, etc. Taken in connection with the maps of the Geological Survey, they furnish practically all the information necessary from a military standpoint, with the advantage over reconnoissance maps, on which the military commander usually is compelled to depend, that they are prepared by experts who have ample time to devote to their surveys and observations and every facility for committing the facts to paper.

With such maps, the feasibility of erecting earthworks, intrenchments, etc., can be determined at a glance. Moreover, the military quartermaster, who must make careful calculations as to the availability of the local roads to sustain the necessarily heavy traffic entailed by the transportation of the supplies for a great army, can easily perfect his plans when, with the aid of a soil map, he can learn whether the roads over which his heavy wagons must travel are of earth, clay or stone, on what sort of a base they are constructed, the liability to flooding during heavy rains, etc.

Some military experts who have recently examined these maps point to the fact that had the information they present been available at the beginning of the Spanish-American War the War Department would have been saved from the error of selecting the site chosen at Chickamauga for a great military camp, because, from the soil maps, it would have learned that the soil was only a few feet deep and underlaid with a stratum of rock which would inevitably force the drainage and seepage back to the surface. The error of placing the Chickamauga camp on that site has cost the Government in pensions to those whose health suffered and to the families of those who died from typhoid fever probably more than the entire cost of the soil survey of the United States to date.

The same proposition is doubtless true of Camp Alger. A more thorough knowledge of the topography and drainage features of that site would doubtless have led to the selection of a location more favorable to the health of the troops quartered there. In this connection it is noteworthy that the cost of the soil maps to the Government does not exceed an average of $2.87 a square mile, while their value to agriculture is regarded by those in a position to know as ample to warrant the expense on that ground alone.

In most countries military maps not widely dissimilar from the maps of the Bureau of Soils are being prepared under the supervision of the military authorities, and as far back as the early seventies it was urged by members of the engineer corps of the United States Army that a military survey, to be followed by the preparation of military maps, be made in all parts of the United States, particularly those portions adjacent to the seaboard. Thus far, however, the engineer corps has been so limited in numbers as to render this work impossible, in addition to the valuable services which the corps already renders in connection with river and harbor improvements.

While, so far as can be learned, the military value of the soil maps has never occurred to Secretary Wilson, it is not improbable that some arrangements will be made between the War and Agricultural Departments whereby some slight additions to the data already gathered by the soil surveyors can be made, and adding even more to the value of the soil maps from a military standpoint, and thus obviating all necessity of the War Department's duplicating the work of the Department of Agriculture.

It is predicted by the experts who have examined the soil maps that when their value is brought to the attention of the General Staff, it will make arrangements whereby the soil maps will be furnished to post commanders and other army officers in all parts of the country.

LIFE INSURANCE TOO COSTLY.

Through Manipulation of Funds Policy-Holder is a Loser.

The articles which are daily being published with reference to the management and methods of the Equitable Life Assurance Company are awakening to a greater degree than ever before the public interest in the life insurance business in general. That a business of such magnitude should be so little understood by the average person seems incredible; and yet it is a fact that the vast majority of policy-holders know little of the company or companies in which they are insured, and still less of the manner in which their premium payments are used. The insurance companies are considered to be among the most stable of institutions, and apparently it has been sufficient for the average layman to feel assured that, in the event of his death, his heirs would receive the amount guaranteed. Beyond that he does not go, and of the fact that he is not receiving full value for his payments, he is, in many instances, unaware.

Life insurance is a necessity. That grave evils of management exist, that policy-holders' moneys are being used improperly, has been amply illustrated in the case of the Equitable Life. Personal fortunes have been gained by officers through the manipulation of the funds under their control, and the individual policy-holder is the loser.

That there are some companies which are conservatively and honestly managed is well known. These companies do not accumulate huge surpluses, and, in fact, the accumulation of large surplus funds is unnecessary. Some companies return the profits derived from the business to the policy-holders at the end of every year, and accumulate only a sufficient fund to provide for any slight depreciation which may occur in the value of their securities. It has been suggested that a remedy for the evils in the business that exist to-day lies in legislation which will compel all companies to disburse their earnings among the policy-holders annually. There are many companies which do this, and it has been proved conclusively that the net cost of policies issued on this plan has been less than of others. In order that satisfactory results may be attained by the annual dividend company, the management must be conservative, and all channels of unnecessary and dishonest expenditure eliminated. The policies issued by the New York companies provide, in the great majority of cases, that the surplus earnings shall not be paid until the end of the twentieth year, and then only in the event of the holder living out that period and having made all payments on account of his contract. As a matter of fact, only about one-quarter of the persons who insure are persistent in their payments, and the forfeitures of profits which the other three-quarters are compelled to make go to increase the surplus, which is already larger in amount than is necessary for the safe conduct of the business. It is an outgrowth of the old tontine methods, and is manifestly unfair. The policy-holder who dies and the one who, through adverse circumstances, is compelled to permit his policy to lapse before twenty years have expired, should receive the benefits of the profits made from their payments. The amounts paid in dividends by the New York companies have been absurdly small, and have been exceeded by the returns made by annual dividend companies on policies of similar kind and amount, and in the latter institutions every member has received his just due, whether he survived the twenty-year period or not. The conclusion is unavoidable that where surpluses are permitted to accumulate and are not so disbursed they are misused. That the evils of the business are directly traceable to the accumulation and control of these large surplus funds is well known to those familiar with conditions as they exist, and if the deferred-dividend companies were compelled by law to divide their earnings among the body of policy-holders every year they would be forced to pursue different practices in order to compete with the honestly managed institutions which are being run for the benefit of the policy-holders and not the officers, and which are attaining better results.—San Francisco Argonaut.

This Elephant a Thief.

A daring theft committed by one of the elephants at the Zoological Gardens has been reported to the authorities, says the London Express.

While a lady was watching the animal it suddenly extended its trunk, seized hold of a chatelaine bag she was carrying, and swallowed it.

The contents of the bag included:

A purse.
Three sovereigns.
A quantity of silver.
Pair of scissors.
Knife.
Pocket handkerchief.

As the bag entered the elephant's mouth a two-shilling piece dropped to the ground, and when picked up it was found to be bitten nearly in half.

Great Quebec Bridge.

A record-breaking cantilever bridge is being built in Canada. The Quebec bridge is its name, and it will be a record-breaker in that it will have a single span of 1,800 feet, no other bridge in the world being comparable to it in this respect, so far as can be learned. The river span of the Brooklyn bridge is 1,595 feet, that of the Williamsburg bridge being 1,000 feet. Excepting suspension bridges, the longest span of which is 1,600 feet, the longest span bridge yet completed is the Forth double-track railway bridge, with two spans of 1,710 feet each. Others are the Lansdowne bridge, India, with a span of 820 feet; the Wabash bridge across the Monongahela river at Pittsburg, with a span of 812 feet, and the bridge across the Mississippi at Memphis, Tenn., with a span of 790 1-2 feet.

Chamberlain's Delsarte Oratory.

Joseph Chamberlain was at one time rather given to "sawing the air" with his arms when alone and preparing one of his strenuous speeches. Once he issued an order that strangers were not to be shown his orchid houses. "I will not have my orchids broken," he said to his gardner, pointing to a spoiled valuable specimen. "I suppose you didn't happen to see it done?" "Yes, I did," replied the gardener. "What! You saw it done and said nothing!" exclaimed Mr. Chamberlain. "No, sir; I hardly dared," was the reply. "I insist on knowing who it was," angrily said the statesman. "Well, sir, it was yourself yesterday while you were speech-fying."

Supply of Breadstuffs.

With present crop prospects it seems reasonable to expect the United States to contribute largely to the world's supply of breadstuffs in 1905-6, either in the raw grain or in the form of flour. In 1901 the wheat crop was approximately 748,000,000 bushels. In 1904 it was about 550,000,000 bushels, almost 200,000,000 less than in 1901. The export trade decreased in almost the same proportion. The present year's wheat prospects are practically the same as in 1901; so, if nothing interferes to materially lessen the crop, it is more than possible that a large share of this country's export trade in wheat and flour will be regained.

Veteran Joshua Heller, of 706 South Walnut street, Urbana, Ill., says: "In the fall of 1899, after taking Doan's Kidney Pills I told the readers of this paper that they had relieved me of kidney trouble, disposed of a lame back with pain across my loins and beneath the shoulder blades. During the interval which has elapsed I have had occasion to resort to Doan's Kidney Pills when I noticed warnings of an attack. On each and every occasion the results obtained were just as satisfactory as when the pills were first brought to my notice. I just as emphatically endorse the preparation to-day as I did over two years ago."

Joaquin Miller.

The conclusion of the Portland Exposition management to have a Joaquin Miller Day is a just recognition. He is worthy of all honor, those of us who have read his poems think. I know of no late American poet who has given us as many quotable lines. He has not had the justice due from American critics, who live largely at the North, or at least sneeze when that section takes snuff. Was it because in 1863 he published that Democratic paper in Idaho which was suppressed for "disloyalty?" To have received praise for his genius he should have shrieked abolition like Whittier or joined John Brown's ruffians like Richard Realf. That was loyalty, patriotism and genius.

Here are some of the supposed signs of longevity: The woman who appears taller in proportion when sitting down than when standing has a good chance of long life. Those who resemble their mothers may expect to live longest, and the first-born is longer lived than other children. Out of a million persons 225 women reach the age of 100 years. Only eighty-two men in the same number are privileged to see a century of life. One of the secrets of long life is to have plenty of sleep, and other rules are: To keep the bedroom window open all night; take a bath every day; don't have pets in the living rooms; take daily exercise in the open air; watch the three D's—drinking water, dampness and drains; limit your ambitions; keep your temper, worry less, work more; preach less, practice more.

AN AWFUL SKIN HUMOR

Covered Head, Neck and Shoulders—Suffered Agony For Twenty-Five Years Until Cured by Cuticura.

"For twenty-five years I suffered agony from a terrible humor, completely covering my head, neck and shoulders, discharging matter of such offensiveness to sight and smell that I became an object of dread. I consulted the most able doctors far and near, to no avail. Then I got Cuticura, and in a surprisingly short time I was completely cured. I advise all those suffering from skin humors to get Cuticura and end their misery at once. S. P. Keyes, 149 Congress Street, Boston, Mass."

Bill of Sale for Pres. Roosevelt.

When President Roosevelt visits Georgia, in keeping with his promise to Senator Clay, he will be presented with two receipts and bills of sale for four negro slaves, by Col. George H. Jones, of Bibb county. These sales were made by the President's grandmother that she might obtain ready money with which to purchase the trousseau for the wedding of her daughter, Martha Bullock, to Theodore Roosevelt, Sr., of New York, father of the president.

Niagara.

Nearly fifty years ago the late Samuel Bowles, fresh from a visit to Niagara, expressed his enthusiasm as follows: "America is written all over the falls. Its roar is that of the nation. Its majestic sweep typifies the grand progress of America. The maddening, dashing, seething, buffing, pitching, uneasy flood typifies the intensity of the American mind and the vitality of American action. Here is the fountain of true young America; here the breast which gives it milk; here the nurture which gives it vitality." Had the grafters accomplished their purpose or should they do so in future it will not be America that will be written over the falls, because they will not be there. But on the black crags that remains as the ruins of their magnificence will be written beer and patent medicine signs, while above all should be inscribed "Ichabod."

Cures Blood Poison, Cancer, Ulcers.

If you have offensive pimples or eruptions, ulcers on any part of the body, aching bones or joints, falling hair, mucous patches, swollen glands, skin itches and burns, sore lips or gums, eating, festering sores, sharp, gnawing pains, then you suffer from serious blood poison or the beginnings of deadly cancer. You may be permanently cured by taking Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. B.) made especially to cure the worst blood and skin diseases. Mr. Stoessel was born in New Orleans, to which place his parents came from Switzerland nearly fifty years ago.

Nervous Women

Their Sufferings Are Usually Due to Uterine Disorders Perhaps Unsuspected

A MEDICINE THAT CURES

Can we dispute the well-known fact that American women are nervous?

How often do we hear the expression, "I am so nervous, it seems as if I should fly;" or, "Don't speak to me." Little things annoy you and make you irritable; you can't sleep, you are unable to quietly and calmly perform your daily tasks or care for your children.

The relation of the nerves and generative organs in women is so close that nine-tenths of the nervous prostration, nervous debility, the blues, sleeplessness and nervous irritability arise from some derangement of the organism which makes her a woman. Fits of depression or restlessness and irritability. Spirits easily affected, so that one minute she laughs, the next minute weeps. Pain in the ovaries and between the shoulders. Loss of voice; nervous dyspepsia. A tendency to cry at the least provocation. All this points to nervous prostration.

Nothing will relieve this distressing condition and prevent months of prostration and suffering so surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. M. E. Shotwell, of 103 Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"I cannot express the wonderful relief I have experienced by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered for a long time with nervous prostration, backache, headache, loss of appetite. I could not sleep and would walk the floor almost every night.

"I had three doctors and got no better, and life was a burden. I was advised to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has worked wonders for me.

"I am a well woman, my nervousness is all gone and my friends say I look ten years younger."

Will not the volumes of letters from women made strong by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound convince all women of its virtues? Surely you cannot wish to remain sick and weak and discouraged, exhausted each day, when you can be as easily cured as other women.

The Secret of Good Coffee

Even the best housekeepers cannot make a good cup of coffee without good material. Dirty, adulterated and queerly blended coffee such as unscrupulous dealers shovel over their counters won't do. But take the pure, clean, natural flavored

LION COFFEE, the leader of all package coffees—the coffee that for over a quarter of a century has been daily welcomed in millions of homes—and you will make a drink fit for a king in this way:

HOW TO MAKE GOOD COFFEE.

Use LION COFFEE, because to get best results you must use the best coffee.
Grind your LION COFFEE rather fine. Use "a tablespoonful to each cup, and one extra for the pot." First mix it with a little cold water, enough to make a thick paste, and add white of an egg (if egg is to be used as a settler), then follow one of the following rules:

1st. WITH BOILING WATER. Add boiling water, and let it boil THREE MINUTES ONLY. Add a little cold water and set aside five minutes to settle. Serve promptly.

2d. WITH COLD WATER. Add your cold water to the paste and bring it to a boil. Then set aside, add a little cold water, and in five minutes it's ready to serve.

3 DON'TS { Don't boil it too long. Don't let it stand more than ten minutes before serving. Don't use water that has been boiled before.

TWO WAYS TO SETTLE COFFEE.

1st. With Eggs. Use part of the white of an egg, mixing it with the ground LION COFFEE before boiling.
2d. With Cold Water instead of eggs. After boiling add a dash of cold water, and set aside for eight or ten minutes, then serve through a strainer.

Insist on getting a package of genuine LION COFFEE, prepare it according to this recipe and you will only use LION COFFEE in future. (Sold only in 1 lb. sealed packages.)
(Lion-head on every package.)
(Save these Lion-heads for valuable premiums.)

DO YOU WANT A PIANO?

A Great Combination Offer!

THE UNION and "MADAME" Offer You

$6,000.00 IN PRIZES

MADAME is a magazine for women who think and is the only magazine in the world endorsed by OVER THREE MILLION WOMEN, being adopted as the Official Organ of the National Council of Women. It is full of bright stories, clever articles on art, music, literature, with beautiful pictures galore.

TEST OF SKILL. This is not a lottery, guessing or estimating contest. It is absolutely a test of skill. There is no trick or deception about this, whatsoever. The dots are visible to the naked eye and can be counted. If you can count the dots correctly and give a good plan of counting them you should win. Your chance of winning is as good as any one's.

Money must accompany all subscriptions otherwise your count will not be registered. If you are now a subscriber to either paper your subscription will be extended.

$50.00 IS OFFERED AS A SPECIAL PRIZE TO THOSE SENDING IN THREE COUNTS (SEE CONDITIONS)

If this map gets destroyed, another printed on heavy paper will be sent you upon receipt of 2 cent stamp for postage.

A TOTAL OF 757 PRIZES

CONDITIONS—$1.00 pays for six months to MADAME and six months subscription to THE UNION and entitles you to 1 free count. $2 pays for one years subscription to Madame and one year's subscription to THE UNION and entitles you to three free counts and makes you eligible for the $50.00 prize given to winners of the first prize if they have three counts. See below.

$50.00 PRIZES—We believe every one should have three counts so they can have one on each side of what they think is correct, to be more sure to hit it. To encourage this we will give $50.00 extra to winners of first prizes if they have three counts. Remember if you have one count you get first prize ONLY, BUT IF YOU HAVE THREE COUNTS AND WIN YOU GET $50.00 EXTRA,

AWARDS will be made as follows:. The person giving correct or nearest correct count will get first prize. Next nearest correct, second prize, etc. In case of a tie for any prize it will be awarded to the person giving best plan for counting dots.

JUDGES. The awarding of prizes will be wholly in the hands of disinterested judges. The Hon. John W. Holtzman, Mayor of the City of Indianapolis, is chairman of the Committee of Judges. We are bound our contests must be ABSOLUTELY FAIR.

OUR FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES—As to whether we are abundantly able to do as we say, we refer to any bank or trust company in the city of Indianapolis. Our offer will be carried out to the letter

In the event of more than one person submitting the same plan and it being considered the best plan by the judges each person so tying will be asked to tell in fifty words how best to improve MADAME. The one making the best suggestion gets first prize, next best next, etc. UNDERSTAND THIS IS ONLY IN CASE OF TIE IN PLAN, WHICH IS NOT AT ALL LIKELY. No one connected with Madame or The Union will be allowed to compete. Contest closes July 1, 1905, but get your counts in at once. Anybody having THREE COUNTS entered may enter additional counts at 25c each. Be careful to give your plan of counting, as the best plan used will decide all ties.

PRIZES GUARANTEED—We will guarantee to give a prize worth one dollar at least, to every person who sends a correct count and $2.00 for a year's subscription to Madame and The Union.

THE DOTS—Good counters can coin dots into dollars. The contest will not last long. Make hay while the sun shines. There is fun in counting and money besides. Of course, you know how to count. Any child can count. The dots are puzzling because there are so many. That is why $6,000 in prizes will be given away free to the best counters. The better you count and plan, the better your chances for getting one of the 757 Prizes.

The more counts you register the surer you are of winning one of the big free prizes. Anybody having three counts entered may enter additional counts at 25c each.

The list of prizes is large. They are worth working for. You have 757 chances. You are as likely as anybody to get first, but if you don't get first prize there are lots of other prizes worth having. It all depends upon you. If you can count and think up a good plan you are likely to win.

= = The = = Money-Getting Faculty The Meanest and Lowest Possessed by Man

By a Wall Street Banker.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER'S fortune is now a round half billion dollars and he is adding to the pile an income of $6,000,000 a month. Many people are grieving over John D's wealth, but as for us, we are not coveting a cent of it. Spring is coming, and we do not believe that the Standard Oil Co. is going to cvorner up the sunshine or the flowers or the million other beautiful things which are the common property of all those capable of enjoying them. What if the Standard does monopolize oil; it is a dirty, ill-smelling and totally unesthetic product anyway, and we ask very little odds of it. Daylight is far pleasanter, and cheaper.

Moreover, John D. cannot take a single kopeck of his money with him, and the property he has accumulated will ultimately be redistributed for the good of the world. The water in a mill-dam is of no use to the mill-owner except to turn his mill; he can't drink it up, and as fast as he makes use of it it escapes and goes on its way, making the earth blossom and eventually being taken up by the sun, to be showered down again on the thirsty soil for the benefit of the whole human family.

Wealth, in the same way, is of no value except for its potential power, and no matter how much a man has he can consume only a certain modicum of it himself, and the rest goes to enrich the whole world.

A successful business man who has made his pile said to us the other day: "The faculties required for money-getting are the meanest and lowest of those possessed by man." Why, then, covet wealth that is produced by such faculties; why not rather strive for those higher objects which have no price-mark attached to them, and which indeed are above valuation in dollars and cents.

Mr. Rockefeller can buy some things which the rest of us cannot, but on the other hand, all his money cannot procure some of the simple pleasures which are within the reach of the average mortal. As between the lot of a healthy tramp and Mr. Rockefeller's, for instance, we think the tramp has a little the better of it. As for us, we envy the tramp his freedom more than we do Mr. Rockefeller his money.—The Pathfinder.

Owing to the large measure of success attained by the Japanese torpedo flotilla at the opening of operations, there was an hysterical outcry that battleships were doomed and that no more need be built. How little foundation there was for this is indicated by the very small influence the torpedo vessels had upon subsequent operations. If the Japanese fleet at Port Arthur had consisted only of cruisers and torpedo vessels, the Russians' fleet of battleships, cruisers and torpedo vessels would undoubtedly have escaped, and perhaps destroyed the Japanese fleets. The Russian torpedo flotilla accomplished very litle. So unless there is a universal agreement to the contrary, the battleships must be built, even though one happens, now and then, to succumb to the attacks of the torpedo or submarine boats. Captain E. L. Zalinski in the International Quarterly.

Costly Crowns.

The lightest of European crowns is the state crown of Great Britain, which was made for Queen Victoria sixty-six years ago. Although it weighs only two pounds seven ounces, its value is $1,500,000. One enormous sapphire came from the signet of Edward the Confessor. One of the rubies has a sadly tragic history. It was at one time in the possession of one of the great kings of Granada, who Pedro the Cruel invited to his palace and basely murdered. The Pope's treasure house are two crowns which are valued at $2,500,000. One of them was the gift of Napoleon to Pius VII and contains the largest emerald in the world. The other, the gift of Queen Isabella of Spain to Pius IX., weighs three pounds and is worth $1,000,000.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

AN "AUTO" IDYL.

The automobile owner crawled
With haste into his car
And said goodby, for he was called
To travel fast and far.

He grasped the steering wheel with glee
And gave the clutch a yank,
And then, with objurgations, he Climbed down again to crank.

Again he mounted to the seat
Prepared like wind to fly,
Yet there he lingered in the street
The water tank was dry.

He filled the tank; it seemed a cinch,
Once more he starts to chauff
Behold, he does not move an inch—
The differential's off.

In rage he toils with might and main
'Till he is faint and weak;
Again he starts—and stops again;
The tire's sprung a leak.

The shades of night are falling fast,
But joy illumes his brow;
He shoots ahead—his trouble's past,
Pray, who can catch him now?

And yet, around the corner, we
May find this same machine;
Its owner is not there, for he Has gone for gasolene.

VOL III.

TENTATIVELY

Nelidoff and Rosen. While Japan May Send Baron Komura and Takahira.

ANY ADVISORS WILL COME.

Interest in Armistice Is Waning Because of Receipt of News That Rainy Season Has Set In.

Washington, D. C.—Russia has given reassurance of its intentions in the peace negotiations by placing the president in possession of the tentative selection of her plenipotentiaries as follows:

M. Nelidoff, the Russian ambassador at Paris, and Baron Rosen, the newly appointed Russian ambassador to Washington. Russia thus having taken the initiative, it is believed that M. Takahira, the Japanese minister, during his call at the White House today informally told the President of Japan's selections, also tentatively, were Baron Komura, the Japanese minister for foreign affairs, and Baron Takahira, the Japanese minister to Washington.

Official Announcement Not Made.

Official announcement of the names of the plenipotentiaries is withheld for several reasons. M. Nelidoff's health may not permit him to make the trip and pressure of official work may necessitate the presence in Tokio of Baron Komura. Mr. Takahira and Baron Rosen are regarded as the certainties and the belief is that unless something unforeseen should occur, both Russia and Japan will consent to the official announcement of the personnel of the Washington conference within a few days. In any event, both sessions will consist of many advisors, including army and possibly naval officers, and officials from the foreign offices in Tokio and St. Petersburg. It is expected that altogether each session may number ten or twelve, though six plenipotentiaries be chosen by Russia and Japan, it is learned five names under consideration which will enable them to announce their third plenipotentiaries without delay.

Elevated to Ambassadorial Rank.

In recognition of his services during the preliminary negotiations and in view of the high official rank of the Russian plenipotentiaries it is believed the official announcement of Mr. Takahira's appointment will be followed by his elevation to the rank of ambassador. In view of the fact that Japan intends when the war is over to elevate her legations at Washington, London, Berlin, Paris, Vienna, St. Petersburg and Rome to embassies, it is believed Mr. Takahira's elevation would be permanent. While it is not certain that he will be given ambassadorial rank, nor is it necessary to his appointment as a plenipotentiary, officials of the American government think on this would be the regular and expected course for the Japanese government to follow.

Interest in Armistice Diminishes.

Interest regarding an armistice has largely diminished in the last few days because of the receipt of information that the rainy season is beginning in Manchuria. It is believed here that this will serve the purpose of an armistice in preventing a clash before the convening of the conference in August.

Moreover, the unofficial soundings initiated by the President at Tokio and St. Petersburg did not yield much hope for successful negotiations looking to an armistice until after the plenipotentiaries meet.

Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador, who had intended seeing the President at the White House regarding details of the negotiations, was detained at the embassy and so drove direct to the railroad station when the car of the President's departure arrived and held a brief conversation with the President on the rear platform of the latter's car. The President's greeting to the ambassador was especially cordial and the two clasped hands warmly at parting. Count Cassini was the only ambassador at the station when the President left. Baron Speck Von Sternberg, the German ambassador, was the President's guest at luncheon and other callers at the White House during the day were Sir Mortimer Durand, the British ambassador, and M. Jusserand, the French ambassador.

Shake Up in Shenandoah.

Pottsville, Pa.—Gordon Brown, a Shenandoah school director, who was convicted of bribery last week, was today sentenced to fifteen months in jail. Brown is the republican candidate for poor director. Justice W. H. Shoemaker, for illegally settling cases, has ousted from office and fined $300. Chief of Police John Frye and Patrolmen Yankowsky, Lauratus, Fazy and Waghouser, of the Shenandoah police force, were sent to jail for thirty days for illegally accepting fees.

Arrested for Abduction.

New Orleans, La.—When the Southern Pacific steamer Proteus landed at her wharf here Monday police officers placed under arrest J. Lopez, a young New Yorker, on a charge of abduction.

Lopez was accompanied by Miss Cecilia Collata Mandell, and was said to have eloped with her. When Miss Mandell's parents, who live at 241 East Twenty-fourth street, New York, learned that the couple had sailed, her mother hurried to New Orleans and was at the steamer when it reached the wharf. After Lopez's arrest the parties had an interview. Lopez expressed his eagerness to make Miss Mandell his bride and the mother finally relented. The young couple said they would reside in New Orleans.

New Railroad Seems Certain.

Jasper, Ala.—That either the Illinois Central or the Mobile and Western Alabama railroad will build a new line into Jasper from the north now seems quite probable. Colonel Mallory, representing the Mobile and Western Alabama, was in Jasper a few days ago, and was in conference with prominent business men. Nothing could be learned of the result of the conference, but it is thought it pertained to this road, which has a survey running into this city. It is learned that the Illinois Central railroad has a corps of surveyors now in the vicinity of Haleyville, locating a line, which in all probability will touch Jasper. Whether these reports have any special significance or not, it is quite certain that within a very short while some company will penetrate the vast area of timber and mineral land lying north of Jasper in Walker and Winston counties.

Held Up and Robbed.

Birmingham, Ala.—R. L. Allen reported to police headquarters that he was held up by a white man and two negroes and robbed of $54 at the corner of Twenty-first street and Alley A Monday night.

Mr. Allen gave the police a full description of the men. He says that he was standing between them and a street lamp at the end of the Twenty-first street viaduct. The light from this lamp shone full in their faces and he had a good opportunity to study their features.

A Raise in Salaries.

Washington, D. C.—The First Assistant Postmaster General has announced that there would be five new clerks at $500 each allowed the Birmingham postoffice on the first of July. The salary of the assistant postmaster is raised from $1,700 to $1,800. The salaries of the following assistant postmasters of Alabama towns have been raised $100: Troy, Tuscaloosa, Mobile.

The following have been decreased $100: Opelika, Talladega.

Anniston gets a new clerk at $400.

Shooting Affray in Georgia.

Waynesboro, Ga.—Two men are dead and one seriously wounded as a result of a shooting affray that occurred here Monday. The parties in the affair were L. D. and John Hill, of Decone, and L. Schrameck, of Augusta, and D. C. Curtis, of Saint Clair. John Hill was seriously wounded in the stomach and thigh. Curtis was shot in the face and through the heart, dying instantly, and Schrameck was shot in the head and through the heart, also dying instantly.

Accidentally Shoots Companion.

Stamford, Conn.—Herbert Birdsall, aged 18 years, accidentally shot and killed a companion, Edward Rush, son of Edward Rush, of Pelham Manor, Monday. He then ran into the woods and was afterwards found dead.

Killed by Train.

Birmingham, Ala.—Hardie Keith, a young white farmer living near Argo, on the Alabama Great Southern railway, was found lying on the railroad track near that place Monday morning at 5 o'clock with an arm and leg mashed off. He was brought to the city, where he died shortly afterwards.

Dropped Dead.

Selma, Ala.—Sunday morning while the inquest was being held over the body of William Bush, found dead along the track of the Southern railway, Wilkes LeCroix, who lived in a house near where the coroner's jury was examining witnesses, suddenly fell over and died in a short while.

First Bale of the Season.

Galveston, Tex.—The first bale of cotton of this season's growth was marketed on exchange Monday. It came from Roma, Star county, Texas, and was classed good middling. The bale came seven days later than last year and is the first bale of cotton raised in Star county in five years. It was auctioned off and sold for 30 cents per pound.

Ironclads Are Floated.

Rome, Italy—A Port Arthur dispatch received from an Italian engineer, who is engaged in raising the Russian ships sunk in the harbor there, says that three ironclads have been refloated.

WRECKED AND BURNED

Is the Fate of the Fast Lake Shore Train When Running at Highest Speed.

MORE THAN A SCORE ARE DEAD,

While an Equal Number, Horribly Burned, Taken From Weckage.

Engine Hits Open Switch.

Cleveland, O.—While traveling at the rate of seventy miles an hour the famous Twentieth Century limited, the fastest long distance train in the world, ran through an open switch at the little town of Mentor, east of Cleveland, at 9:30 o'clock Wednesday night, causing one of the most horrible wrecks in the history of the Lake Shore road.

The engine was hurled into the ditch. A part of the train was crushed on top of it and the wreck was partly burned. The horrors of the wreck were doubled in the horrors of the fire.

The train was crowded practically all its accommodations being taken when it left this city. It was behind time, and the greatest of speed was being made to make up the lost time.

Tortured by Flames.

Late reports give the number of injured as twenty-one, and of these fifteen are seriously if not fatally hurt. Practically all the injured were burned and had to be extricated from the blazing wreckage by rescue parties.

A peculiarly distressing feature of the rescue work was that the injured were so crazed when they were taken out of the wreckage that they could not even reveal their own identity, despite the urgent appeals and entreaties made by officials and others who knew how anxiously news from the wreck was awaited by families and friends of the passengers.

The order was finally given to search the living wreck victims in the hope that identification might in that way be established, but even when this was resorted to but three could be identified. The rest were demented by the agony they had undergone. The scenes that resulted from their pitiable mental condition were affecting to the point of the tragic.

Work of Criminal.

Assistant General Superintendent D. C. Moon, of the Lake Shore, on the scene of the wreck, gave out the following statement at 1 o'clock:

"So far as can be learned the switch was opened and locked by some party unknown, probably a crank, and evidently for malicious purposes. Train No. 10, a fast eastbound train, passed through the same switch forty-five minutes ahead of No. 26, and it was all right at that time. It is positive that no other train or engine, either freight or passenger, passed through the switch between No. 10 and No. 26."

Traveling at the rate of more than a mile a minute, the heavy train was hurled to its doom with a momentum that was appalling. The scene of the accident was at the Mentor depot. The switch that caused the trouble is located about 130 yards west of the depot. As the heavy engine struck the switch the engine left the main track and swung violently to the left. For a distance of twenty yards the engine ran on the rails, and then, leaping from the track, turned on its side just to the east of the depot. The momentum was such that the heavy tender was hurled entirely over the engine and was buried in the depot.

The combination car landed on top of the engine and tender, and in a moment was enveloped in flames.

Smashed to Pieces.

The Chicago sleeper, which was immediately behind the combination car, swung from the track, and crashing into the depot was completely buried in the wreck of the building. The depot collapsed on top of the wrecked coach. The passengers in this coach were crushed and maimed in the wreck and completely buried in the collapse of the structure.

The next sleeper following was left off the track behind and the other remained upright on the rails.

An instant after the crash of the wreck the boiler of the great engine burst with terrific force, scattering fire and steam through the wreck in a manner that made escape for the passengers in the combination car, which had landed on top of the engine, impossible.

The cries of the imprisoned passengers were heard above the roar, but they were beyond all human aid.

A score or more physicians from Cleveland, Collinwood, Ashtabula and Painesville were sent to the scene of the wreck at the request of the Lake Shore officials. After the physicians had treated the injured the latter were placed aboard a special train and brought to this city, where they were hurried into waiting ambulances to the several hospitals.

Burned to Death.

One of the most appalling features of the wreck was the burning of the dead and injured.

Piteous Cries.

The scene following the wreck was terrible. The night was dark save for the light from the blazing wreck. Men swarmed about the burning coach combatting the flames with the means at hand, groping their way through the scalding steam that rose in clouds, hunting for the injured, whose piteous cries chilled the heart.

There was a small water supply, and the means at hand for fighting the flames were pitifully inadequate, but the zeal of the rescuers wrought great things in the first few minutes. It was known that a number of the injured were helpless in the wreck, but though the work was done with frantic haste, the flames gradually drove the rescuers back, and after ten minutes of battle the rescuers were driven away from the blazing combination coach and the imprisoned passengers were incinerated.

Despite their help the fire burned until after midnight, and the last black and burned corpse was not recovered from the funeral pyre until 1 o'clock.

Valiant Rescue Work.

Pullman Conductor O'Neill, with his porters, did valiant work. Bedding, blankets and sheets were stripped from the berths of the four Pullman coaches and used for the relief of the sufferers.

Conductor Alexander Hammond, who escaped, started the work of rescue and led his fellow trainmen and the less seriously hurt of the passengers in deeds of rescue.

Officials of the road started an informal investigation immediately on their arrival.

Jasper Coke Ovens Start.

Jasper, Ala.—It is being circulated here that the coke ovens owned by the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, and shut down over a year ago, are to be put in operation. The reports cannot be confirmed, but owing to the present price of iron it is believed by some that the ovens could be made profitable at this time. In all probability the Tennessee Company will not resume the operations of the ovens, but reports are that some other concern may take charge of them. The Jasper people are especially pleased at the prospect of having this industry revived. It would mean a monthly pay roll of several thousand dollars.

Nelidoff is Doubtful.

Paris, France.—M. Nelidoff, the Russian ambassador here, has not been advised of his appointment as peace plenipotentiary and therefore doubts the report to that effect, as it is considered improbable that the authorities at St. Petersburg would not act without consulting him.

Engineer Wallace Arrives.

New York, N. Y.—Among the passengers who arrived on board the Orizaba from Colon was John F. Wallace, chief engineer of the Panama canal. Mr. Wallace comes here to complete arrangements which were left unfinished on his departure for the isthmus. He says that the work is progressing very satisfactorily.

Torpedo Boat is Damaged.

Norfolk, Va.—While attempting to back out of his slip at the torpedo reserve station of the Norfolk navy yard, the torpedo boat Porter caught by a heavy wind and outgoing tide, was driven stern first against the bow of the yacht gunboat Siren, lying in the rear of the receiving ship Franklin and several of her stanchions carried away.

Will Develop Gold Fields.

Knoxville, Tenn.—The Unaka Mining and Development Company has been organized by Tennessee and Ohio capitalists for the purpose of developing the gold interests in Monroe county.

Exhort Population to Be Calm.

Moscow.—The governor of Moscow has posted notices of the forthcoming mobilization of troops and exhorting the population to be calm. The mobilization is expected June 29th.

Has Carnegie Scholarship.

Henry Cook Boynton, of Cambridge, Mass., who has been awarded the Carnegie research scholarship of $500 by the Iron and Steel Institute of London, is one of the younger instructors in mining and metallurgy at Harvard. He is 30 years of age, a native of Plymouth, and entered Harvard in 1896. He received his A. B. degree in 1900 and in 1901 took the degree of master of arts. He is the third American to win this scholarship, which is awarded annually, and entitles the winner to expend $500 in research study wherever he desires. Mr Boynton intends to pursue his investigations at Harvard.

A FEARFUL EXPLOSION

The Lumber Plant a Complete Wreck—Four Dead and Three Injured.

THREE DANGEROUSLY HURT.

Pieces of Flesh Scattered in Every Direction and Lumber Plant a Complete Wreck.

Gadsden, Ala.—One of the most disastrous explosions in history of this section occurred at 7:45 o'clock Thursday morning at the large saw mill of the Attalla-Curtis Lumber company, two miles beyond Attalla and seven miles west of Gadsden, in which four men were killed and three dangerously wounded. The killed are:

The Dead.

Will Rosson, locomotive engineer, head blown off and body horribly mangled; leaves wife and four children.

Marion Maddox, struck in head by scantling and killed.

James Watts, blown one hundred feet, both legs broken and crushed to death.

J. A. Gash, blown through roof of mill and terribly mangled.

The Injured.

A. W. Smith, horribly scalded and will die.

R. M. Wood, cut on head.

A. W. Crabtree, leg broken and body bruised.

Barney Works, sawyer, head cut.

The mill was completely wrecked and the busy scene of only a few moments before was quickly turned into one of mourning. The scene was most horrible and heartrending. The groans of the wounded were added to by the wailing of the wives and children of the dead. Flesh, bones and brains of the dead were scattered for hundreds of yards and a more desolate scene could not be pictured.

The mill was started up at the usual hour. The regular engineer was absent and Will Rosson, who ran the locomotive, came in to show the substitute how to run the engine. J. B. Parker, foreman, asked Rosson to watch the boiler until he secured another man. Parker returned shortly with A. W. Smith and as Parker stepped out the boiler exploded, carrying death and destruction.

No Way for Steam to Escape.

There were three boilers, two of seventy-five horse-power and one of a hundred horse-power. The gauges showed two gauges of water and 90 pounds of steam. The supposition is that the boiler was not coupled up and there was no way for the steam to escape. Pieces of boiler found after the explosion were red hot. The boiler was blown entirely away and one piece weighing several hundred pounds was blown five hundred feet. One flue twenty feet long was blown five hundred feet, and entered the roof of a lumber building and came out a few feet further above. Flues could be seen scattered for half a mile, warped into all shapes. The splendid machinery was wrecked beyond repair.

The mill had a capacity of thirty-five thousand feet of lumber daily and was among the best equipped mills in the state.

Met With Violent Death.

Will Rosson and A. W. Smith were in the engine room when the boiler exploded. Smith was scalded all over and blown several hundred feet and will die. Rosson was blown fifty feet, his head cut off by flying timbers and his body crushed to jelly. Flying pieces of boiler tore great holes in the roof of the mill and sent death to two men at their work.

Marion Watts was struck by a large piece of timber on the head and his neck broken. He was 25 years old and had been married three months.

James Watts, who was sitting on the lumber slides, was blown fifty feet against the side of the mill and brained and whirled around feet foremost and blown one hundred yards further to the lumber pile and every bone in his body crushed.

J. A. Gash was standing near the planer. He was blown to the roof of the mill and crushed to death. Blood could be seen everywhere.

There were forty men at work in and around the mill and the wonder is that more were not killed.

The "SONS OF LIBERTY" and their fight for American Independence

IN January, 1770, there was a conflict in the streets of New York City between the military and the people—a renewal of the old warfare around the liberty-pole in the Fields. An unsuccessful attempt was made by some soldiers, on the 13th, to bring down the pole by cutting its supports and exploding gunpowder in a hole bored in the wood, followed by an assault on the citizens at the neighboring public-house of Montayne's, a place of resort on the line of Broadway at the lower end of the grounds, which was much frequented by the patriots. In another effort, on the 16th, the assailants, sheltering themselves in a ruined building near at hand, succeeded in cutting down the pole, which they sawed in pieces, and in a spirit of bravado, piled up in front of Montayne's tavern door.

An "indignation" meeting, held on the Common, naturally followed these exasperating incidents. It was numerously attended. "Three thousand," says Holt's paper, "were present." Resolutions were passed demanding that the soldiers off duty should no longer be permitted to work for the citizens, and that they should not leave their barracks after roll-call. A committee was appointed to seek permission from the Corporation to remove the vacant building on the Common, which had been a covert to the assailants of the liberty-pole. The following day placards and handbills of a derisive and defiant character, issued on the part of the soldiery, abounded in the city. The valiant Sears, with a party of his friends, came upon a trio of soldiers engaged in posting one of the challenges. One of the soldiers drew his bayonet for an assault, when he, with his fellows, were carried off to the mayor's office.

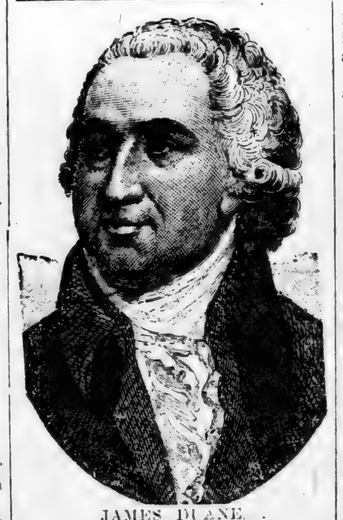
A body of twenty soldiers now made their appearance with drawn bayonets and cutlasses, who were met by the citizens with such means of defense as chance supplied. The mayor ordered the soldiers to their barracks, when they retreated to Golden Hill, a considerable eminence still to be recognized in the elevation of the lower part of John street. Here they charged upon the throng of citizens who had gathered to the spot. Francis Field, a Quaker, standing in his doorway, was wounded by a sword or bayonet thrust. Three other citizens and a sailor were wounded. The soldiers in various instances were successfully resisted and overpowered in the miscellaneous conflict, which threatened to assume larger proportions, when the soldiers were ordered by their officers to their barracks. Other disturbances of a like character ensued. Meanwhile, to give a flavor of legality to the property, the sanction of the Corporation was now sought to be obtained for the erection of a new liberty-pole on the old public ground.

Failing to obtain this concession from the prudent Common Council, the citizens purchased from a private owner a piece of land near the old spot, upon which they erected with imposing ceremonies a new pole of great height, firmly secured in the ground and formidably cased with iron bars, clasped by thick iron hoops. This mast was surmounted by another, supporting a gilt vane, on which was inscribed in large letters the word "Liberty." Another night-attack was made on this, the fifth liberty-pole, in the following March, by a party of the troops about leaving the Province. They had vowed to carry off with them a portion of it as a trophy. Unable to make any impression on the well-protected trunk, these Homeric contestants were endeavoring to unship the topmast, when they were discovered by several passing citizens, who called others to their aid. The Sons of Liberty, we may mention, were at this time kept out of their resort at Montayne's by a usurping conservative faction, who had made their own terms with the landlord. Not to be without that indispensable adjunct of political action in New York from time immemorial, a good dining-hall, the "Sons" purchased a tavern, kept by one Bicker, on the site of the old Herald building, to which the name of Hampden Hall was given. Hither the soldiers, reinforced by their comrades from the barracks, drove the citizens for refuge, and here the assailants were kept at bay while St. George's bell sounded an alarm to the town. An officer of the regiment arriving, as on similar occasions, the soldiers were sent back to their quarters, and the liberty-pole was left by them at their departure unharmed.

Alexander McDougal, the son of a Scotchman, a man destined to rise to high military rank in the coming War of the Revolution, was an early though not one of the most active members of the association of the Sons of Liberty. He now stood forth, the unflinching champion of popular rights. Bancroft characterizes him in few words: "A man who had made a fortune as a sailor, and had himself carefully cultivated his mind. Courageous and fiery, yet methodical and self-possessed."

At the Congress in September all the thirteen colonies were represented except Georgia. It was an assembly of notables. Samuel and John Adams, Roger Sherman, William Livingston, Galloway, Rodney, Chase, the Rutledges and Gadsden, with the conspicuous Virginians, Peyton Randolph, Richard Henry Lee, Patrick Henry and George Washington. The chief measures of this, the first Continental Congress, were, the formation of an American Association to carry out a general system of commercial non-intercourse with Great Britain, until the existing difficulties should be removed; and the dignified assertion of the principles at stake, in a series of able State papers, a declaration of rights, a petition to the King, and several addresses, one of which, "To the People of Great Britain," remarkable for its force and directness, was the work of the New York delegate, John Jay. The Congress closed after a short session, having made provision for the call of another, should circumstances require it, the ensuing May.

When, in January, the last of the garrison were ordered to Boston, and were about taking their departure with a quantity of arms in boxes, the latter were seized by a party of the Sons of Liberty, headed by Marinus Willett, and carried back to the deserted Fort George.



JAMES DUANE.
A Leading "Son of Liberty."

It was about this time, on the night of the 10th of May, that Myles Cooper, the President of King's College, who had become obnoxious to the popular party by his writings and personal efforts on behalf of the Crown, was visited at the college by a mob, intent on revenge. He would doubtless have been roughly handled had not time been gained for his escape by a speech from the steps by Alexander Hamilton, then a student.

Lamb, who had been commissioned a captain of artillery, was sent on the evening of the 23d to remove the cannon from the battery below Fort George. He was accompanied on this service by part of an independent corps, under Colonel Lasher, and a body of citizens led by the ever-ready Sears. Young Hamilton also was with them, with a number of his fellow-students in the college, whom he had been engaged in drilling. On their arrival at the battery the party found a barge and crew of the ship of war Asia lying under the Fort, evidently in expectation of the movement. From the boat a musket was fired upon the citizens, which was met with a volley, killing and wounding several. The barge then returned to the Asia, which opened a heavy cannonade upon the party; several were wounded and houses in the vicinity, among others Sam Fraunces' tavern, in Broad street, were injured by the shock. The city bells were rung, there was a general alarm as if the city were to be destroyed, numbers fled to the country; but in the midst of the confusion the original object, the removal of the twenty-one pieces of ordinance at the battery, was deliberately accomplished.

THE BATTLE OF GOLDEN HILL, IN NEW YORK CITY, BETWEEN THE "SONS OF LIBERTY" AND THE BRITISH SOLDIERS.

SAM FRAUNCES' TAVERN, NEW YORK, STRUCK BY THE "ASIA."

ASK the average boy what day is dearer to his heart than any other, Christmas not excepted, and invariably he will answer: "Fourth of July!"

What boy, then, would look with indifference on a Fourth of July luncheon table decorated in the following manner? Suspend a flag ball from the chandelier or ceiling. This ball is made of wire, or anything through which flags may be stuck. Use small one and two-cent flags, sticking them closely together. A ball of flags of any size is very effective.

Trim the edge of the white table cover with tiny flags crossed two by two. Have red, white and blue streamers coming from the ball to each boy's plate. On the end of each ribbon fasten a place card, each one painted with a different design.

In one corner of one card paint a little boy with a flag in his hat, beating a drum. In the other corner paint a bunch of firecrackers exploding.

On another card paint a cannon and a boy with a gun over his shoulder.

On another card paint an American flag or shield and little soldier boys marching to war with guns, flags and drums.

For the centrepiece use a large toy cannon decorated with flags. By the side of the cannon stack air guns or any sort of toy guns in stacks of three.

Another decoration can be eggs colored red, white and blue, piled on plates in cannon-ball fashion, and placed at each corner of the table.

For favors have tiny iron or pasteboard cannon at each plate, decorated with tiny flags.

Cut out pasteboard guns, paint them dark brown or black and stack three together. Pile near them large-sized shot for cannon-balls.

Have red, white and blue paper napkins or flag napkins.

Serve the following menu:

Cold Tongue, Cold Chicken,
Stuffed Eggs,
Ham Sandwiches (Tie with red, white and blue ribbon),
Little Plum Cakes,
Sugar Cookies (Cut in eagle, shield and flag shapes),
Colored Ice Cream,

FLAG LORE.

Some writers assert that the first and original United States flag contained only twelve stars, because Georgia was not entitled to a vote. Such a flag is said to have been made by the ladies of Philadelphia from the design of the escutcheon of the Washington family. It is alleged that this flag was presented to John Paul Jones, that he carried it with him on his ship, the Bon Homme Richard; that in his great fight the flag was shot away and fell into the sea, and that Lieutenant Stafford leaped overboard after it, brought it safely to the ship and nailed it to the masthead. This story may have some basis in fact, but the act of Congress of June 14, 1777, shows that no standard was recognized by the Government until that date.

SOUTHERN FARM NOTES

TOPICS OF INTEREST TO THE PLANTER, STOCKMAN AND TRUCK GROWER

Helpful Chats.

A farmer of the Piedmont country carried about forty chickens and turkeys through the winter. If he secured from that number fifty pounds of manure it was not visible. The manure for that number of hens should be worth $10 a year. He carried five or six cattle through the year. He did not have two loads of manure to show. He lost $20 there. He bought two tons of guano for $41. He applied that to poorly prepared land and the grass in the first two weeks of June used up half the plant food. There he lost $22. That is, a small two-horse farmer, through carelessness and laziness, lost $52, besides the loss in consequence of a poorly cultivated crop. There are hundreds of farmers in the land that lose by one or the other of these leaks.

A dozen or more men with families have said to the writer that they would not plant Irish potatoes. They had no luck with them and they did not care for them any way after the first mess or two. The man who depends on luck in farming ought to hire out to some good white man for wages. He is not qualified to conduct a farm. There is no luck even in this section of the country in raising the white potatoes, as they are called up North. Good soil, well prepared and fertilized, and cultivated rapidly will insure a fair crop, provided the bugs are kept off by Paris green. It is said that if the potato patch is covered with pine needles the bugs will not trouble them. Even green pine tops placed around the plants will keep them off, according to reports. There is no trouble in raising sweet potatoes. They bring a dollar a bushel now, and the crop is profitable at thirty-five cents, if sold from the field. Some people who do not depend on luck always keep potatoes till planting time. What one man does any other man can do if he tries.

Many of the oats sown broadcast last fall were killed. Some sown with a wheat drill were much injured. Those sown with the oat drill came through the severe winter in fine style. The farmers trying that plan say that they will never sow another bushel broadcast in the fall. This plan enables them to sow the heavy, productive varieties, which are always better than the late kinds that make much straw and light grain. In sowing small grain the most work should be put on the preparation of the land. After it is broken with a two-horse or disc plow and well harrowed, it is an easy matter for a hand to put in two to two and a half acres a day. He lays off, distributes the fertilizer, plants the oats and covers them at the same run, with a five-inch shovel; the rows will be about fifteen inches apart. A smaller plow will not leave the open furrow deep enough.

Farmers who have harrowed wheat and oats March 25 to April 20, claim that the yield is greatly increased. If the soil is in fair condition a weeder is better than a smoothing harrow. This implement pulverizes the soil about one inch deep. A hand with one horse can run over fifteen acres in a day. A second cultivation, provided a rain follows the first, will be beneficial. The farmers in this section who have tried this plan believe that it adds ten to twenty per cent. to the yield.—Chas. Petty, Spartanburg, S. C.

A Problem in Irish Potato Culture.

Mr. L. A. T. writes: "Would you advise planting potatoes on land that yields fifty to seventy-five bushels of corn per acre? It is upland, but very fine and easy to cultivate. Potatoes bring from forty to fifty cents a bushel here in the fall. Please give me a good fertilizer and state how to apply it for a loamy soil with a clay subsoil?"

Answer.—Land that will bring from fifty to seventy-five bushels of corn in your section of the State should grow a fairly satisfactory crop of Irish potatoes. In a favorable season and with proper fertilization, you should get 200 bushels or more to the acre, which at from forty to sixty cents will pay you very well. Of course, the potato crop is a more laborious crop to harvest and care for than corn. Potatoes give their best results on land of a loamy nature well supplied with vegetable matter. They do exceedingly well as a rule after a clover sod, or the plowing under of any leguminous crop which will add nitrogen and vegetable matter to the soil. Farmyard manure is not a satisfactory fertilizer for Irish potatoes, as it often causes them to become scabby, and therefore interferes seriously with their appearance when placed on the market. Land for potatoes should be deeply broken and carefully prepared so as to secure a fine seed bed.

Potatoes should be planted in shallow furrows six inches deep in rows three feet apart and eighteen inches apart in the drill. The best practice favors planting medium sized whole potatoes rather than to cut the seed, using only one or two eyes to the piece. Where the seed is cut it should be sprinkled lightly with gypsum or lime, which heals the wounds and keeps the moisture in the potato seed does not dry up and ... minate. FOURTH OF JULY FREE BARBECUE AT THORSBY.

The barbecue at Clanton has been called off, the committee not being able to raise the money necessary. Thorsby citizens, however, stepped into the breach Wednesday and made up the necessary in a short while All come to Thorsby, there will be a free barbecue, good music, speaking, games, etc., and a general good time. Bring your baskets to help out. There will be plenty of fine fruit.

JEMISON'S BIG DAY.

The fraternal orders of Jemison, consisting of the Masons, Odd Fellows, Daughters of Rebekah and Red Men, aided and abetted by the people of Jemison and vicinity, celebrated St. John's Day (June 24) by a grand gathering and dinner. The morning from 10 to 12 was devoted to Jemison lodge No. 411, A. F. and A. M. The lodge and visiting brethren marched from the hall to the grove, where the following officers for the ensuing Masonic year were installed by Hon. Dan H. Greene, of Birmingham: L. H. Reynolds, W. M.; Alex. Glasscock, S. W.; J. M. B. Johnson, J. W.; J. H. Patton, Sr., treasurer; J. L. Langston secretary; E. G. Cofer, S. D.; J. B. Martin, J. D.; R. H. Gaines, T. At the conclusion of the installation ceremony, which was rendered in an exceptionally fine and impressive manner by Bro. Greene, Hon. L. H. Reynolds made a short talk and then he introduced Judge Greene to the audience as the orator of the day. Bro. Greene made a short address on the Masonic order and its objects, etc., which was listened to by the throng present with the deepest attention. At high noon dinner was served by the ladies, and the tables fairly groaned under the weight of good things to eat piled upon them; there was enough for all present and plenty left. Every portion of the long tables looked equally attractive, but ye writer sought and found that particular spot presided over by Mrs. Alex Glasscock and Mrs. T. J. Hubbard and her bevy of charming daughters, he knowing by past experience that it "was good to be there." After dinner the Odd Fellows' officers were installed by Prof. J. T. Blakemore, of Birmingham, who afterwards made an address upon the "underlying principles of the order." He likewise followed the advice so often given by the Birmingham News, "When you are away from Birmingham, talk it up," for he expatiated on the charms of Birmingham as a convention city, and laid great stress upon the beauties of the city and its hospitality. This was in reference to the grand encampment of Odd Fellows to be held there next year. The Red Men then "whooped" up things, and put "tomahawks" and "wampum" on their officers by the aid of Mr. Englehardt, of Montgomery, who afterwards started to address the audience but had to give it up on account of hoarseness. Take it all around, it was a day to be "remembered with a white stone." The crowd was large but the order was perfect. There was a photographer who "took" the different lodges, he also "shot" some groups with his kodak that were not aware of his act; one group of about a dozen young ladies at the side of the road, who must have made a beautiful picture. The carrousal or "flying jenny" was kept busy, many parents "just riding around to take care of the children." The Lemonade and ice cream stands did a "land office business." There were many visitors to the different lodges whom we intended to mention, but the several secretaries did not send in the lists as they promised.

ATTENTION, FARMERS!

On Saturday, July 8, a meeting will be held at Thorsby to sign articles of incorporation and to perfect the organization of a Warehouse, Cotton Gin and Fertilizer Company, with headquarters at Thorsby. It is to be a company of the farmers and controlled by the farmers, but others than farmers may subscribe for shares and hold stock.

The object of the company is to promote the interests of the farmers in storing and selling cotton seed and cotton, and to reduce the price of fertilizer to the farmers, and especially to the stockholders.

The capital stock will be $25,000, divided into 1,000 shares of $25 each. On each share subscribed for the shareholder will be required to pay $5 at the time of signing the articles of incorporation and probably $5 later when required by the board of directors. It is thought that not over $10 or possibly $15 per share need be paid in, unless the business should be extended in the future to other objects than those enumerated above.

Come to Thorsby and subscribe for at least one share of stock, and get your neighbor to do likewise. Be sure to be at the meeting. Ten o'clock Saturday, June 8.

INSTRUCTIONS TO TEACHERS AND DISTRICT TRUSTEES RELATIVE TO PREPARATION OF TEACHERS' MONTHLY REPORTS.

Clanton, Ala., June 27, 1905.

I wish to impress the importance of the proper preparation and signing of monthly reports by the teachers and district trustees. While in most cases this is done, but I find that some teachers are not careful in this matter, as well as some trustees. The law directs that the trustees must sign these reports, and at least two of them. This means that two trustees must sign the reports, not one trustee sign for two. Teachers must swear to each have two trustees to sign each report from any and all districts from which they expect to draw money. They must see that the right number of district is placed on the report, from which money is to be paid. All numbers and writing on the reports must be with pen and ink. Teachers must also state on the file side of report that they desire money remitted by check and sign their name, unless they meet me at Clanton to receive their pay. All reports must reach me by the first Saturday in each month. Teachers failing to comply with these requirements will fail to receive any pay until it is done. Teachers failing to get their reports to me by the first Saturday in each month will not get any pay until the next pay roll. It is the duty of district trustees to visit the schools, and see that teachers have complied with the terms of their contracts before they sign the monthly reports, for under the law you must sign them every month. By complying with the above, you will save me much trouble and yourselves annoyance and delay.

Crops looking better since the rain; corn about laid by, and I can see a good many cotton blooms. The fine pig that Mr. Crowson bought of Winslow died a few days ago, but he went back and bought another. J. E. Gentry has bought himself a new buggy. Hello! Whippowill, have you got able to hallow again? It's strange to me that when you stock law people are in the stock law counties you don't stay there, where they raise so many hogs and all live so well. Has young Gentry gone into some big business? We have a nice Sunday school at Center Hill, and we hope to see it grow. Well, we all went to Jemison Saturday, and enjoyed the day fine—plenty of dinder, and all went smoothly. Lets hear from Little Bill, Young Bill, Lonesome Bill and if there are any more Bills, just walk right up.

RANDOLPH.

THE UNION, with its splendid array of correspondents, is the people paper. M. C. Crumpton came down from Birmingham last week. Harvey Nix and Miss Pearl Meroney went to Jemison Saturday. S. P. Franklin and family, of Pleasant Grove, were welcome visitors Saturday. Mr. Franklin is a strong friend of the people's cause. Clyde Day, our clever night operator, is back at his post after a short vacation. John Prim, mail carrier on R. F. D. No. 1, went to Jemison Saturday. William Rasberry and family were welcome visitors Saturday. Mr. J. H. Thomas and daughter, Miss Ellen, of Pleasant Grove, were in town Wednesday. Miss Lizzie Waldrup was in town Wednesday. We had a large lot of visitors last week; among them we noticed W. G. Hayes and wife, S. G. Glasscock and wife, Dr. Edgard Givhan, of Montevallo; J. M. Merchant, of Maplesville; Geo. Martin and Mr. Sims, of Providence. Quint Meroney came over Saturday evening on a visit to his mother. Frank Martin is making some improvements on his residence. Mrs. Darthulia Gibson was in town Saturday. Carl Jones has been appointed carrier on R. F. D. No. 2. We are all pleased with the official record of Judge Reynolds, and are glad to see him prosper. He is of the people. Chosen by them, he has ever defended the people's cause. No opposer could ever successfully stand before him. He has passed through many political battles, and always victorious, because he listens to his people. And the people are glad to honor a man of such bravery. He has been tried and never denied, and proved to be true "grit." And we believe his record will show that the people made no mistake when they elected L. H. Reynolds judge of probate.

In regard to warehouse and fertilizer factory that was to have been put up by the farmers, has gone the way of many other things—into the hands of a few—and the farmers interested shoved to one side. Of course, any set of men has a right to organize and put up anything they wish and operate it for a profit, but the Farmers' Alliance started out to build a warehouse and fertilizer factory for their mutual benefit and what has become of it, well, we can guess. The County Alliance appointed a committee of three of formulate a plan, get the best inducements possible from the different towns in the county, and when they got the best inducements to locate the factory there, and open their books for subscriptions and push the thing to completion. We hoped that it would be done in the interest of the farmers. Well we know how things has turned out, but that's all right. The proposition is still open at Thorsby to the Farmers' Alliance for a warehouse, etc., and so we must go ahead and see that we get a factory at Thorsby for the farmers and by the farmers for their mutual benefit. From the best information we can get Thorsby is the only town that offered any inducements to the farmers for the factory, and we farmers can build it, and we will build it. Be on your guard, Farmers' Alliance, and watch as you have heretofore. We may be fooled a while, but not all the time. We have dropped the hot iron before, and when it burns our fingers we will drop it again.

With best wishes for THE UNION, a farmer,

DEATH OF R. S. OWENS.

Died at Kincheon, Ala., on June 22, 1905, R. S. Owens, aged 73 years. The interment took place at Shiloh church on Friday morning, June 23. Clanton lodge, No. 423, A. F. and A. M., attended the services in a body, meeting the funeral procession from his late residence at the church, where Rev. T. J. Deason preached an eloquent sermon, at the close of which the relatives took a last look at the beloved remains. The Masonic pallbearers then carried the body to the adjoining cemetery and laid the veteran brother away with full Masonic honors. Bro. Owens had resided at Kincheon for nearly 30 years, and had been a consistent member of Shiloh Baptist church for about 18 years. In early life he was connected with the Methodists. He leaves a widow, three sons, J. H., J. J. and E. B. Owens, and one daughter, Mrs. T. J. Billingsley, and 38 grandchildren. The church was filled with sorrowing relatives and friends, showing the high esteem in which he was held by his neighbors.

TOM WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

Vol. II, No. 1, The July Number, to be Illustrated and Greatly Improved.

As a token of appreciation of the liberal support given it by the public, Tom Watson's Magazine for July (commencing the second volume) will come out June 25th with illustrations, cartoons, head and tail pieces, etc., 128 pages of good reading to take home with you.

Of course, size isn't the only thing Tom Watson's Magazine is proud of. Quality first, size afterward, is its rule of action. There are plenty of good magazines now being published—but none of them can take the place of Tom Watson's, because no other editorial writer in America can feel the public pulse and diagnose social and political ills as Tom Watson does. Not that there is any lack of good editorial writers—big, brainy men, who know how to write strong English—but there is only one Tom Watson; and he always commands attention and respect, even of those who combat his ideas most vigorously.

Tom Watson's is "a magazine with a purpose back of it," and the success it has attained, in the "swaddling clothes" period of its existence, shows that the American people are intensely interested in Mr. Watson's purpose, regardless of party names or affiliation. That success has been greater than the most ardent friend of Mr. Watson and his magazine had hoped for. From the very first it has enjoyed a steady growth in subscriptions and news stand sales. There has been no "boom," no mushroom growth to die suddenly, no sky-rocket ascent to fall a broken stick. Tom Watson's Magazine has been chary of using professional subscription solicitors, but relies upon local agents and clubbing with the country newspapers. The subscribers thus secured are the kind that renew year after year and form an "Old Guard," invaluable alike to the publisher and his advertisers.

Mr. Watson was last year the People's Party candidate for President, and, of course, his magazine editorially is an advocate of Populism—or Jeffersonian Democracy, as some prefer to call it. The magazine is especially strong in support of municipal ownership of railroads, telegraphs, a parcels post, etc. But Tom Watson's Magazine is by no means all politics. About half its space is devoted to serials, novelettes, short stories, poems, jokes, cartoons, illustrations and special articles by the world's best writers and artists; an Educational Department; news summary; "The Say of Other Editors," etc., etc.; $1 per year by mail; ten cents per copy at the news stands.

THE UNON recognizes that the question of public ownership is one that can not longer be ignored and that it must be settled before many years. To secure a satisfactory settlement the people must be educated to act intelligently upon it; and to secure such education every phase of the question must be discussed. "Public control" will undoubtedly be tested thoroughly first, and if it works satisfactorily the "public ownership" feature will be dropped. But if "control" should fail "ownership" will inevitably be the next step. Accordingly, to help in an educational way, THE UNION has arranged a clubbing combination whereby our readers may renew for one year and secure Tom Watson's Magazine a year for only $1.50. Hand or send this amount to this office. We have also arranged for free sample copies of the magazine to be sent to any person cutting out the coupon below and mailing it to Tom Watson's Magazine, No. 121 West 42d street, New York city.

SAMPLE COPY COUPON.

Tom Watson's Magazine, No. 121 W. 42d St., New York City:

The undersigned, a reader of THE UNION, desires a free sample copy of Tom Watson's Magazine, as per reading notice published in that newspaper. This is not an order for subscription.

LOCALS AND PERSONALS.

G. W. Jones was a welcome visitor Thursday.

J. D. Wyatt was in Clanton Saturday.

J. W. G. Kicker was in town Monday.

T. J. Hubbard was in Clanton Monday and Tuesday.

Lee Vickers was a pleasant visitor Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Childress were in town Monday.

The Melton habeas corpus case was continued last Thursday until the 29th, as several of the state's most important witnesses were absent, and Melton's lawyer would not accept the "showing" which Solicitor J. O. Middleton made for them. It is reported that Melton was quite sick the fore part of this week.

Rev. L. H. Hasty, of Talladega, pastor of the Baptist church at Tallassee will preach in the First Baptist church of Clanton Friday at 8 p. m.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Riggins were in Clanton Tuesday.

S. B. Adams was in town Tuesday.

J. P. Haynes was a pleasant caller Tuesday. He has large real estate holdings in Clanton.

D. C. Honeycutt and L. B. Pounds were in Clanton Tuesday.

City Treasurer Caverno, of Thorsby, was in town Tuesday.

A. G. Dake made a trip to Thorsby Monday.

Clanton has lost a good family, Mr. and Mrs. James M. Moore moved to Selma Tuesday, where they will reside in future. Mr. Moore will open a large painting establishment there, and has numerous orders already. They will be missed in the Baptist church, of which they were zealous members, Mr. Moore being a deacon in the church. May health and prosperity attend them.

Rev. J. T. Eckford filled his regular appointment Sunday at the Methodist church, preaching in the morning to a small congregation. It was the only religious service in town, and less than 1 per-cent. of the inhabitants attended. The children's services in the evening for the benefit of indigent Sunday schools drew a large congregation.

Clanton lodge No. 423, A. F. and A. M., installed their officers for the ensuing Masonic year in the hall beneath the lodge room Saturday. After the ceremony the lodge and their guests enjoyed a barbecue and basket dinner in the grove adjoining the lodge. Prof. J. W. Moore, who is the new worshipful master, says everybody had a splendid time.

The Gullahorn Lumber Company was incorporated on the 26th inst., capital $5,000.00 paid up; office, Clanton. Incorporators: L. E. Gullahorn, E. T. Gullahorn and W. A. Collier; to operate saw mill, shingle mill, planing mill, etc.

Assist. State Examiner G. F. Sedberry finished examining the accounts of the county officers in relation to the state Tuesday, and has sent it to the governor, who examines it before it is made public, that being the regular procedure. It seems like the county should protect itself the same as the state. When are we going to have that examination recommended by the grand jury?

Calvinu Dennis has been quite ill, but is now convalescing.

A. P. R. Dahl, our county surveyor, started on Wednesday to lay out P. D. Wilson's addition to the town of Clanton into streets and lots. Mr. Dahl is an exceedingly accurate surveyor, a quality absolutely necessary in dealing with land lines.

"Doc" Ayers brought in ten bales of cotton Wednesday and didn't know whether he'd take 9 cents for it.

Judge Reynolds is in great demand nowadays. He will be at Cedar Grove Saturday, Mars Hill Sunday and Wadsworth's Mill, near Rushton, on July 4. Let the good work go on.

Dr. J. P. Hayes went to Birmingham, Wednesday.

Hon. J. Osmond Middleton, of Clanton, has been invited to address the citizens of Montgomery county on July 4, and has accepted the invitation. Those same citizens sure have an oratorical treat in store for them.

Cotton is going slow but sure, and the weak-kneed ones will be sorry they sold.

He is an unreasonable bachelor who kicks against the proposed tax when he thinks of the tax which the milliners' convention is preparing to levy on the married men.

James Swinburne, in Electrical Review, remarked: "If you glance round at the work of some of our big men you will be surprised to see how many made their reputation by doing one small thing, but doing it well."

Missouri has a new game law that will prevent the ladies from trimming their hats with the plumage of birds. The legislators who voted for this measure may as well save useless expense and decline a renomination, concludes the Pittsburg Gazette.

Forty years ago, or even twenty years ago, who would have ventured to predict that Fitzhugh Lee would die a general officer on the retired list of the United States Army? asks the Chicago Chronicle. Surely "the war is over," even though an occasional family jar may momentarily ruffle the serenity of the sisterhood of States.

The population of the city of New York as a whole is now more than four millions, and it seems to be increasing at a more rapid rate than in the past decade. The volume of immigration to this port is larger than ever. It has been more than 300,000 since January, and the new arrivals are of a sort of which a very great percentage always remains here. Of course, this increase of population distributes itself over the different boroughs of the town, continues the New York Sun, but a large part of it sticks to Manhattan Island or remains on this side of the East River, in the Bronx.

Graduation from the Naval Academy at Annapolis is not a prerequisite to winning a commission in the Navy. Not long ago nine enlisted men were promoted to the rank of ensign, having shown themselves fit for service along with those who had had the formal training of the Naval Academy. The promotions were made under a recent act of Congress, which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to recommend to the President not more than twelve men each year from among the boatswains, gunners or warrant officers whom he considers capable of performing the duties of ensign. The men so promoted are in line to become rear-admirals, or even admirals.

If you are really "a good man," if you can really do good work in any line, you do not need capital, avers the Atchison Globe. In every trade newspaper you will find advertisements of this character: "The services of a good man more important than capital." A cry goes up from every quarter for really good men; men who can accomplish results; men who will not cause more trouble around a shop than their services are worth. Of course, you say you are "a good man," but if you can prove it you are all right. There is no end to the possibilities of a young man who has good habits, good health and is able to do something well.

It Pays, An Ad In This Paper.

The "Tainted Money" Issue.

By Dr. Artemas Jean Haynes.

IF JESUS were here in the world today the few who have made themselves strong out of the many, those who have broken the laws and practised extortion and bribery, who have robbed the poor by trading upon public privileges for private gain, who have bought and sold lawmakers and those set to administer laws, who have openly defied every state and federal authority and prostituted those institutions on which free government rests—those men, if Jesus were here in the world, would find a great gulf fixed between themselves and the Christ; they would find it utterly impossible to get into any sort of alliance with Him until they had become penitent.

But what evidence have you that Mr. Rockefeller would fall into this class of the few concerning whom you have spoken? may be asked. May you not be doing him great injustice? Did not our Lord say, "Judge not," and have you, a Christian minister, any right openly to violate that command? Let me answer by saying, "Yes, our Lord did say judge not," but He also said "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The fruit of this man's life and work is in ten thousand homes today, and it is exceedingly bitter to the taste. No legal judgment, men say, has been passed upon him, therefore you should wait. But what are we to wait for? What are juries and judges and courts and legislatures to this man? They are but the playthings of an idle hour. More than a dozen state legislatures and the federal government itself are today investigating charges against the company of which he is the head. What will it all amount to? Nothing, until the people speak.

The courts can be bought, but the American people cannot be bought, The legislatures can be bought, the churches can be bought, but the American people cannot be bought. The plain people are used to giving blunt names to things, and they call this man a robber.

Great heavens! is there nothing certain in this world until some court of law has passed upon it? I have not the lawyer's mind, but I do have the intelligence of the average man, and for seven years since I read Mr. Lloyd's "Wealth and Commonwealth" to the time of closing Miss Tarbell's vivid story, I have studied this man's company and its methods. If this man has not perjured himself no man ever did; if this man has not robbed the people, no man ever did; if this man, through the company which he dominates, has not broken the laws no man ever did.

It would almost seem that Providence had arranged this offer of $100,000 in order to give the Congregational church an opportunity to take the high moral ground which would enable it to speak with authority the message that this age requires. No other such opportunity has ever come to us as a church.

Above all other men in our American nation this man is despised. His membership in the Christian church and his alliance with religious organizations have done more than any other single influence to alienate the workingman from the church. God has given us our chance to strike, and to strike in the place where the blow will cut the deepest. What is the extension of our educational work when measured against the opportunity of speaking the fine, clear word that might have been spoken?

How shall we answer such a blunt old proverb as this? The answer is as bad as a thief. We cannot answer it.

Ruined Rhapsody.

"All for you!" the lover cried
To the maid with eyes of blue;
"All the world I lay aside—
All for you!

"I will gain a heap of gold,
Jewels rare of every hue;
Earth's delights I will unfold—
All for you!

"All my life I consecreate
To your service—I will do
Deeds that men shall reckon great,
All for you!

"I shall——" But, as if in doubt,
She refused to hear him through Murmuring, "That will be about
All for you!"

A DAUGHTER OF THE WORLD

BY LUCIUS DUNBAR

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

When Florence declared she would rather go to the woods with Papa on his hunting and fishing trip, than to go abroad with Aunt Mary or to Saratoga with Mamma, they all thought she was crazy.

"What in the world one could do to pass the time, for the life of me, I can't see," remarked Mamma.

"No comforts, no luxuries, no balls, no tennis, no golf—nothing that I can see excepting mosquitoes and bugs and cheap hotels," added Irene, tossing her queenly head.

"And no men," concluded Myra, shrugging her shapely shoulders.

Florence laughed good-naturedly. "Well, it will be different, at any rate," she responded. "I'm tired to death of Pullman cars and palatial steamer saloons and stately hotel rooms and the eternal breakfasting and luncheoning and dining and supping. Yes, and I'm tired of golf and tennis and automobiles and balls. And the men in our set don't interest me. They're all alike. So I'm going with Papa and see how he has his fun. It must be pretty good fun; I notice he always escapes and goes on his outings alone when he gets a decent chance. Maybe I won't like it, but I'm going to try it this season anyway. You girls needn't complain. It will make one less girl to divide the men with."

And so to the woods went Florence with Papa. He demurred a bit at first at the idea of dragging a girl about with him, but Florence always had been his favorite and they were famous comrades. He would have rebelled had it been any other woman in the world, but he knew that Florence was sensible and would mind her own business and not get in the way. One of her good qualities—one which had appealed strongly to him since she was a very little girl, was a certain resourcefulness which enabled her to be happy and contented with her own thoughts and occupations without depending on others. For the rest, he knew he would enjoy her companionship and her bright wit.

Nor was he disappointed. She took pot luck such as the rough hotel offered without a murmur. He taught her to shoot and fish, but she declined to go with him on his fishing and hunting expeditions, realizing that she would spoil them. They had gone far into the Northern woods, many miles from a railroad, to one of these rare spots which the enthusiastic sportsman smells out, where all is yet wild and unbroken by the ravages of civilization save for a rough cabin or two and the crude log structure labeled "Hotel." Delamont's pater was an enthusiastic hunter and fisherman, and each year sought some such spot and plunged into the hardy out-of-door life with enthusiasm for some weeks, recuperating his tired nerves for the long months of fierce professional work.

So day after day he went out with a guide or some chance companion and the girl was left to her own devices. At the start her father had brought to her a guide in the person of Jasper Coonradt, a young woodsman born on the shores of the lake, and told her he had arranged that this particular guide should be at her service for any excursions she might desire to take, recommending his reliability and valor in strongest terms. She did not go about much at first, contenting herself with reading and dreaming in the supernal quiet of the primeval forest. She took some long boat rides on the lake, admiring as much the iron muscles and skill of Jasper as he wielded his paddle, as the magnificent scenery and the limpid water. She went on one or two hunting expeditions with her guide and learned how little she really knew of the secrets of nature. She began to have an awe of this young savage, untutored in the knowledge of men, but wise in everything pertaining to animals and growing things.

Jasper was an unusual man. The son of a political refugee who had fled from Europe and buried himself in the depths of the forest, he doubtless had in him better blood than he knew. Left an orphan at an early age, he had grown up practically alone and was full of that great reserve power which belongs to men who live much alone. He had learned to read and write and cipher a little and this constituted his culture. But in every branch of woodcraft he was a master and physically he was a perfect young giant.

After he had conducted Miss Florence on a few expeditions and his reserve wore off, he began naturally to unfold the mysteries of nature to her, and she became deeply interested in exploring this great new world under his guidance. Nor was Jasper himself without interest to her. Never before had she seen a perfectly natural man, and as she came to know him better she realized that never before had she known so powerful a man mentally and spiritually as well as physically. The puppets of society, the dandies of the ball room, the boulevard and the opera became contemptible to her, and the hollowness of their lives loathsome.

As for Jasper Cooradt, Florence was the first lady from the outer world he had ever seen and his wonder knew no bounds. All the women he had ever seen were Indian squaws and the few wives of the lumbermen and settlers—all old and of a very different sort than this dainty bit of Dresden China which had floated his way. Her daintiness, her beauty, her culture, her learning, her marvelous clothes all impressed him profoundly. As a whole, she was a mystery to him.

Now, what do you think happened? Of course, my romantic young woman readers will shout in chorus: "He fell in love with her." And my romantic young women readers are right. That is exactly what happened. He fell in love with her so deeply that all the sunshine in the world seemed absorbed in that one little bundle of femininity and all the rest of the world was dark.

One day just before the Delamonts were about to start home the woodsman took Florence upon a hill which commanded a view of his rough cabin, and here he told her of his love.

"I don't reckon you kin love a great rough Injun like me," said he. "And I don't reckon you could live happy up here in the woods—if ye could you'd make me the happiest man in the world—but I couldn't let you go without telling you of it. I want you always to know that up here in the woods in a rough little cabin there's a heart that's beatin' for you all the time. I don't know much of the world and I don't reckon I ever could do much out yonder, but if ever there is anythin' I kin do to make you happier, let me know an' I'll do it if it can be done."

And all at once all the world faded away from Florence save only the woods and the lake and the little cabin and the straight, quivering figure before her. And she knew that the world was well lost.

"And if I should stay?" she whispered.

"If you should stay?" he repeated, looking at her in bewilderment. Then catching the significance of her flushed cheeks and her drooping eyes, he exclaimed, "If you will stay I will build the biggest and finest cabin in all the woods, and it will be my thought all the day and my dream all the night to learn to make you happy. Will you—can you——" He clasped her tight to him, unresisting.

And stay she did despite imperative Papa and hysterical Mamma and storming Aunt Mary and chattering sisters and an amazed world and a be-pictured press and a busy Mrs Grundy.

RELIGION IN MANY TONGUES.

Thirty-Eight Languages Used in a Celebration at Rome.

A religious celebration took place at the college of the Propaganda, in Rome, recently, which was attended by students from all parts of the world, who spoke or chanted in thirty-eight different languages.

The first language on the list was Hebrew, says the New York Herald, in which a Maronite student spoke. Then followed poetic compositions in Greek and Latin, after which the languages of Asia were in evidence.

Sumaritan was spoken by Ephrem Haddad of Diarbeker, and in their turn there were heard Arabic Asforica, a dialect of Arabic; Syriac, Ethopian, Coptic, Turkish, Kurdish Chinese, by John Inen, a Chinese; Malabaric, literary Armenian, Bacca, a dialect of Zulu, by a student from Natal; vulgar Armenian, literary Chaldaic, Caffre, a dialect; Zulu, Tamul and Vulgal Chaldaic.

Next came the languages of Europe—Portuguese, by a Brazilian student; German, by Franz Renner of the diocese of Columbus, O.; Hungarian, English, by Francis James from England; Latin, by a student from Zante; modern Greek, by a student from Santorin; German dialect poetry, by Friedrich Prieshoff of Cincinnati, O.; Rhetian Romanic, Irish, by William O'Brien, from Ireland; Scotch Gaelic, by John MacDonald of Nova Scotia; Roumanian, Norwegian, Albanian; French, by Samuel Lange, a Canadian; Polish and Dutch.

Too Heavy to Handle.

Elliott S. Ranney, the well-known New York Athletic club automobilist, is constantly experimenting with new machines, and not long since had a car made to order from original designs with 150 horse power. This was quite a step forward in the size of automobiles, as the largest practicable car is now 100 horse power, and even that is considered by many experts to be too much.

As the giant machine approached completion Ranney's misgivings grew in proportion. Finally the new car was finished, trundled out into the roadway, and everything put in readiness for the start.

Ranney took hold of the crank, but the pressure was too great and he could not budge it, although he is a very muscular man. After two or three more ineffectual attempts he let go of the crank, and with a great sigh of relief, exclaimed:

"Thank God!"—New York Times.

Professor Wentworth and John J.

The stories told at the expense of Prof. Wentworth, commonly known as "Bull" Wentworth, and for years connected with the Phillips Exeter academy, are legion. The following, however, is one of the best:

It was the custom on opening day for each instructor to take the names of pupils of his classes.

"Now," said Prof. Wentworth on one occasion, "I want every boy to give his full name. If your name is William Henry Smith say William Henry Smith, and not W. H. Smith nor William H. Smith."

The list was nearly completed satisfactorily when the name of John Jay Brown was given. The professor's chance had come, and he roared out: "John J. Brown: John J. Brown; will any one tell me how to spell J?"

"Yes, sir," said the boy, "J-a-y," and Prof. Wentworth laughed with the rest.—Boston Herald.

Some Garden Enemies.

How a plant can survive nowadays is a mystery, for almost everyone has some special enemy or enemies; in fact, their name is legion, says the Garden Magazine. There are biters, borers, suckers and cutters; there are mildew, rust, blight and scab. While there are wholesale methods of destroying most of them, there are about two dozen "critters" that have to be known by sight and fought by special methods. All insects may be divided into two classes, the biters and the suckers. The way to get rid of the pests that bite and chew is to poison their food, but the fellows that suck the juices and pay no attention whatever to poison on the outside surface of a plant have to be met and slain in open battle.

Johnny on Twins.

When asked to write a short composition on some interesting experience, Johnny, after much labor, handed his teacher the following:

"Twins is a baby, only it's double. It usually arrives about 4.37 in the morning when a fellow is getting in his best licks sleepin'. Twins is accompanied by excitement and a doctor. When twins do ennything wrong, their mother can't tell which one to lick, so she gives it to both of 'em so as to make sure. We've got twins to our house, and I'd swap 'em enny day fer a billy goat or mcs' ennything."—Success Magazine.

ATE EVIDENCE AGAINST HIM

Prisoner Stops Trial by Chewing and Swallowing a Forged Check.

The Kings county court was thrown into disorder and dismay, says a Seattle special to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, when the prisoner at the bar, H. R. McTavish, ate all the evidence in the case on trial. McTavish was being tried on a charge of forging a $15 check. The check lay on the trial table, marked "exhibit A." McTavish sat beside his counsel, who was engaged in cross-examining a witness for the prosecution.

The case was going against McTavish when his eye fell on the check, which was about to be introduced in evidence. Like a half-starved man and with a look of hunger in his eye, the prisoner pounced upon "exhibit A" and chewed it to pulp.

With soulful satisfaction he gulped it down. The prosecution was in consternation, for its main piece of evidence was gone, and demanded that a stomach pump be used forthwith. While the lawyers argued pro and con, the prisoner calmly picked his teeth with a whittled match, plainly the master of the situation. The defense argued that the ball of paper in the defendant's stomach could in no wise be construed as documentary evidence, and that a dismissal was proper.

The case of the state of Washington against H. R. McTavish is now in statu quo pending the untangling of the legal question involved from the defendant's impromptu luncheon.

The Mean Godfather.

Congressman Morrell, of Philadelphia, in a discussion of the Delaware river appropriations, mentioned a mean man.

"There are many mean men," he said, "but this man surely was the meanest of them all. Besides being mean he was also rich.

"To a poor young couple living near him a son was born and they decided to name their son after the mean man, and to ask him to stand as its godfather.

"He consented. He was flattered.

"Thereupon the joy of this poor young couple was great. They wondered what gift the rich godfather would give to his little godson. Perhaps a house and lot? Perhaps a half dozen government bonds? Perhaps a herd of cattle?"

Senator Morrell paused and smiled.

"What do you suppose," he said, "the mean man sent the youngster? He sent it, sir, a cup that one of his Cochin China hens had won at a poultry show."

"Exclamatory" All Right.

While the oil excitement was at its height in Texas several years ago John W. Gates put up at a hotel in Beaumont where colored girls are employed as waitresses.

At the dinner table, on the evening of his arrival, wishing to be pleasant to the girl, who had taken great pains to see that he had everything he wanted, he turned to her and said, not knowing whether she was married or not: "How is your husband, Eliza?"

"He ain't much bettah, Sah," replied the girl.

"Oh, then he's been sick. What's the matter with him." asked Mr. Gates.

"Why, de doctah say he got exclamatory rheumatism, Sah."

"Exclamatory rheumatism! You mean inflammatory, don't you? Exclamatory means to cry out," said Mr. Gates.

"Dat's jes' it, Sah. Dat's jes' it. He do nuthin' but cry out all de time."—New York Times.

The Ignorant Landsman.

Capt. Kaempf, of the Deutschland was entertaining a little group of passengers with sea stories.

"Why is it," said Capt. Kaempf, "that landsmen are so ignorant of the sea? Seaman are not ignorant of the land. It is only, in fact, through knowing the land well enough to avoid it, that seamen keep their ships afloat.

"But landsmen's ignorance of the sea—it is deplorable."

"In Bremen, one day, I saw a farmer looking at the shipping in the harbor. A 'longshoreman was explaining the shipping to him. Finally I heard the 'longshoreman say:

"'It is low water, now, sir.'

"The farmer took his pipe out of his mouth and pointed it solemnly toward a heavily-laden tramp steamer that was passing.

"'It's a good thing for that vessel going past that it is low water,' he said. 'The water's near over the edge of her now.'"

The Valley Road.

At eventide I shade my eyes
And peer into the west,
Where, winding down the shining plain,
And round each shaded crest,
The high road goes the sunset way,
Upon the endless quest.

Full many a traveler I have seen
(And one was passing fair)
Go down the valley from the door
And swiftly vanish there.
Some I have sped upon their path
And lightened some of care.

One day I too shall take my staff
And down the valley go,
For one who went was passing fair,
And waits for me, I know,
And I shall find her—O, my soul!
Beyond the sunset glow.
—James Owen Tryon in New England Magazine.

Ready to Be Tempted.

What would a Christian do with Rocefeller's wealth? asks the Pittsburg Post. Well, we can't say much on the hypothetical case, but if some one will arrange a transfer of a large slice of that oily lucre to us we stand ready to present the world with an object lesson on the subject.—Atlanta Herald.

Wounded Lion Killed Him

The Indian mail to hand brings us vivid and pathetic details of the death of Major Carnegy during the lion-shooting exploit in the Gir forest district. The major, of course, was the political officer of the viceroy, says the London Pall Mall Gazette, and the expedition had been arranged by Lord Lamington on the site of the lion hunt prepared for Lord Curzon five years ago, but never fulfilled. It is believed there are sixty or seventy lirons in the Gir, and the major, having spent the last couple of years in the vicinity, knew the Junagadh better than any one.

On March 9 a tracker arrived who had been attacked by a lion while riding into camp, and while he dropped his weapons and escaped it was only by abandoning his pony and seeing the animal carried off.

The "shoot" was divided into three parties with the major in the second, and it entered the jungle to a depth of about ten miles. The major and his two friends, Mr. du Boulay and Capt. Foljambe, selected a tree, each ranging along a nullah, and the two latter fired at a fine lion, wounding him high in the right shoulder. The major also hit a lioness. The natives also fired their old-fashioned guns, and it was thought safe to descend the trees for a consultation and search for the wounded quarry.

The lioness appeared and ran for a shikari, but the major fired and dropped her head. Then there was a pause for drinks, and the party commenced to follow the lion's trail down the nullah for a mile or so. Now and then the men ascended trees to keep a lookout, and at last the party came into a clearing with waist-high grass instead of trees.

Suddenly there was a roar and the lion dashed out, making straight for the major, who fired one shot, just grazing the beast. Simultaneously there was a struggling cloud of dust in which the natives say they saw the lion beat the major down with a blow of his paw. Capt. Foljambe fired, Mr. du Boulay ran up and fired point blank at the lion's heart, a native fired into his hind quarters, while others clubbed it with a rifle-butt and swords. The major was found to be dead. He must have died instantaneously. The body was carried on a charpoy by torchlight and conveyed back to Rajkote by special train, and the shock caused by the news throughout the Junagadh district was intensely felt.

It is added that the lion measured 11 feet from tip to tail. The others were two lions rather less, and a lioness (the major's) of 9 feet.

Defects of the Japanese

An English merchant resident for many years in China recently visited Japan. He makes the following interesting comparison between the natives of the two countries: "As a nation I cannot think that the Japanese have the permanent staying qualities of the Chinese. They are physically inferior, and have the misfortune to inhabit a country of active volcanoes and frequent earthquakes, whose terrors destroy or threaten. Yeddo was wrecked and 100,000 people killed by an earthquake in 1855, and you must remember the devastation of the one in 1891. The average is 500 shocks, great and small, every year. There have been two eruptions and several shocks since I've been here and the peerless mountain, Fujiyama, sometimes gives threatening signs and may suddenly spread widecast ruin. This dread of earthquakes has restricted the architecture and household arrangements of the whole country.

"Chinese are employed by the foreign banks, merchants and hotels here for most responsible positions, compradores, godown keepers and head servants. The general testimony is that Japanese are untruthworthy for such positions and that native merchants have not much commercial honor. Moral responsibility appears to rest too lightly upon all of his class, which may be partly caused by the facilities afforded by the numerous temples for the remission of sins. A coin thrown into a box, a bell rung, a devout attitude and a short formal prayer quickly brings the sinner into favor again with his gods.

"Making allowance for the small stature of these people, their children, especially the thousands of schoolboys I've seen, appear puny and weak and they are tame and girlish in their sports. The small size and frequent hollow chests of the men detract from their appearance as soldiers and police; physique and disposition will always prevent the Japs from realizing our ideal of a soldier—a man of good size by our standards, well developed, erect, smart and brisk. The troops I saw marching and drilling lacked these soldierly qualities, moved in a slouching way, their arms and equipments appearing too heavy for them."

Life Viewed by Pessimist

Man is born into the world. He is at once attacked by nettle rash, croup, measles and the whooping cough. He has the colic before his first teeth are cut and when he is swindled we say he is getting his eye teeth cut.

If he scapes the scarlet fever and the mumps, he finds directly in his way the scarlet rash and the seven-year itch. If he is not carried off in a hearse before he is too large for short pants he still stands a show of cutting off one of his toes, being kicked by a mule or getting shot with a target rifle in the hands of a boy that "didn't know it was loaded."

He gets his feet wet, runs at the nose and is scolded by his parents for going in swimming on Sunday. He goes to the circus, rides on the merry-go-round and hits the dignified old gentleman in the back of the head with a snowball before he is well in his teens.

He now reaches the stage where he gathers watermelons in the light of the moon, eats green apples and lays out of nights. The fuzz begins to grow on his upper lip and he blushes when he sees a girl, until his hair scorches. He next develops into a "smart Alec," and his parents are undecided whether to shoot him for smoking cigarettes or turn him over to an asylum manager as a confirmed lunatic. Man is subject to typhoid fever, pneumonia, spinal meningitis, smallpox and his own intemperance. He is beset by disease, indebtedness and breach of promise suits until it is a wonder that any of us are able to score three score and ten. If he escapes a famine, pestilence and war, he does his best to shorten his days by keeping his boiler overloaded with inferior booze. He is subject to sick headache, lumbago and inflammatory rheumatism until he cries aloud that his last stage is worse than his first. He wears false hair, false teeth and goes to jail for getting money under false pretenses.

Yet when he has finally run the gauntlet and passes off the stage of action, the heavy [illegible] for the country paper says: "It is well.—Nevada Post.

On the Snow-bound Train

The sun that brief December day rose in the old familiar way; but not so brilliant were its beams, as some sweet summer sunrise seems. A silence fell along the streets, and the blizzard came in sheets—a storm that gave us real pain—and I was on the eastbound train. Another morn broke cold and clear, and many a soul was racked with fear, and many a drummer paled and said, "we're up against it, on the dead," for snowdrifts clustered mountain high, seeming to touch the leaden sky, and still the wind as fiercely howled as when at first the blizzard growled; small wonder that we were appalled, because we knew the train was stalled.

A man who traveled selling soap remarked, "I guess there ain't no hope for no one getting through to-day—this is an awful storm, but it ain't no marker to a blow that was in two years ago;" and then exclaimed the man that sold enlarged pictures, "Gee, it's cold!" Long hours rolled by, and then—oh, John! a dining car was coupled on—a blessed dining car, I swear, it seemed like an oasis there. And all that morn and afternoon I gave instructions to the coon. Alas for him who never seen a dining car in times like these, who in the smoker spores away, waking up now and then to pray that there will be no more delays; who has not learned in cafe cars the truth to emigrants unknown; that tables are as good as bars—that is—as good to eat alone.—"Travel."

Poet's Analysis of Life

What is the existence of man's life
But open war or slumber'd strife?
Where sickness to his sense presents
The combat of the elements,
And never feels a perfect peace
Till death's cold hand signs his release.

It is a storm—where the hot blood
Outvies in rage the boiling flood;
And each loud passion of the mind
Is a furious gust of wind,
Which beats the bark with many a wave,
Till he casts anchor in the grave.

It is a flower—which buds and grows,
And withers as the leaves disclose;
Whose spring and fall faint seasons keep,
Like fits of waking before sleep,
Then shrinks into that fatal mold
Where its first being was enroll'd.

It is a dream—whose seeming truth
Is moralized in age and youth,
Where all the comforts he can share
As weaving as his fair [illegible]
Till in a mist of dark decay
The dreamers vanish quite away.

It is a dial—which points out
The sunset as it moves about,
And shadows out in lines of night
The subtle stages of Time's flight,
Till all-obscuring earth hath hid
His body in perpetual shade.

It is a weary interlude
Which doth short joys, long woes, intrude;
The world, the stage, the prologue rude,
The acts vain hopes and wild fears,
The scene shut up with loss of breath,
And leaves no epilogue but Death.

MISS GENEVIVE MAY.

CATARRH OF STOMACH CURED BY PE-RU-NA.

Miss Genevive May, 1317 S. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind., Member Social High School Alumni Assn., writes:

"Peruna is the finest regulator of a disordered stomach I have ever found. It certainly deserves high praise, for it is skillfully prepared.

"I was in a terrible condition from neglected case of catarrh of the stomach. My food had long ceased to be of any use and only distressed me after eating. I was nauseated, had heartburn and terrible headaches, and felt run down completely. Two weeks after I took Peruna I was a changed person. A few bottles of this medicine made a great change, and in three months my stomach was cured of catarrh, and my entire system in a healthy condition."—Genevive May.

MISS GENEVIVE MAY.

CATARRH OF STOMACH CURED BY PE-RU-NA.

Miss Genevive May, 1317 S. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind., Member Second Baptist Church Alumni Ass'n, writes:

"Peruna is the finest regulator of a disordered stomach I have ever found. It certainly deserves high praise, for it is skillfully prepared.

"I was in a terrible condition from a severe case of catarrh of the stomach. My food had long ceased to be of any good to me. It distressed me after eating. I was constipated, had heartburn and headache, and I was run down completely. But a few weeks after I took Peruna I was a changed person. A few bottles of the medicine made a great change, and in a few months my stomach was cleared of catarrh and my entire system in a better condition."—Genevive May.

School Children's Eyes.

An examination of 7,166 school children in New York in 1904 brought out the fact that 1,272, or 17 per cent., were suffering from defective eyesight of the worst kinds. If to this figure be added those suffering from less manifest defects, the percentage of defects interfering with study was 33 1-3. Eye strain has had reflex effects on the general health and often exists when not suspected by the hurried oculists. It is for school boards to consider whether the same tasks should be imposed on all pupils; whether pupils having defective vision, likely to prejudice health, should study as many ologies as those who have perfectly sound eyes; whether, in fact, at least one-half of the so-called studies should not be abolished.

Automobile Artillery.

The Portugese have adopted automobile traction for a new battery of four quick-firing howitzers of the Schneider Canet system of 150 millimeters. They were made at the Creusot works, France, and the motor is designed to draw all the four one behind the other, a load, that is to say, of about fourteen tons, at a speed of at least five and a half kilometers an hour for all slopes. The automobile besides carries five tons of munitions, etc., and the artillerymen, except four, who will sit on the guns. The motor will also draw the guns by cable up hills of a gradient of 12 per cent., after the practice in recent English maneuvers.

Begging in London.

It is calculated that 4,000 persons make a living in London by begging and that their average income amounts to about 30 shillings a week, or over $1,500,000 a year. Last year 1,925 persons were arrested for begging in the streets, of whom more than 1,500 were sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from one week to three months. Many of these objects of charity were found in possession of sums of money and even of bank books showing very handsome deposits.

Congressmen as Farmers.

Congressman Hull, of Iowa, and Congressman Wadsworth, of New York, jointly own a fine farm in Virginia a short distance down the river from Mount Vernon. Former Interstate Commerce Commissioner Yeomans, also of Iowa, was interested in the agricultural venture, but recently he has withdrawn, leaving his two partners to carry on the business. They have a comfortable residence fitted up there with electric lights and other fixings unknown to the ordinary farmer.

South Sea Wireless Telegraph.

The International Telegraph Construction Company has submitted a scheme to the postmaster general of Australia for the erection of wireless telegraph stations linking New Zealand and Australia direct, and also via Tasmania or Lord Howe and Norfolk Islands, and establishing communication between Queensland and Port Moresby and Samaria, in Papua, and also between Samari and Hebertshohe, in German Papua, joining the cable routes to the east at Yap Island.

Ever Tried Coffee This Way?

It is a well-known fact that even the best of housekeepers cannot make really good coffee without having the proper materials.

They will NEVER make it with coffee of doubtful origin, adulterated, queerly blended, and possibly dirty coffee that has, perhaps, been mixed up with all kinds of other things on the counter.

But let them take a package of LION COFFEE—the purest and cleanest—and the brand universally used throughout the United States for over twenty-five years. Millions drink it daily, and get the best results if it is made in the following way:

Try it once and you will never want to try any other brand of coffee.

HOW TO MAKE GOOD COFFEE.

Use LION COFFEE, because to get best results you must use the best coffee.

Grind you LION COFFEE rather fine. Use a "tablespoonful to each cup, and one extra for the pot." First mix it with a little cold water, enough to make a thick paste, and add white of an egg (if egg is to be used as a settler), then follow one of the following rules:

1st—With boiling water—Add boiling water, and let it boil three minutes only. Add a little cold water and set aside five minutes to settle. Serve promptly.

2d—With cold water—Add your cold water to the paste and bring it to a boil. Then set aside, add a little cold water, and in five minutes it's ready to serve.

THREE DON'TS.

Don't boil it too long.

Don't let it stand more than ten minutes before serving.

Don't use water that has been boiled before.

TWO WAYS TO SETTLE COFFEE.

1st—With eggs—Use part of the white of an egg, mixing it with the ground LION COFFEE before boiling.

2d—With cold water instead of eggs. After boiling add a dash of cold water and set aside for eight or ten minutes, then serve through a strainer.

Long Distance Telegraphy.

There is now direct telegraphic communication between Liverpool and Teheran, in Persia. The stretch of line in question is by far the longest in the world to be worked by single transmission, 4,000 miles of space being covered by a single operation of direct automatic Wheatstone working.

ADDS TO SPLENDOR.

MEN OF BUSINESS RECOGNIZE ADVANTAGES OF ACETYLENE.

Famous Summer Hotel, the Grand Union of Saratoga, Has Installed This Best of All Artificial Lights—Means Increased Comfort and Health.

Saratoga, June 27.—The very name, "Saratoga," brings to every mind health-giving springs, unsurpassed hotels and beautiful drives. It has been for many years the Mecca for all who admire nature, enjoy good living, and are searching for health, or are simply taking a vacation.

The Grand Union, the largest summer hotel in the United States, set among green trees with its long wings enclosing a court with fountains and flowers, grass and trees, music and light, is throughout the season thronged with guests. With the progressive spirit always shown by its management, the Grand Union has again added to its attractiveness by introducing acetylene gas to make still more brilliant the evening hours. The genial proprietors believe in furnishing their guests with the best of everything, and now, after investigating and finding that Artificial Sunlight can be had, they have installed a complete acetylene gas plant to produce it, and have connected upwards of six thousand Acetylene burners in and about the plant.

Like many discoveries of recent years, which are coming into popular favor, acetylene, one of the most recent, is very simply produced. It is adapted for use wherever artificial light is needed and the necessary apparatus can be understood and operated by any one.

The generator in which Acetylene is produced by the automatic contact of carbide and water might be termed a gas plant, as it performs all of the functions of a city gas plant. The acetylene generator can be purchased for a few dollars and in any size, from one adapted to furnish acetylene to ten or a dozen burners for a cottage, up to the large but still simple machine such as is now furnishing Acetylene for six thousand burners in the Grand Union.

Outside of large cities the use of Acetylene is quite common. The owner of the country home now demands running water, gas and other conveniences which a few years ago were considered as luxuries, and acetylene gas has met his requirements, and gives him a better and cheaper light than is ordinarily furnished in cities.

It is well known that rooms lighted with Acetylene are more comfortable, because cooler, and more healthful because the air is not vitiated.

"Sea Gypsies."

In the archipelago of Mergui, off the coast of lower Burma, Asia, live the "sea gypsies." Instead of carts they own covered boats, in which with their families, dogs, cats, chickens and pets they float on the sea and wander from land to island. By day they fish or harpoon turtle or dive for oysters; but every night they put back to the shore. If the weather is bad at sea, they land their dogs and then poach, catching porcupines, squirrels, armadillos, hog, deer and the like, of which they make savory stews, as American gypsies do.

World's Richest Woman.

Signora Cousino, of South America, is said to be the richest woman in the world. Her silver, copper and coal mines yield her $185,000 a month. Receipts from her stock farm are more than those from the mines, and she owns a large interest in a fleet of steamships.

Diamonds Falling From the Sky.

The Diable meteorite contains small diamonds in fissures of the metal connected by cracks to the nucleus of sulphide of iron. It seemed likely, then, that sulphur has displaced the carbon from carbide of iron. The meteorite also contains phosphorus and silicum, which might intervene in the separation of carbon. By melting Swedish iron in an electric crucible and adding sulphide of iron, then plunging the crucible into cold water, Moissan obtained little diamonds. The cold water penetrating the carbon crucible cooled the iron towards its heart, where the liquid carbon solidified in the form of diamonds.

Diamonds obtained by adding sulphide of iron are like those made without it, but there are more of them. Diamonds made by addition of silicum are more irregular in form. The addition of phosphate of iron gave no diamonds. M. Moissan concludes that carbon, at ordinary pressure submitted to a high temperature, vaporizes and yields graphite, whereas carbon liquified under a high pressure yields diamonds.

Treason Against Wagner.

Richard Wagner, the composer, was an ardent republican in 1849. In the archives of Dresden there has just been unearthed a document setting forth a case of high treason against the musician. He was accused of having written to a friend a letter proposing to turn Saxony into a republic. "But whom shall we make president?" he asked. "I see nobody competent for the office except our present sovereign, Frederick Augustus II." Frederick Augustus does not seem to have appreciated the humor of the suggestion that he should doff the crown and content himself with the dignity of a republican president. For this flash of unconscious fun, Wagner had to bolt to Switzerland.

A Malay Custom.

You can scarcely ever get your money from a Malay on Friday, because they believe that if they pay their creditors on a Friday they will be overtaken by penury. Malays never shave or cut their nails on Saturday or Tuesday, because these are unlucky days, and if they do part with the hair or nails on these days they believe that they will be always in trouble or will die quickly.

BOWEN IS DISMISSED

President Roosevelt Acts on Venezuelan Diplomatic Scandal.

LOOMIS SEVERELY REBUKED

Monomania in Bowen's Case—President Reviews Entire Affair in His Letter to Secretary Taft—Loomis May Get a Minor Post—Mr. Bowen Refuses to Give Out Any Immediate Statement.

Washington, D. C.—The dismissal of Minister Herbert W. Bowen from the Diplomatic Service and the retention of Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Loomis, although after such a scorching rebuke as has seldom been administered to an officer of his rank, are the results of Secretary Taft's long investigation of the scandal affecting the two men. The report of Mr. Taft and the President's reply were made public at the War Department.

Mr. Bowen's departure from the service was anticipated, but it was supposed that he would be permitted to resign. Mr. Bowen made his dismissal necessary by telling the President that he would regard a resignation as an admission of misconduct. The President in his letter says that until this scandal came up he had intended to promote Mr. Bowen.

The action taken with regard to Mr. Loomis is more of a surprise. It had been expected that the Assistant Secretary would escape either scot free or with a light rebuke. Instead, Mr. Taft, while acquitting him of the charges brought against him by Bowen, scores in strong language his behavior in mixing up in business investments in Venezuela. The President adopts this language as his own.

Mr. Loomis is a candidate for an embassy. The view of his conduct taken by the President and Mr. Taft makes it unlikely that he will get it. Mr. Taft's language, however, is taken here as indicating that he may be let down with a less important post.

Secretary Taft's letter is fully reviewed in the President's letter.

Bowen at East Orange.

Herbert W. Bowen, who has been dismissed from the diplomatic service, returned to East Orange, N. J., late in the evening, unexpectedly to his family. He was stopping at the home of Arthur Clegg, 124 Prospect street.

"I will say nothing now," said Mr. Bowen, after listening to a synopsis of the President's letter. "Such a document calls for a careful and full reply."

DECLARES WAR ON LOBBYISTS.

Herrick Proposes to Drive Bribers of Legislators From Ohio.

Sandusky, Ohio.—An open declaration of war against professional lobbying in the Legislature of Ohio, made by Governor Herrick, has stirred up politicians all over the State. In a speech at the banquet of the Ohio Associated Dailies, at Cedar Point, the Governor said:

"Lobbying is a deadly poison in the well-spring of legislation. It is responsible, in the main, for the low estimate in which our law making bodies are held by many throughout the entire country.

"The professional lobbyist is a criminal. By that I mean the man who offers a fixed bribe to promote or restrict legislation. His great crime lies in the destruction of the faith in the honesty of our citizens and the honesty of mankind.

"We must do more than arrest, we must exterminate the professional lobby.

"Other communities have risen and eradicated this pernicious practice, and Ohio should move with no laggard step to do likewise. As far as it lies within my power I purpose to set on foot this reform."

BOSTON HOLDS RECORD.

Cost of Running Public Buildings Department Highest of American Cities.

Boston, Mass.—According to official figures Boston municipal "grafters" hold the record. The statistics prepared by Harvey S. Chase, an expert, in the Mayor's office, show that the expense per capita of running the Public Buildings Department alone is twenty-four cents a year, estimating Boston's population at 600,000. This, according to the same source of information, is against the per capita cost in New York for the same department of twenty cents; Philadelphia, fourteen cents; St. Louis, ten cents, and Baltimore, sixteen cents.

Fictitious names have been found on the rolls and syndicates have been organized to do carpenter work and electric wiring for public buildings for which men were already carried on the pay rolls, while one concern has a monopoly in disinfectants which is making it rich.

Good Fruit Crop.

Brewton, Ala.—The fruit crop of Escambia county this season is said to be in a very promising condition at present. There has been a very large acreage of peaches put out recently and the orchards are doing nicely, and in the near future this will be one of the most valuable crops of the county. Peaches do well here and more people go into their culture every year.

A PARLEY WITH MOROCCO

Our Government Invited to Participate in General Conference.

Other Powers Also Asked to Help Settle the Franco-German Mediterranean Embroglio.

Washington, D. C.—The long expected note from the Sultan of Morocco asking the United States Government to participate in an international conference on the affairs of that country, which have brought about a crisis between France and Germany, has arrived at the State Department. The note came from United States Minister Gummere, to whom it was handed several weeks ago, when the Sultan made a formal announcement that he would not entertain the proposals which had been made by the French Government concerning the policy of the Moroccan Government. Mr. Gummere made a translation of the note, which has long since reached the European Governments, and mailed it to the State Department.

No decision has been reached as to the course of the Government of the United States in the matter. The question was taken up at a Cabinet meeting and discussed thoroughly.

The German Emperor, through Baron Speck von Sternburg, the German Ambassador here, has urged the President to participate in the proposed conference. Germany contends that it will amicably settle the differences existing between the interested European powers, which have come very close to causing an open breach between the French and German Governments. President Roosevelt has deeply interested himself in the matter and has conferred with the diplomatic representatives of Germany, France and Great Britain many times within the past few weeks.

The course of this Government will be guided to a great extent by the attitude of the Powers which are more deeply interested in Morocco than is this country. The United States has practically no commercial interests in Morocco, and there is nothing at stake as far as this country is concerned, but as one of the Powers the United States Government is expected to, and probably will, if it can do so without offense to any one, participate. The State Department has been informed that the Italian and Austrian Governments will take part in the conference if the other Powers unanimously consent to do so.

Government officers and diplomats here have watched the impending crisis between Germany and France with the greatest of interest and no little anxiety. All of the Powers of the world have been urged by Germany, the prime mover in the proposed plan, to enter into the conference. Thus far France has refused to accede, so far as is officially known, although dispatches from Paris indicate that the French Government has given its consent to the conference.

If Germany and France reach a settlement there will be nothing to prevent the United States Government's acceptance of the invitation of the Sultan of Morocco. While the invitation itself comes from the Sultan, it is well known here that the conference is a German scheme, but it is not expected that this will stand in the way of a favorable action on the part of this Government if the President decides that this Government should enter the international meeting.

Paris, France.—It is considered here that the German press is assuming too hurriedly that everything is running optimistically in the Morocco affair. As yet France has actually accepted nothing. The conversations between the representatives of the two Powers are continuing satisfactorily, but it would be premature to think that definite conclusions have been reached.

The Government was interrogated about the Morocco situation in the Chamber of Deputies.

Commenting upon the situation the Figaro says that the announcement that Great Britain may accept the invitation to take part in the international conference is of the greatest significance. There could not be a better indication of the favorable course of affairs.

REPULSES WOULD-BE BRIDES.

Eloping Couples From Pittsburg Were Sent Back From Ohio Unmarried.

Pittsburg, Pa.—No more can Pennsylvania would-be brides invade Ohio and be legally married. The Probate Court of Ohio has decided that the justices of Columbiana County, the "Gretna Green" of Ohio, cannot secure marriage licenses by telephone as heretofore. Then, again, the marriage license cannot be granted unless the prospective bride is a resident of the State.

Recently numerous couples who have not become acquainted with the new order of things have been disappointed in not being able to get married. Eight couples were turned away by one justice in East Liverpool recently.

DEATH FOLLOWED LAUGH.

Business Man Expires After Hearing Funny Story on Train.

Fort Dodge, Iowa.—Ralph T. Jackson, a Dubuque business man, laughed immoderately at a story told him by the conductor on the Illinois Central train. Twenty minutes later the conductor passed Jackson, who appeared to be asleep. The conductor shook him and asked if he wanted another story. Jackson made no response. He was dead. A Coroner's jury declared he expired of heart failure.

MORTON ACCEPTS RESIGNATIONS

Chairman of the New Board of Directors to Sue Old Officers For All Misused Funds of the Life Assurance Society—Mr. Alexander Receives the News on Sick Bed—Hyde Won't Talk.

New York City.—Secretary of the Navy Paul Morton, the new head of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, accepted the resignations of James W. Alexander as President and James H. Hyde as First Vice-President of the society, and they at once ceased to be officers of the company which their families have dominated since it was founded forty-six years ago.

At the time Mr. Morton accepted the resignations Mr. Alexander, who had devoted forty years of his life to the upbuilding of the Equitable, was lying ill in bed in the home of his married daughter, at No. 116 East Sixty-fifth street. For a time his family feared to communicate the news that he was no longer an officer of the Equitable Society to him. A polite letter had been sent to him by Mr. Morton, in which the latter briefly stated that he believed it to be for the best interests of the Equitable to accept the resignation which Mr. Alexander had placed in his hands on June 10, the day Mr. Morton was elected Chairman of the Board.

Mr. Alexander took the news calmly, however.

James H. Hyde was in his magnificent suite of offices on the main floor of the Equitable when Mr. Morton's letter accepting his resignation reached him. A few minutes later Mr. Hyde left his offices, entered his brougham and was driven to his home at No. 9 East Fortieth street. Soon after his arrival there he summoned his electric cab and took a ride up Fifth avenue and back, reaching his home about 7.30 p. m.

Hyde Has Nothing to Say.

Mr. Alexander's family refused to permit him to see newspaper men or make any statement. Mr. Hyde sent word by one of his under-secretaries that he had nothing to say to the newspapers.

It was not until 5 p. m. that Mr. Morton announced his acceptance of the resignations of Mr. Alexander and Mr. Hyde. At that hour nearly all the clerks had gone, but most of the department heads were still in the building. When they learned of Mr. Morton's action every man had some word of sympathy for Mr. Alexander and regret for his retirement as President of the society.

No action had been taken by Mr. Morton on the resignations which were also placed in his hands on June 10 by Second Vice-President Gage E. Tarbell, Third Vice-President George T. Wilson and Fourth Vice-President William H. McIntyre.

Morton Will Sue Directors.

It was authoritatively announced from sources close to Thomas F. Ryan that frequent consultations with eminent lawyers and with the three trustees—Ex-President Cleveland, Justice O'Brien and Mr. Westinghouse—had resulted in Chairman Morton taking the position that as rapidly as the reports of the expert accountants are ready he will prosecute all directors and officers, big and little, who have abused their trust by using the funds of the Equitable for their own personal speculation and private profit.

Many suits are already in contemplation and will be brought as fast as developments warrant the preparation of the papers, against all these men to compel restitution of all profits illegally acquired by the use of the funds of the Equitable Life.

In behalf of Chairman Morton and the trustees, the lawyers and others advising them, have looked over the books of the Equitable Life for the last fifteen years. These lawyers have made a special study of the statute of limitations and it is said they are now prepared to move against all officers and directors who began fifteen years ago the systematic application of the Equitable funds to personal ventures for their own private gain, to the great detriment of the policy-holders.

Struck by Train.

Bessemer, Ala.—Claude C. Brown, a white man, was struck by a train on the Alabama Great Southern Railroad Friday and seriously, if not fatally, hurt. He was brought to this city on a freight train. It was reported that the injured man got in front of the moving train and did not heed the warning whistle. He sustained a fracture of the skull and clavicle. He is a farmer, and lives at Randolph, Ala.

DEATH REVEALS FORGERY

The Late G. H. Gaskill, of Philadelphia, a Stock "Raiser."

Certificates Altered to the Extent of a Million Dollars—Scion of Honored Family.

Philadelphia, Pa.—If a ghost had stalked forth and proclaimed Benjamin Franklin a robber or Stephen Girard a pauper it could not have occasioned much more surprise than the announcement that Benjamin H. Gaskill, who died four weeks ago, was involved in a series of forgeries which has resulted in a loss of almost $1,000,000 to banks and trust companies here—the majority of them representing the ultra-conservative type of fiduciary institutions. It was disclosed that certificates calling for small numbers of shares of stock had been "raised" by a skillful process and without exciting the slightest suspicion.

Benjamin H. Gaskill was the sole member of the banking and brokerage firm which carried on business under the title of Benjamin H. Gaskill & Co. He had fine offices in the financial district and his credit was gilt-edged. At the time of his death Gaskill was reputed to be worth about $500,000. He left no will, and when the administrators started to close up the estate the remarkable story was revealed.

One of the customers of the firm, whose name has not been disclosed, bought from the estate 100 shares of Philadelphia Traction Company stock and 100 shares of stock of the United States Steel Corporation. He turned the account over to E. C. Miller & Co., which firm sent the 100 shares of traction stock to the Philadelphia Traction Company's office to have the transfer recorded. The certificate did not agree with the company's books, and an investigation showed that the certificate had been raised from six shares to 100. The discovery was reported to E. C. Miller & Co., which firm immediately notified the Stock Exchange of which Gaskill was a member, which in turn sent out notices to its members not to receive stock certificates from the Gaskill estate.

Other Frauds Discovered.

This led to a further investigation, and with startling results. It was found that Gaskill had credited himself on his own books with 6000 shares of Philadelphia Traction stock valued at approximately $600,000, while the traction company's books showed he had only 400 shares. It was also discovered that he had raised stock certificates of the United Railways of New Jersey from 2 to 200, and the certificates of the Frankford & Southwark Street Railway Company of this city from 2 to 20. The latter stock is worth $450 a share.

Gaskill kept two accounts—one recording the transactions of his customers, which was correct, and another giving his own transactions. His books showed that he was losing from $15,000 to $25,000 a year in his business. His method of operation was to obtain certificates of gilt-edged securities calling for one, two, three or some other small number of shares, raise the figures and give them as securities for large loans. At least six banks and trust companies of this city admit holding fraudulent securities for large loans.

Scion of an Old Family.

The Gaskill family in Philadelphia ranks with the Binneys, the Prices, the Cadwalladers, the Biddles and Rittenhouses, and perhaps has a greater claim to pride of ancestry than any one of them. The early members of the Gaskill family were the stoutest champions of Tom Paine when he was a consultant of John Hancock in the drafting of the Declaration of Independence, and the original Benjamin Gaskill, after whom a street is named in the southern part of the city, was Hancock's most valiant defender when he was assailed in front of the old Carpenters Hall.

Gaskill was only forty-one years old when he died. He was a member of the Manufacturers' Club, the Union League, the Country Club, the Clover Club, and other organizations, and the revelations astound even the severest of his critics.

The administrators of the estate, Lincoln L. Eyre and George M. Wagner, have retained John G. Johnson to protect the interests of the estate.

Gaskill left a widow, to whom the Stock Exchange a few days ago paid $5000 as life insurance. His seat on the Stock Exchange is valued at $15,000.

The New York Securities and Trust Company is trustee for the stock. Buckner owned $21,589,300 of the issue, which was closed by the trust company.

A CALL TO CELEBRATE

The Anniversary of American Independence by the Farmers.

THEY HELD THEIR COTTON.

The Call Issued by the President of the Southern Cotton Growers' Association.

Office of Secretary, Calvert, Tex.—President Harvie Jordan, of the Southern Cotton Association, has decided that the farmers in all of the cotton-growing counties should meet in their respective communities on July 4, have barbecues, speaking and make the day one of general rejoicing this year on account of the splendid work accomplished by the farmers in reducing the cotton acreage for 1905.

President Jordan's Call Follows.

"Office Southern Cotton Association,
"Atlanta, Ga., June 9, 1905.

"To Southern Cotton Growers:

"Every report issued on the cotton acreage of 1905, including the United States government report of June 2, indicates beyond all question of doubt that the cotton acreage for this year has been materially reduced by the farmers, thereby making another abnormally large crop, with extremely low prices, an impossibility. Southern cotton growers are to be highly commended for thus standing so loyally by their pledges and promises, which will save the south from financial ruin and disaster. The farmers also held their cotton from the markets during a most depressing period in January and February, thereby emphasizing their ability to protect their interests from the devastating influences of speculation. The cotton holding movement has saved the south $40,000,000 in the value of the cotton unsold on January 26, and the reduction in cotton acreage will insure 10 cents per pound for the staple next fall. We should therefore have a day of rejoicing for the great work accomplished.

Fourth of July Selected.

"The Declaration of American Independence from the yoke of foreign dominion was signed on July 4, 1776. I think that a fitting day for southern cotton growers to assemble together and declare their freedom and independence from foreign combinations which in the past have dictated the price of the great money staple crop of the south. I therefore issue this call, earnestly asking that the cotton growers all over the south meet on Tuesday, July 4, 1905, either in their local beats, townships, militia districts or at their county seats, and have barbecues or basket dinners, speeches and make of the day one of general rejoicing. I trust also that strong resolutions will be passed at these meetings emphasizing loyalty and patriotism to each other and agreeing that no cotton shall be sold during the balance of the present year for less than 10 cents per pound. I call upon the business and professional men in the various towns of the south to assist and take active part in these meetings. It is the duty of every southerner to assist the farmers in this patriotic duty and to commend them for the great victory they have won. I ask that copies of all resolutions passed at these meetings be mailed to the headquarters of the Southern Cotton Association for compilation and publication. Such a meeting of the cotton growers and their determination to demand better prices for cotton would have a tremendous effect on the spinners of the world, who have sold their goods ahead and have yet to secure the raw cotton to fill their contracts. Let every community act and act with determination.

"Yours truly,
"HARVIE JORDAN,
"Pres. Southern Cotton Association."

PACKERS INDICTED

Seventeen of the Big Companies Indicted—Statement of Miller, Their Counsel.

PROMINENT MEN TO ANSWER.

Violation of Anti-Trust Law and Illegal Rebating to Railroads Is Charged.

Chicago, Ill.—After an investigation which has lasted something over three months and during which more than 300 witnesses were examined, the federal grand jury Saturday afternoon handed down its report. Seventeen prominent in the packing industries of the country were indicted for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law and four officials of the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Company were indicted for alleged illegal rebating to the railroads. Besides these individual indictments bills were voted against the corporations themselves, Swift & Co., Nelson Morris & Co., Cudahy Packing Company and the Armour Packing Company.

The men indicted for alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade, which constitutes violation of the Sherman law, are: J. Ogden Armour, president of Armour & Co.; Arthur Meeker, general manager for Armour & Co.; T. J. Connor, a director of Armour & Co.; P. A. Valentine, treasurer of Armour & Co.; Samuel Mc[illegible], assistant treasurer of Armour & Co.; Louis F. Swift, president of Swift & Co.; Charles Swift, of Swift & Co.; Lawrence A. Kaston, treasurer of Swift & Co.; Arthur F. Evans, attorney for Swift & Co.; R. C. McManus, attorney for Swift & Co.; Edward Cudahy, of Cudahy & Co.; D. C. Hartwell, secretary of Swift & Co.; Edward F. Swift, vice-president of Swift & Co.; Edward Morris, secretary of Nelson Morris & Co., and Ira W. Morris, of Nelson Morris & Co.

The four employes of Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Company who were indicted for alleged rebating with railroads are all connected with the traffic department of the company. Their names are Samuel W. Rosey, C. E. Todd, V. D. Skidmore and [illegible].

Indictments Identical.

The indictments voted for violation of the anti-trust law were identical in each instance. The indictments contained each eight counts which were spread over sixty-three typewritten pages.

The first and second counts in the indictments pertained only to beef and domestic trade.

The ninth and tenth counts relate to meat sold in foreign trade. The third count charges a conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the states, and with foreign nations in fresh, dried, smoked, cured, canned and pickled meats and in certain by-products of the packing industry, viz., sausage casings, sausage containers, soap stock, stearine and oils and also butter, eggs and poultry.

Third indictment—The supply of commodities was to be curtailed and restrained whenever necessary to maintain the prices so fixed.

Fourth—The United States was divided up into territories between the defendants and each was to keep its own territory without interference by the others.

Fifth—There was a division as to the volume of trade allowed to each defendant in a given market, if one broker sold more than his percentage during a given week he was compelled to pay an "ante" of so much per hundredweight, according to the territory in which the matter occurred, into a fund to cover the excess of sales, and the fund was divided among the packers who fell short in their sales.

Sixth—Certain corporations, namely, the Aetna Trading Company and the Rosenheimer Manufacturing Company, were to be appointed exclusive agents for the defendants to handle the sausage casings and containers, and those companies were to make arrangements with the several concerns which had been handling such merchandise in the different parts of the world for working in harmony and controlling the output and price of the merchandise. This scheme involved the destruction or "dumping" of large quantities of casings whenever the supply was too great.

Miller's Statement.

Attorney John S. Miller, counsel for the packing firms, gave out the following statement:

"I ask for the packers who have been indicted the withholding of judgment until their side of this matter can be properly presented and known. I think the investigation on which the indictments are based was instituted and carried on with the previous conviction that the accused were guilty and the thing to accomplish was to get the evidence. The packers have been

PACKERS INDICTED

Seventeen of the Big Companies Indicted—Statement of Miller, Their Counsel.

PROMINENT MEN TO ANSWER.

Violation of Anti-Trust Law and Illegal Rebating to Railroads Is Charged.

Chicago Dispatch.—After an investigation which has lasted something over three months, and during which more than 200 witnesses were examined, the federal grand jury Saturday afternoon returned its report. Seventeen persons, all at in the packing industry in this country were indicted for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. Officials of the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Company were indicted for alleged illegal rebating to railroads. Besides these individuals bills were voted against corporations—Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Nelson Morris & Co., the National Packing Company and the Western Packing Company.

Those indicted for alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade, which includes the operation of the Sherman anti-trust law, are Ogden Armour, Charles H. Swift, Armour & Co.; Arthur Meeker, general manager for Armour & Co.; P. D. Armour, a director of Armour & Co.; P. A. Valentine, treasurer of Armour & Co.; Samuel McRoberts, director of Armour & Co.; Louis F. Swift, president of Swift & Co.; Harold H. Swift, of Swift & Co.; Edward H. Swift, treasurer of Swift & Co.; Thomas E. Wilson, president of Wilson & Co.; Thomas E. Evans, attorney for Armour & Co.; Louis F. Swift, jr., attorney for Swift & Co.; Edward Cudahy, of Cudahy Packing Company; Louis H. Hartwell, secretary of Cudahy Packing Company; Edward F. Swift, treasurer of Swift & Co.; Edward F. Carey, of Nelson Morris & Co., and Louis Morris, of Nelson Morris & Co.

Officials of Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Company who were indicted for alleged illegal rebating with the railroads are connected with the corporation itself. They are Samuel Weil, B. S. Sulzberger, N. V. D. Whitworth, [illegible] Sodenstedt.

Seventeen counts in the indictment relate only to beef sold to the United States government. Eighteenth counts relate to alleged violations of the foreign trade. The third count charges a conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the states and with foreign nations in the packing, curing, canned and preserved meats and in certain by-products of the packing industry, viz: sausage containers, oleomargarine and oils and also fertilizers and poultry.

The indictment—The supply of hogs was to be curtailed and prices reduced whenever necessary to maintain prices so fixed.

The United States was divided into territories between the defendants and each was to keep its operations within its territory without interference by the others.

There was a division as to the amount of trade allowed to each defendant in the open market; if one defendant bought more than his percentage of hogs he was obliged to pay so much per hundred pounds to the territory in which the shortage occurred, into a fund for the excess of sales, and the fund was divided among the packers who made sales in their territories.

The corporations, namely, Armour & Company and the Western Packing Company have entered exclusive agents [illegible] to handle the sausage containers, and those companies to make arrangements with the several concerns which had purchased merchandise in the containers held for working in [illegible] rolling the output of such merchandise. This was to prevent the destruction or [illegible] quantities of casings when the supply was too great.

Miller's Statement.

Mr. Miller, counsel for the packers, gave out the following statement:

"The packers who have refused to withholding of judgment on their side of this matter have not presented and known. The investigation on which the indictments are based was instituted and carried on with the previous knowledge that the accused were guilty of what they [illegible] to accomplish was to get [illegible] The packers have been prejudiced and condemned by being called a beef trust, by continued and repeated charges without proofs and by gross falsehood and misrepresentation. The Garfield report accurately stated the facts in respect to the packing business, but its results, which were truthful and accurate, did not agree with the exaggerated and false charges that have been made.

"The packers are not violators of the Sherman act. They have endeavored to comply with the law in the best of faith, and in my opinion they have done so."

Woman Found Unconscious.

Birmingham, Ala.—Mrs. James Morgan was found lying in the street in front of her home on First avenue near the Avondale cotton mill Sunday morning shortly after midnight in an unconscious condition. She was carried to St. Vincent's hospital, where she was still unconscious at a late hour Sunday night. Her condition is said to be critical.

James Morgan, her husband; Francis Morgan, her mother-in-law, and Lula Morgan, her daughterin-law, were arrested by George W. Robinett, special officer for the Avondale Cotton Mill company, soon after the injured woman was found and were locked in the Birmingham city jail on charges of assault with intent to murder. When arrested they were all in the house asleep. The officer and others who accompanied him had considerable difficulty in arousing Morgan and his household. They had to break into the house.

The theory of the officer is that Mrs. Morgan was thrown from the second floor window during a quarrel. Morgan claims that she fell from the window.

Morgan and his family live in rooms on the second floor of Daniel's old brick building just across from the Avondale cotton mill on First avenue. They recently removed from Birmingham.

James Morgan is fifty-two years of age, his mother is seventy-four, his daughter-in-law is forty-eight and his wife is about fifty.

Working a Swindle.

Glasgow, Ky.—For several days past parties from all over the county have been coming to town saying that they have been victimized by two alleged agents of a sewing machine company. Those names were variously given as Brown, Kirby, Gibson and Jones. They began operations here about the first of April, and since have most thoroughly chavassed the county and placed several machines. In most instances they sold the machine for $65 and took an old machine and a note for $65, less the price agreed upon for the old machine.

About ten days ago the four local banks received the notes—about thirty to each bank—for collection, and notified the payers that they were due July 1. Nearly every day this week the banks have been visited by the people who signed the notes, and in nearly every instance they say that they were told they could make payments of 25 cents a week, a dollar a month or any other way that suited them best, as the notes would not be due for five years.

A number of the victims have employed attorneys to enjoin the banks from collecting the notes and will fight the matter to the bitter end.

John David Privett Dies.

Anniston, Ala.—John David Privett, one of Calhoun county's oldest and most highly respected citizens, died at the family residence at Oxford Saturday after an illness of over a year, aged 65 years. Although expected for several days past his death came as a shock to the many relatives and friends, by whom he was so tenderly loved. Mr. Privett was a Confederate soldier, a member of the Fifty-first Alabama, Joe Wheeler's original cavalry company, and a consistent member of the Methodist church. He leaves a wife and eight children.

Best Type of Warship.

Berlin.—The German Naval League, in a regular news bulletin, says the lesson of the battle of the Sea of Japan is that the best type of warships is the battleship and the largest displacement equipped with the heaviest possible guns and armor. The League notes that the Japanese torpedo boats attacked after the Russian fleet had been weakened.

A writer in Die Grenzboten, which contains official communications, analyzes the German navy as follows:

Of thirty-eight battleships on paper, including those laid down or authorized by the naval programme, thirteen are called "old boxes," scarcely fit for harbor defense. No. 38 has not yet been begun. Of the remainder only ten approach the modern battleships of other powers in size and gun power. The task before the government is defined to be to replace the antiquated ships with modern vessels.

COMMISSION MEETS

They Hold a Meeting—a General Rewiew of Isthmian Affairs.

CANAL TRUSTEES HAVE MET.

Much Important Business Transacted. Shonts and Stevens Will Soon Make a Visit.

Washington, D. C.—The Ithmian canal commission at a meeting which lasted practically all day reviewed and approved the reports of the bi-weekly meetings of the executive committee of the commission held since the last meeting of the full commission in April. Mr. Wallace was a member of the executive committee. Messrs. Haines and Harrod, of the commission, were delegated to go at once to the isthmus and make a careful review of the conditions of the work as they find it, and it is probable that Chairman Shonts and Mr. Stevens, the new chief engineer, will go to the isthmus at the same time, the sailing date being fixed at next Tuesday's meeting.

Chairman Shonts has cabled the temporary appointment of Engineer Dauchey as chief engineer on the isthmus until the arrival of Mr. Stevens. He has also cabled authority to the assistant superintendent of the Panama railroad to conduct the road until the arrival of Mr. Stevens.

The traffic agreement between the Panama railroad and the Pacific Mail Steamship Line, which expires July 12, according to the notice given by the government, will not interfere with the through billing of freight over that line to Pacific ports both in North and South America, as heretofore. While no agreement to this effect will be entered into between the government and the steamship line, an oral understanding has been received whereby the old arrangement is to continue, to be interrupted only on ninety days' notice from the steamship company. This arrangement was the outcome of an effort to have the United States agree to bill freight only to steamship lines having American register, there being no other American lines in the Pacific trade.

The two steamships, Havana and Mexico, purchased several days ago by Chairman Shonts from the Ward Line for $650,000 each, will be put into commission between New York and the isthmus at once. The boats are sixteen-knot vessels, and will establish a five days' service.

General Davis, recently appointed by the president as chairman of the advisory board of engineers of the commission, attended this meeting on the invitation of Chairman Shonts. With the visit of the engineering members of the commission to the isthmus with a view particularly to getting together all available data as to the engineering features of the work to be accomplished, the opinion was expressed by the commissioners that no delay because of the resignation of Mr. Wallace would be occasioned, either in carrying on the work on the isthmus or in preparing a plan by which the canal shall be constructed. The commission approved the recommendation of its engineering committee that all bids relative to the dredging of Colon harbor be rejected.

Continuing the Fight.

Montreal.—In the Gaynor-Greene case here Judge Ouimet granted the accused the right to argue before him their application for the maintenance of a writ of habeas corpus. The United States claimed that such applications could only be made before a full court. Judge Ouimet held, however, that he could hear it in chambers.

The defense announced that they had counsel on the way to England to appeal before the privy counsel from the supreme court's decision refusing the writ of prohibtion asked for against Extradition Commissioner La-Fontaine by counsel for Gaynor and Greene.

Boy Bitten by Dog.

Sheffield, Ala.—Eddie Jordan, the young son of Sanitary Officer Jordan, was badly bitten by a dog in East Sheffield while picking blackberries in a field near that portion of the city. The dog tore the flesh in the calf of his leg and above the right knee, inflicting a painful, if not dangerous, wound.

Want Pure Food Law.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The wholesale grocers of the United States, in convention, Saturday fully endorsed a resolution reported by the committee on resolutions favoring "a reasonable and fair national pure food law and one which the various states can to advantage endorse and enact into state law if desired."

ARE TO HAVE PEACE.

The President Notified of the Selection of the Plenipotentiaries.

ENVOYS HAVE FULL POWER.

Each Nation Notified Who the Plenipotentiaries Are and Expressed Their Approval.

Oyster Bay—Official announcement was made by President Roosevelt today of the names of the Russian and Japanese envoys to the Washington peace conference. The character and ability of the men selected by both belligerents is an earnest of the desire their respective governments to conclude, if possible, the tragedy being enacted in the far east. The plenipotentiaries are:

Russian — Ambassador Muravieff, formerly minister of justice and now ambassador to Italy, and Baron Rosen recently appointed as ambassador to the United States to succeed Count Cassini.

Japanese—Baron Komura, minister of foreign affairs, and Kogoro Takahira, minister to the United States.

President Formally Notified.

A day or two ago the Russian and Japanese governments formally communicated to President Roosevelt the names of the plenipotentiaries they respectively had selected. Acting as an intermediary, the president communicated the names of the Japanese envoys to the St. Petersburg government and those of the Russian representatives to the government at Tokio. Having received from both governments assurances that they were satisfactory, the president according to his agreement with the belligerents authorized the public announcement of the envoys. Some delay was occasioned in the selection of the plenipotentiaries by the instance of the Japanese that the envoys of both governments be clothed with full power to conclude peace and negotiate a peace treaty.

Envoys Must Have Full Power.

The Japanese government indicated pointedly that the emperor would not permit his envoys to enter upon a tentative conference in which the Japanese were to define terms and then let Russia decide whether the conference should proceed to further deliberations. The Japanese government insisted that the plenipotentiaries should have conferred upon them treaty making powers and that the negotiations should be entered upon in a spirit of perfect sincerity. Such, too, was the position taken by President Roosevelt. He maintained that only by clothing the envoys with ample authority to act for their respective governments could a lasting peace be achieved. He strongly urged the St. Petersburg government to accede to what was regarded as a reasonable proposition of Japan. That he was successful in his presentation of the matter to the Russian emperor is indicated clearly in the statement which he issued today.

Preliminary Negotiations Closed.

The President's announcement practically closes the preliminary negotiations for peace. Minor details remain yet to be arranged, but the conference now seems to be assured. While no absolute date for the meeting of the envoys has been fixed, it has been determined that the first session will be held in Washington about the first of August.

Baron Rosen already is en route to the United States, his coming being to succeed Count Cassini as the Russian ambassador to this country. It is probable that Ambassador Muravieff will start for the United States, accompanied by a considerable staff of secretaries, clerks and interpreters. The Japanese contingent of officials and attaches, it is expected, will leave Japan in time to reach Washington by the first of August.

No Place Yet Decided On.

No decision has yet been reached as to the place of holding the sessions of the conference. For the purpose of organization and to determine upon plans for the future, the plenipotentiaries will meet in Washington, but it is regarded as highly probable that at an early date thereafter they will adjourn to hold the business sessions of the conference in some city on the north Atlantic seaboard. In this connection the word "here" in the official statement issued today is likely to be misunderstood. It means merely "in this country."

The sessions of the conference will not, of course, be held in Oyster Bay, although the representatives of both powers will probably go to Oyster Bay to pay their respects to the president This trip to the president's home probably will be made in two warships, the Mayflower and the Dolphin being under consideration for the mission.

POLICEMAN KILLED

In an Attempt to Arrest Percy Couch Friday Night, Policeman Baiber was Killed.

WAS ARRESTED IN TENNESSEE.

Tried to Escape, Came Back Without Requisition Papers.—Now In Jail at Decatur.

Decatur, Ala.—Percy Couch, who shot Policeman Baiber Friday night, was taken to Huntsville from Fayetteville, Tenn., Saturday afternoon, arriving there about 3 o'clock. Sheriff James Wiggins, of this county, went to meet the party in Huntsville late Saturday evening and brought Couch here at 11 o'clock Saturday night.

Couch was arrested on a passenger train near Fayetteville bound for Nashville. When arrested he admitted he shot Baiber, but did not know he had killed him.

About 12:20 Friday night Couch was going down LaFayette street when he met Henry Gearstman, of South Decatur, and although the two men were strangers to each other, a difficulty resulted. Gearstman claimed Couch was the aggressor and that Couch drew his revolver, when Policeman W. A. Moore approached. Couch then ran behind a bill board on the opposite side of the street from the American Hotel. Moore not feeling able to cope with both men, called Policeman W. A. Baiber, who soon came to his assistance. Baiber started after Couch. Couch said: "Baiber, don't come any farther."

The officer still advanced and Couch fired four shots, all taking effect, one in the back, two in the chin and one in the neck, severing the jugular vein, causing instant death. Couch also fired twice at Policeman Moore. When Baiber fell he fired two shot at Couch, but they went wild.

Couch is a young man of good family, but has been very wild of late. Before the shooting took place it is said he was at the depot wearing a police badge and armed with a billy. His brothers-in-law are John Evans, manager Laven Hotel, New Decatur, and J. Lee Barnes, manager Hotel Majestic, Atlanta. The authorities have no fear of a mob.

Couch's Arrest Followed.

Huntsville, Ala.—Percy Couch, slayer of Officer Baiber at Decatur, was captured at Winchester, Tenn., Saturday morning and was brought to Huntsville on the afternoon train. He agreed to come without requisition. Couch came to Huntsville after escaping from Decatur and spent an hour or two with a friend. He then boarded the Nashville train, whose conductor had been furnished with a description of him. The conductor recognized him and wired back to the Huntsville police, who notified the authorities at every point of the road. The arrest was made at Winchester, Couch having made an attempt to leave the train.

Decatur, Ala.—Percy Couch, who shot and killed Policeman William A. Baiber Friday night, was brought here from Huntsville Saturday night at 11:40. Fully 2,000 people met the train at the depot. Couch was slipped off the front end of the smoker by Sheriff Wiggins and taken to jail by him and Chief Young and Policeman Hall. Fully 500 people followed them to the jail, and open threats of hanging were made, though these threats were not carried into execution. Couch showed signs of fear.

Pension Examiners.

Montgomery, Ala.—Many of the pension examiners of the various counties, about whose appointments Governor Jelks has had a great deal of trouble for the past few weeks, have been named, and as soon as two or three vacancies are filled and a few others are heard from the list will be completed.

It is thought that with all the trouble and worry it has caused there has been selected a list of men who will give the old soldiers of the state good service and see that they are looked after to the full extent of the amount the state gives.

Condemned Workmen to Death.

Lodz.—A courtmartial has condemned to death three workmen convicted of participation in the riots of last week. Sixty-nine persons who were wounded in these disturbances have died in the hospitals here during the week.

Big Strike Decided Upon.

St. Petersburg.—The union of associations has resolved in favor of the "imminence of a revolution to organize a political strike in all professions beginning Monday next."

Explanation.

There was a man who, years ago,
Made a mistake and, filled with woe,
He started in with might and main,
To conscientiously explain.
And so much time he thus applied
That, though to do his best he tried,
He made new errors, o'er and o'er,
Tried to explain and made some more.

Another man just went ahead.
Nor heeded what the others said,
Quoth he, "I never apologize.
Yet am accounted rich and wise."
He ne'r begged pardon. He stood pat
And said he wanted more than that.
Success doth stoutly try again.
While failure lingers to explain.

The Painting of the Picture

BY BELLE MANIATES

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

It had been an intensely hot day. Now and then warm puffs of wind scattered little whirlpools of blinding white dust, but between these puffs of breezes the leaves only stirred enough to utter a faint whisper. The hot, close-cropped fields took on their first suggestion of autumnal anticipation.

A tall, lithe farmer, leaning languidly on his hay fork, was scanning the country road that passed the field where he was at work. At last he saw the looked for cloud of dust, and then came into his vision the little, fat pony and wide phaeton which was reined up at the fence, while a fair-haired girl called to him. He went up to the side of the carriage and while he was talking to her, he felt that she was fairly absorbing him with her gaze. He looked straight into her eyes and in their shining depths he beheld an expression of rapture that he had ever longed to bring there, but he keenly realized that he was only the suggestion of some intense thought that had brought this look to her dream-centered face.

"Do you know what has happened, Dorr?" she asked breathlessly.

"No," he said expectantly.

"It has come at last! the inspiration and idea for my picture—the picture that is 'to be hung' and make me famous. If I can only persuade my model to pose for me!"

"I don't see anything picturesque here, Ruth," he said looking at the stretch of meadow land, "unless you can paint the heat; that would be realistic."

"It is to be called," she replied dreamily, "'The Last Load.' I shall paint the heat, your white horses with their tired, drooping of the head, the load of hay, and you with your fork, just as you stood when I drove up."

"I don't think that will be much of a picture," he replied discouragingly.

"Wait and see! Will you pose for me, when your work is dreaming?"

"Certainly," he replied.

He sighed as she drove away. He had loved her since he could remember, but Ruth was heart-whole and fancy-free and entirely devoted to art.

"Maybe when I have really accomplished my desire and painted a great picture I will come to care for you, Dorr, but I like you better than anyone!"

And with this slight encouragement, the hungry-hearted young farmer must be satisfied.

One day Ruth in long-sleeved apron and atelier manner was before her easel and Dorr in shirt sleeves with straw hat tilted on the back of his head stood, pitchfork in hand, ready for his first pose.

"I feel as I did when they inveigled me into some tableaux at a school entertainment," he said grimly.

"And what is worse, you look it!" thought Ruth. "Before we begin let me show you what idea I am working on."

He crossed the room and sat down beside her. "Here," she explained, "is a sketch of your horses, and this is the meadow, and this is the load of hay. What do you think of them?"

He expressed his genuine admiration.

"You certainly know how to paint horses, and the hay is fine."

"I tried to catch the close-of-day attitude. Now, can't you catch the spirit of what I want, and look as you felt that day when I drove up to the field?"

"Maybe I can," he said going back to his place. He took his pose intelligently and easily.

"That's right!" she said approvingly, as she rapidly sketched his figure Only occasionally did she speak to have him alter his position in the two hours that she worked. He proved a responsive model, but there was a drawback. He had a joyous mien and a radiance of hope in his countenance that she had never seen before and which she knew to have been inspired by the meager hope she had held out to him that August night of glowing skies. The new look was very becoming, but professionally she did not want it. It did not harmonize with the personnel of her idea.

Stood spellbound before the masterpiece.

"This will never do!" she thought as he came for the next sitting with his eyes soft and brightly lustrous. "I am not seeking the picture of a jovial, light-hearted farmer. I had staked all my chances of success on that grave, serious expression of weariness and strength combined. I must work him into the mood someway."

He paused before the easel on his way out.

"Nothing but splashes of color," she laughed. After he had gone she remained before the easel in a brown study. An expression partly quizzical and partly contrite crossed her face.

"It's mean," she thought, "but I'll do it. The end will justify the means."

The next day she gave him a picture of her sketches to look at while she was getting ready to work. One was a sketch of herself that a fellow student at the Academy had made.

Instantly his face grew full of expression as she meant it to be, but still that provoking radiance illuminated it.

"May I have it?" he asked.

"I have promised it to the artist who sketched it," she said, splashing some brown ochre preparatory to an eye production. Encouraged by his expression she began to paint rapidly, then relenting, "He was only a mere boy. Of course, I wouldn't give my picture to a man."

A look like the rushing of sunshine in a dark place flashed across his features.

"I am only chasing his features from one expression to another," she thought ruefully. This see-saw must stop.

"I am going to the city to study again in October," she said bluntly.

At last! Just the expression she wanted! Leaving him to his reflections and apprehensions, she painted rapidly and in silence. At the end of the afternoon she looked at her work with satisfaction, but Dorr was disapproving.

"Do I look as glum as that?" he asked. "Why didn't you tell me to look pleasant?"

"This expression is more effective from an artistic standpoint," she said cheerfully, "I feel that I am going to succeed, and you shall not gaze upon the picture again until it is hung."

The days and the work went steadily on. Dorr came daily to pose, and gazed pensively up through the skylights of Ruth's studio, seeing in his gaze visions of harvest meadows and pastures green, towering stalks of corn bearing their burden of grain which awaited only the first touch of frost to bring their fulfillment. And while he sat and dreamed and hovered between his hopes and his despair, Ruth painted as one inspired, putting her whole being and his into the picture.

In October Ruth took the "Last Load" and went to the city. One day there was an exhibition of pictures and her name was on everyone's lips. Her painting had excited unusual and marked attention. She wrote Dorr and asked him to come and see it. Together they went to the gallery. It was quite early—long before the popular hour for visitors. Dorr stood spellbound before the masterpiece. The meadow, the tottering load of hay and the tired horses were true to life, but his eyes were riveted on the man standing at the horse's heads. The lithe form with shoulders that seemed made for a bulwark; lean of hip and small of waist was at once athletic and magnetic. A low-setting sun sent slanting rays where he stood, making the fork gracefully poised on his shoulder gleam like gold. In his uplifted face, the face of a man who has toiled the livelong day was the tenacity of purpose and the grim constancy that make men. Behind the weariness and gravity were nobility and depth of heart.

There was a little heartache underneath his pleasure in her success.

"Ruth," he said wistfully, "if I did look like that—if I were like that, would you care for me?"

"Dorr, the picture painted itself, and from every stroke of the brush I knew that I did care—had always cared!"

"Ruth!"

NOT SO VERY MYSTERIOUS.

Simple Explanation of Phenomenon That Puzzled Wise Men.

Prof. Simon Newcomb, the astronomer, said at a dinner in Washington:

"The simplest causes sometimes produce the most puzzling effects.

"A few years ago I spent the month of August at a friend's villa at Long Branch.

"In fact, with six or seven of us, we made the rent the garden one day after luncheon when we came to a large sandy stretch in the sun.

"And it's a strange thing," some one said, "how far from the shade that is in shade is warmer than the half that is in the sun."

"In the shade?" we chorused.

"And we touched the globe and found that the shade actually was warmer in the shade than in the sun.

"Then everybody tried to explain this phenomenon and the most remarkable theories for it were advanced.

"One said it was an effect of reflection, another that it was an effect of repulsion, another that the exhalatory law—and so forth and so on.

"But I had spied the gardener cutting roses and I called him over to us.

"'Perhaps you,' I said, 'can tell us why the half of this glass bowl that is in the sun is cooler than the half that is in the shade?'

"'Why, yes, sir,' said the gardener; 'I think I can. You see, just before you came out I turned the bowl around for fear of its cracking in the great heat.'"

Impudence.

Rear Admiral Wilde, at a banquet given in his honor in Boston, desired to illustrate in some way a certain sort of humorous and harmless impudence that is found at its best in America.

"There was a young man," said Admiral Wilde, "and he desired to pay his addresses to a certain young lady. So, in a frank and honorable way, he called on the young lady's father, described his circumstances and prospects, and asked if he might be regarded as a suitor.

"'Well,' the father said, 'I have no objection to you. You seem to be an honest, industrious, healthy enough young fellow. I guess you can begin to pay your addresses if you want to. Understand, though, that I put out the lights at 10 o'clock.'

"'All right, sir,' said the young man, 'I'll be careful not to come around before that time.'"

Now and Then.

The sap is climbing up the tree.
And dear, in every bough
Pink blooms are bursting from their sheaths.
'Tis spring or summer now;
I see the glint of your blue eyes,
Oh, my enrobing hair.
The sun, you are there and I am here,
I love you here and there.
The sap took in the canon, dear,
I knew it as of yore,
But this year, dear, heart of my heart,
You'll perish on it no more;
I loved you, dear one, on that perch,
You know that's not a con,
I loved you when I'd helped you down,
I love you off and on.
And, dear, my love is strong to-day
As it was yesterday,
It is the same love that you knew
In each remembered way;
The love you knew in yesteryear,
This year is yours again;
Know, heart of mine, it ne'er will change,
I love you now and then.

—J. M. Lewis in Houston Post.

Fame Enough for One.

The London correspondent of the Irish News begins an account of the career of William Abraham, M. P., as follows: "Commencing life as as a mere boy at the age of ten, Mr. Abraham ——" Is it really necessary to trace the history of this distinguished gentleman further? Any man who could begin life "at the age of ten," while the vast majority of his contemporaries and predecessors had to start away back at the age of one—or even less—and struggle all through that extra decade, surely has achieved enough of greatness without saddling himself with the onerous duties of a member of parliament. Considering Mr. Abraham's start he should ere this have progressed far beyond the commons.

NERVE SAVED STEVE BRODIE.

Charley Mitchell Thought Better of Intended Chattisement.

The presence in New York of Mitchell, once boxing champion of England, recalls an incident in the strenuous career of the late "Steve" Brodie, who jumped from the Brooklyn bridge nearly a score of years ago to glory, prosperity and histrionic fame. Brodie visited London in the early nineties, where Mitchell, playing the part of cicerone one night, introduced the Bowery boy at the Stooferies club, a resort for prize fighters, horse jockies, and their kind, where the festivities are seldom concluded before daylight and the police have more than once been called upon to restrain merriment.

In the course of a general conversation the English fighter happened to make some adverse comment upon the then mighty John L. Sullivan, which called forth a sarcastic remark from Brodie with reference to Mitchell's abilities as a fighter while in the ring with the American champion.

With an oath the Englishman gave the smaller man a push that sent him reeling ten feet backward, and then rushed upon him to administer correction for the other's temerity. Brodie was due for a fearful bruising, but the Bowery boy was equal to the occasion. He was erect on his feet with a pistol in his hand when the prize fighter reached him. Putting the weapon under the other's nose, he remarked calmly:

"You think you're goin' to make a reputation off flickin' Steve. Do you, don't you? Well, you just hit me once and you'll see a lot in the papers about it, but you won't read it."

Fully appreciating the impolicy of prize fighting notoriety, Mitchell explained that he was only joking, and the incident was closed.—New York Times.

Author's Eccentricities.

While traveling from Washington to New York recently Ernest Thompson Seton, the animal writer, had an argument with a lady in the parlor car, as the result of which the lady, who was accompanied by two fashionable women friends, left the car in high dudgeon, and the fragrance of the cigar of Mr. Seton, who delights in going about the country as he pleases, was undisturbed by overhearing his own name mentioned.

"Take this fellow Seton-Thompson, or Thompson-Seton, whichever he chooses this season," the lady said to one of the women. "According to a friend of mine who knew him in Paris some years ago, he never owned a guardian. Why? Listen. He showed my friend around his studio in which, among other things, was a larder consisting of a row of shelves. On the top shelf were crackers, on the next were sardines, and on the third were a number of eggs on each of which was painted:

"'This is cooked.'"—New York Times.

Banks as Public Benefits.

Many people who deal with banks every day do not really understand the proper object and purpose of banking. Banks can not create money, but they can gather small sums which are distributed among the people and thus create an aggregate which can be made available for important business operations that previously would have been impossible. Individuals, each possessing a few hundreds or a few thousands, invest it in stock in a bank, and thus a fund of $50,000 or $100,000 is established in a town or community as a great aid to the business activity and prosperity of its people. There is no more money in the community than there was previously, but it is in a form where it can be made to assist in the successful conduct of five times or ten times the amount of business than its actual sum stands for.—New Orleans Picayune.

The Glory on Her Head.

A shower of pattering little steps,
And in the room she flies;
Upon her sunny head there rests
A tiny, worn halo-wise;
A little circlet, golden-hued,
Edged with a band of red;
Oh, "look at me!" she cries; "I've got
A glory on my head!"

I nod, and smile; she patters off;
I put my paper by,
And listen to her far-off voice
With a smile that's half a sigh.
"See, gran'ma!" shouts the baby voice,
"You don't heard what I said;
Look at me; see; see here; I've got
A glory on my head!"

O baby voice! what truth you speak!
A glory so alight
With holy innocence, I stand
Abashed before the sight.
My head before that snow-pure soul
Is bent, and soft my tread;
How long it is since I have worn
A glory on my head!

—Charles Willis Thompson, in New York Times.

Happy Compromise.

At a dinner given by the Congregational club at Hartford, Conn., Prof. E. F. Steiner of Iowa College, who was the guest of honor, told the following story:

An Irishman married a Jewess, and their union was a happy one until the stork paid them a visit. The young son proved to be a bone of contention, for his father, with pardonable egotism, wished him named Pat, while his mother was equally decided that he should be called Moses. The day was saved, however, by a Solomon in the person of a woman across the hall, for her suggestion was accepted by both parties: The boy was christened Patmos.—New York Times.

Cruel to the Old Man.

De Style—Why did that Pennsylvania banker want to kill the editor of the Society Screecher?

Gunbusta—On account of an abbreviation in his paper. You see, when the rich man's wife left for Europe an item appeared reading: "Mrs. Goldust has locked up her old Pa home until she returns from abroad."

Manners School for Rich

Those who had little have much and those who have much have little—that is the condition which the rapid transition of circumstances has developed in England, says a London special cable to the New York World. It is an important moment in the history of the race, for the English are changing manners.

The men who have been taught to spend money are being replaced by those who have been taught to make money, and it is one of the most cruel circumstances of the situation that many of the former are earning their livelihood by teaching the latter to live in luxury. These thoughts have been suggested by the following letter in a London newspaper.

"Sir: I enclose my card, but not for publication. You will see by it that I am a younger son of Lord ——, who inherited a large estate in the midland counties, which has been in the possession of the family for several centuries. The extravagance of my late father, agricultural depression, mismanagement and a large family made it necessary for him to sell the estate, together with all the contents of the house. Elands for the Plains

The introduction of elands into the United State is likely to be attempted before long, the department of agriculture having given its approval to the idea. All that is needed is money, which congress will be asked to give. The animals, which are the largest of all antelopes, would be very valuable in the desert regions of the southwest as a source of meat supply. They require almost no water, are accustomed to forage for themselves and are of a tractable...

The eland is nearly six feet high at the shoulders when full grown and weighs 1,000 pounds. It is not particularly swift, unlike most of its congeners, and a man can sometimes overtake it by running. Its flesh is considered a delicacy. Commercially, it possesses in herds in the waterless deserts of south Africa, to which it is native, its ability to get along for months together without water being a mystery. To some extent, doubtless it depends upon moisture derived from succulent plants such as wild watermelon.

Aztecs and Africans Allied?

Were the men who built the prehistoric structures at Zimbabwe in Africa of the same race as the Aztecs and other native races that have left pyramids and monuments of various kinds throughout Central and South America? This speculation takes its rise from the uncovering at Umtali in Africa of an "arrastre" stone. An arrastre is a rude apparatus used in Mexico and in some parts of the United States for grinding, and, at the same time, amalgamating ores containing free gold and silver. It consists of a vertical axis with horizontal arms attached. To these arms huge masses of rock are fastened by chains and dragged over the ore, which is placed on a bed of flat stones, within a circular inclosure usually about twelve feet in diameter. The arrastre stone at Umtali was discovered by mining engineers in the region of the prehistoric gold mines. It is believed that the people who built the old temples and courts at Zimbabwe must have been the same as those who ground and amalgamated the metallic ores with those crude implements.

"A marvelous field of ... archaeology is opened up," ... writer. "It has been demonstrated by Herodotus that the Phoenicians who went very nearly everywhere paid a visit to South Africa in the year 600 B. C. The ancient ruins in Rhodesia have been ascribed by more than one authority to these hardy enterprising people of the old world. It has been contended, also, that the natives of South Africa, other than those of Spanish stock, derived their origin from a Phoenician immigration. The word 'Phoenician,' in Greek, means a 'red man.' The builders of Tyre were a mixed race. Semitic and Mongolian. Does not the American 'red man' possess facial characteristics peculiar to those two nations?

"A well-known mining ... says: 'I have been much struck with the great similarity between the ancient ruins and those of the American Indians in Colorado and New Mexico. It would be a strange coincidence, with the aid of the arrastre stone, relationship were traced between the early gold diggers in South Africa and those pre-Columbian miners of South America."

Development of the Legs

It was one of the merits of the feudal system that it developed the legs of Princes and people alike. The Baron always set his castles on the summit of a hill, so that the capture by an enemy would be a difficult task. His retainers—ironically so called for the reason that he never allowed them to retain anything of value—built their huts on the slope of a hill outside of the castle walls, where they could hope for the protection of their lord. The medieval town was therefore a town that slanted more or less abruptly, and its inhabitants were continually going up or down hill, to the great development of their calves. We sometimes wonder how knights and men-at-arms in the feudal period could have borne the weight of their armor. Says the Amateur Farmer

I do not know, but yet I think if I was a farmer now
I'd hitch the old dun mule, I would, and ploy and plow and plow;
And turn the rich, dark furrows straight and plan a way to do
That would prove my claim as a thinking man when the season's work was through.

I'd lay off part of the land for corn and part of it for cane
And part of it to wheat and oats. Then I would turn the grain
To eggs and pork and beef and such, just things I know would sell
Whatever the cotton market did and whether it rose or fell.

There's always a market for pork and beef and eggs and chickens, too,
And every turkey's a dollar bill when Christmas comes in view.
And corn is good, and cabbages, to put stuff in your jeans,
And as long as Boston is on the map there'll be a sale for beans.

And I'd raise stuff for my ... feed and clothe them all;
And I wouldn't be chained to ... when summer turned to fall.
But I'd have stuff in my chicken ... and in my smokehouse ...
That whether cotton was high ... would keep and see me through.

The Doctor's Reward.

[illegible] being a district of scatter-
[illegible] and its youngsters all indulg-

[illegible] day's work. Early to bed, he had just fallen asleep when the [illegible] tinkled through his dreams.
[illegible] engine horse awakened by a
[illegible] the doctor sprang into har-
[illegible] candle in hand, darted

[illegible] into the empty darkness at [illegible] front door, his thought was that a naughty boy had rung his [illegible] and hidden, but as he started in pursuit he stumbled over some obsta-
[illegible] doorstep. He bent low, [illegible] his candle down in front of him. There stood a large basket with ragged holes in its side and a patchwork quilt tied over its top. The bas[illegible] creaked and he heard a long-drawn sigh. Then he spied a scribbled paper fastened to the quilt.

"Dear doctor," he read, his forehead gathering a puzzled frown, "McGin-
[illegible] the hole wirld to me, but tomorer

A smile twitched the doctor's mouth, but the next instant his kind face flushed. Who was this inhuman mother who would not be bothered with a baby on a journey? Unknot-ting the rope and pulling aside the quilt he eagerly peered down at the sleeping baby—an ugly, scrubby, yellow puppy!

The doctor gasped. And he laughed aloud that the sleeping baby awoke with a squeaky bark.

Now, Dr. Worth likes dogs, "in their place," their place being, in his opinion, a yard with a barn to sleep in—[illegible] he lived in rooms over his office and put his horse up at a livery stable he had no use for a dog.

Dr. Worth gently dropped the dog
[illegible] basket, shoving it into a corner of the hall. "Of course," he said aloud, "you may stay until morning, [illegible] night."

"Come back! Come back!" yelped [illegible] after the vanishing doctor.

"It will soon tire," smiled Dr.
Worth, hurrying to bed while the yelps grew into howls.

But McGinty did not tire. The doctor tossed and fumed; the doctor [illegible] shouted threats over the banisters. All to no purpose. At last he had an inspiration. Perhaps his [illegible] baby was hungry. Donning [illegible] and slippers, armed with a candle and a cracker jar, he de-

The doctor again retired. Howls louder than before burst upon [illegible] silence of the night.

"Miserable beast!" yelled Dr.
[illegible], dashing down two steps at a time. "I'd just like to thrash you!"

His face crimson, the doctor panted
[illegible] the big basket in both arms,

When the doctor started out the next morning, a scrubby yellow puppy on the buggy seat beside him;
the doctor returned in the evening the puppy was still there. The secret of Dr. Worth's failure to drop the dog was not confided to the outside world—it lay hidden deep in the dog's wistful eyes.

After that, in sunshine and storm, McGinty accompanied the doctor on his rounds. While in the village he always sat, dignity personified, on the buggy seat, but when the open fields were reached, he would "run out and play," as the doctor called it, frisking at the mare's side, chasing butterflies, barking at squirrels. Soon he became the pet of the county, children watching at the windows to give him a treasured bone, while an old lady patient made him an "overcoat" for cold weather, and the shoemaker's standing joke was the promise of top boots for Christmas.

But McGinty's general popularity was nothing compared with the growing intimacy between him and the doctor who believed in keeping dogs in their place. The last thing every night the two frolicked together and every morning a "circus" in bed preceded the doctor's shaving.

So the request of the child who had confided McGinty to the doctor's doorstep was granted. "The deef doctor" loved McGinty "a hole lot."

A week of drenching rain had made the roads almost impassable. One evening while the doctor and McGinty were romping together the telephone rang. It was a message from the Willows, five miles away, summoning the doctor.

"Of course, I'll have to go, McGinty," grumbled Dr. Worth, hurrying into his storm coat, "but the night's not fit for a dog to be out."

McGinty, who had understood perfectly the moment the telephone rang that there was a call for the doctor, excitedly pawed that gentleman's heels.

"No use teasing, old fellow. If I were going to drive you could lie under the buggy robe, but the wheels were nearly stalled this afternoon, so I must ride. The doctor patted the shaggy yellow head, ran downstairs and sneaked out a side door through his dark consulting room.

The night proved worse than the doctor's fears, but his faithful mare wallowed through mud without a whinny. The village left a mile behind, they had just turned by the Heath farm when the doctor heard a panting sound close to the ground. He swung his lantern to the right. A small object was making frantic efforts to trot by the horse's side. What dog could it be following him a night like this? It must be one of the Willow dogs—McGinty was alseep on the bed at home.

The mare suddenly lurched forward. In spite of her carefulness she floundered into a deep hole. Struggling to regain her foothold, she slipped upon the oozing mud, sliding down a low embankment. Now panic-stricken beyond the control of the doctor's calming voice, she reared and plunged, and finally made the road again by so wild a leap that Dr. Worth was thrown, his head striking a stone as he fell.

The doctor awoke to hear a dog's pitiful whine.

"McGinty!" he called, bewildered at the pain in his leg and arm. "McGinty!"

There was a glad bark, and a small tongue licked his chin, cheek and forehead. Then the doctor remembered the accident and understood everything—except the mystery of McGinty's appearance on the Willows' road.

"I'm in a bad fix, old fellow," groaned the doctor, trying in vain to rise. "It will be certain death if I have to lie here till morning.

The doctor closed his eyes and drifted into unconsciousness again, until he was aroused by a shower of drenching rain.

"McGinty!" he murmured.

This time there was no answering bark.

"McGinty!" The doctor's weak voice trembled, for—deserted by even his dog. But what was that eerie sound in the distance? A wail; a cry of distress; a prolonged howl—such a howl as the doctor had not heard since the night he had adopted a doorstep baby.

The doctor opened his eyes. Could that flash down the road be lightning? No, the flashes were too close to the ground. It was a light from a lantern—from two, three lanterns hurrying in his direction.

Mustering all his strength, the doctor halloed.

The men sent back a cheer and hastened their steps, a little shadow darting far in front of them.

"McGinty!" cried the doctor, joyfully.

McGinty whirled about on his hind legs, while a series of excited barks told as plainly as any dog could speak just what he had done—how he had suddenly remembered the Heath farm (where delicious cookies were always given him)—how he had run there as fast as four little legs would carry him—how he had howled and scratched at the door until the men came out and recognized him; and how finally he had led them down the Willows' road to his poor, helpless master.—Washington Star.

PRIZES AWARDED AND OFFERED.

Encouragement for Invention and Useful Study.

The prizes having the largest money value of which the world has any knowledge are those provided by the will of Nobel, the inventor of dynamite. Three are for scientific research and invention and two for other kinds of achievement. All are bestowed annually, and each amounts to a trifle less than $40,000. It is an interesting question how much good they do, for they are not given with any idea of stimulating competition, in fact, a man who wants to get one hurts his chances by seeking it. On the other hand, the world undoubtedly derives great benefit from the award of much smaller sums of money, which are offered by special societies with the distinct understanding that they are to be competed for. Industrial and other guilds in Europe have often adopted these means to secure such discoveries as the best method of making matches without phosporus. There are a few prizes of that class.

German papers report that the Lombardy Institute of Science, Literature and Arts has distributed the scientific prizes for 1904, and has announced new themes for 1905. A gold medal for industries, which is only given once in three years, was awarded to Vermot & Reyna for wagon springs and wagon axles. The Cagnola prizes for essays with reference to the velocity of cathode rays, for a steering apparatus for airships, and for an investigation to prevent counterfeiting or forgeries, had to remain undistributed as well as various other prizes. An award was made to Dr. Ceni for a cure for the corn disease (pellagra). For an essay on miasms and infection the noted physiologist Negri received the full prize and a gold medal.

The Brambilla industrial prizes were strongly competed for, and three first and four second prizes were awarded. These Brambilla prizes are only given to further and encourage the industries of Lombardy. A prize was also given for an essay on the division of the mental activity of the brain.

Among the themes for the next year are researches into the following subjects: Certain rock formations of the Apennines; modern psychiatry; phenomena of catalysis; modern knowledge of neurology; centres of vision of the higher animals.

Unawarded for a long time, and therefore still on the list is the special prize by Commena for the discoverer of hydrophobia poison. Dr. Henri de Rothschild has given two prizes to the Scientific Society for Nutrition Hygiene of Paris, $1,000 and $600, respectively, for the best treatises on the most rational nutrition of man. The essays, written in French, must be handed in before December 30, 1905. The award of the prizes will take place next year.

STORIES ABOUT EAGLES.

A Battle With a Stag—Knocking a Sheep Over a Precipice.

Some years ago Sir Charles Mordaunt witnessed in Scotland a strange battle between an eagle and a stag, which completely dispels any theory that the ornithologists may put forward as to eagles not attacking large animals. The bird singled out from a herd one particular buck, which it succeeded in driving from the rest. It struck the animal repeatedly with its powerful wings, knocked it down and finally killed it. Baron Schroeder witnessed a still more remarkable spectacle. An eagle attacked a fawn which was one of a herd in the highlands. The cries of the litle one were answered by its dam, which sprang upon the eagle and struck it repeatedly with its forefeet. Fawn, deer and eagle rolled headlong down a declivity, and the bird was dislodged from its hold and the fawn rescued. But Sir Kenneth Mackenzie knows a more thrilling story than either of these, for, according to report, an eagle was rent in twain during a battle in his forest in Gairlock. Fixing his talons in the quarters of a roe, the bird was dashed against a tree, to a branch of which it endeavored to hold to stay the flight of its captive. The bird was halved in an instant.

Many traditions are extant as to eagles having carried off and devoured children. In the north of England the legend is perpetuated by the name of many an inn, the sign "The Eagle and the Child" being common. The most recent case bearing close scrutiny appears to be one which occurred in South Africa. A Boer farmer, living on the veldt just beyond Barberton, whose stock had been harried by eagles, lay in ambush for the aerial robbers, and saw one of them descend and carry off the five-year-old child of one of his Kaffir servants. He shot the bird, which, with the child still clutched in its grip, fell into a thorn bush. The bird was dead when picked up, but the babe was little hurt. The eagle measured nine feet from tip to tip of the wings. Other stories are told to a similar end, but appear less credible than this one.

Two eagles will stalk a covert in concert. While one conceals itself the other beats about the bushes with a great screaming, driving out its quarry for the hidden eagle to sweep down and make an end of it. An even more insiduous method has been observed, when an eagle, detecting a sheep on the edge of a precipice, flew at it screaming shrilly, and with forceful beat of wing hurled it into the valley below, where it could devour it at its leisure. There is good reason for believing, after all, the ancient legend as to the manner in which Aeschylus, the Greek poet, met his death. It is said that an eagle dropped a turtle on his bald head. Algerian travellers are familiar with the sight of eagles carrying turtles and tortoises to a height and dropping them upon rocks to break the creatures' shells and render the flesh accessible.—The Scotsman.

NEW IDEAS in TOILETTES

New York City.—The fancy blouse is always in demand and each new one is certain to find a place. Illustrated below is an exceedingly attractive model, which is adapted both to the costume and to the odd waist and which is susceptible of variations, which make it practically two in one. As illustrated it is made high at the neck, with long sleeves, but it can be made with slightly open square neck and elbow sleeves, as shown in the small view, so becoming adapted to evening wear. All the pretty soft muslins of the season that shirr with such success are appropriate, the design being suited to silk, to light weight wool, to net and to lace, but in the case of the illustration it is made of fancy louisine, trimmed with tucking of plain silk and banding of lace edged with narrower bands of silk and held by ornamental buttons.

The waist is made over a smoothly fitted foundation, which serves to keep the shirrings in place and itself consists of fronts and back. The lining is closed at the centre front the waist invisibly at the left, the closing being effectually concealed by the fulness. The lines of the back are peculiarly desirable, the tucks being stitched with corticelli silk, from shoulder to waist line, so giving tapering lines to the figure, while the front is soft and full, blousing becomingly over the wide belt. The sleeves are among the very latest and are shirred lengthwise at the centre, from the shoulders to the upper edges of the cuffs, and are cut off at that point and finished with the frills when made short.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is four and three-fourth yards twenty-one, four and one-half yards twenty-seven or three and one-eighth yards forty four inches wide, with seven-eighth yard eighteen inches wide, to trim as illustrated.

Shirt Waist Called "Buster Brown."

The blouse that can be worn either over or under the skirt makes one of the latest decrees of fashion and is adapted to many uses. This one includes wide tucks at the shoulders, and allows a choice of the rolled over or plain collar and cuffs. In the case of the model the material is white Madras, but all those that are in vogue for separate waists and shirt waist dresses are correct. The double box pleat effect at the front, given by the narrow tucks, is a feature, and the lines produced by the wide tucks are peculiarly desirable.

The waist is made with fronts and back and includes sleeves that are full at both shoulders and wrists. At the waist is a shaped belt with pointed ends.

A LATE DESIGN BY MAY MANTON.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is four yards twenty-one, three and one-half yards twenty-seven or two and one-eighth yards forty-four inches wide.

The Shoes.

About the only part of the costume that does not have to match is the shoes. Colored kid is not yet fashionable, although the colored pat is an old story. The new models in shoes are rather odd, and women with extra high insteps will find some difficulty in being suited. The vamps of the new shoes seem to be extraordinarily long. Extension soles are seen on many walking shoes, and the swing sole, which came in a year ago, is on hand again, very much exaggerated.

Making Skirts.

Several hints regarding the making of skirts were announced by a competent authority at a recent dressmakers' convention. This authority gives the following advice: "Make your skirt of anything, no matter what. Cut it off so that it clears the street, but don't make it too short. Now trim it with ruffles to make it look dressy. You will have a handsome skirt no matter what your material may be, taffeta, foulard, Japanese silk, voile or canvas."

QUEER TERMS OF SAILORS.

Language of the Sea Contains Many Familiar Words.

The timeworn growl of the disgruntled bluejacket, "Why did I ever sell my farm and go to sea?" shows the trend of the sailor's mind toward the peaceful occupation of his rustic brother, and may account for applying terms agricultural to things nautical.

The casual visitor to a warship is always mystified by seeing what appears to be a bale of hay in the fore hold, and his curiosity is not abated when told that it goes to feed the "jackasses," kept, appropriately, in the "manger." His shrunked credulity resumes normal dimensions when it is explained that "jackasses" are canvas bags filled with oakum, which are forced into the hawse pipes to prevent water from entering at sea.

Neither is a "Flemish horse" a rare breed of equine, nor a "bridle port" a place for hitching him; the former is a footrope for men to stand upon when furling sail, and the latter is an air port in the bows through which towing hawsers used to be led. The "saddle" of the bowsprit completes the riding outfit of the ship.

The menagerie of a man-o'-war contains a "cat" and "fish," both of which are used to "weigh" the anchor; "catheads," where the lookout of sailing ships stands his watch; "wildcats," which, with "whelps," hold the chain on the capstan, and the "bees of the bowsprit." On some days it is possible to find a "catspaw"—a sudden puff of wind—and a landlubber can easily "catch a crab" in pulling a boat; indeed, it is hard to let one go without unshipping the oar.

"Dog watches" are of nightly occurrence between 4 and 8 o'clock, when the usual four-hour watch is split into two parts. The dog watches are supposed to get their name from the fact that they are "cur-tailed," and not because the dog star, Sirius, keeps those hours.

When the gunner orders his mates to "clean the dashpot," he is not using polite profanity, but directing the cleaning of a part of the gun recoil cylinder. The "plow" of a Gatling gun may assist in turning the "sod" for the enemy, but not in a literal sense. Nor do the "telltales" of the engine room give it away; instead they peacefully record the revolutions of the screws.

The propellers are usually on a "strut," but it is not the vulgar parlance for saying they are angry; the strut is the steel arm that holds them in position. Ship's masts, like men, have "partners," which though wooden, strengthen them and make them firm. These are "payed" with pitch. Awnings have "backbones," "strongbacks," a "shark's mouth," "dogs ears" and "earrings."

The "trimming tanks" are huge compartments for holding sea water which may be let in to change the trim or inclination of the ship, due to the fact that the coal may have been used from only one side, giving the ship a "list."

A queer commodity in the engineers' storeroom is "joofa," a kind of Japanese sea cucumber, used for a filter in the boilers. Ground glass is also carried to grind valve seats and bearings. The wardroom "country" is the space around officers' quarters. The "hammock nettings" are no more an affair of thread mesh than is the "main sheet" a part of the sail; the former being stowage space for the crew's hammocks when not in use, and the latter a rope made fast to a clew, or corner of the sail. Even anchors have "shanks," "rings," "crowns," "arms" and "flukes."—Detroit Tribune.

Herodotus on Mosquitoes.

The discovery of Sir H. Arthur Blake that the transmission of malaria is recognized in Sanskrit literature recalls the following passage in Herodotus: "The contrivances which they use against gnats, wherewith the country swarms, are the following: "In the parts of Egypt above the marshes the inhabitants pass the night upon lofty towers, which are of great service, as the gnats are unable to fly to any height on account of the winds. In the marsh country, where there are no towers, each man possesses a net instead. By day it serves him to catch fish, while at night he spreads it over his bed in which he is to rest, and creeping in, goes to sleep underneath. The gnats, which if he rolls himself up in his dress or in a piece of muslin, are sure to bite through the covering, do not so much as attempt to pass the net." (Rawlinson's Herodotus, Vol. II., page 154.)—Lancet.

The English Servant.

The English servant requires to be studied. The world's other servants are mere amateurs, the English servant has a trade. As an American I proceeded to treat mine a l' Americaine, and I made my first blunder. A sensible American is, if not friends with her servants, at least friendly. The English woman, if she is sensible, presents to her servants a surface of perfect indifference, and then she has peace, for the English servant despises a considerate and kindly mistress as not knowing her place. The most difficult thing for a stranger to learn is that impalpable line between the different servants' duties. If one does not enumerate what one expects of them when they are hired, afterward it is too late. They have, however, a rough sense of honor, and they generally do what they agree to.—Harper's Bazar.

Pretty Custom of Japanese.

At the birth of a Japanese baby a tree is planted, which must remain untouched until the marriage day of the child. Then the tree is cut down and a skilled cabinet maker transforms the wood into furniture, which is considered by the young couple as the most beautiful of all the ornaments of the house.

PERSONAL.

While in the height of enjoying the national anniversary, the news came that fire had destroyed the house at Clanton where I had lived almost four years. On reaching Clanton I found that of all my personal belongings I had left only the clothes on my back everything having been swept away by fire. While my monetary loss is considerable, yet there were many things dear to me from past years which money can not replace. Having had confidence in my ability to take care of my belongings in case of fire, I didn't carry any insurance, and being like many other men connected with newspaper work (which enriches a very few) in extremely moderate circumstances I am compelled to earnestly request all of my subscribers who are behind in their payments to make an effort and send me in what is due, so that I may be enabled to get me "something to wear," as my entire wardrobe is on my back at the present writing. "He that giveth quickly giveth twice." Respectfully,

WALLACE C. EDLER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Some letters have been destroyed and some have to lay over for next week. Our readers must pardon the shortcomings this week. We just can't help it under the circumstances

FOURTH OF JULY.

There were three celebrations of the "natal day of the nation" in Chilton county, viz.: at Thorsby, Wadsworth's Mill and Clanton. We went to Thorsby, and so can only speak of what we saw, but the reports from Clanton and Wadsworth's Mill all say that they had a good time at both places. At Thorsby there was a large assemblage. About 11 a. m. the procession formed at the Thorsby Inn, and led by the Thorsby Brass Band and a carriage containing the orator of the day, Hon. John T. Blakemore, of Birmingham, with Hon. Tipton Mullins and W. M. Wilson, of Clanton, marched to the grounds. After several selections by the band and "The Red, White and Blue" by the Thorsby quartet, Miss Winslow readl the Declaration of Independence. Hon. Tipton Mullins made a very pleasing speech about the "day we celebrate," in the course of which he made mention of President Roosevelt, extolling him very highly as an "American of Americans, one of the most truly representative Americans that ever occupied the presidential chair, and a man for whom he had the most profound respect." The quartet then sang "Dixie" in admirable style, after which the orator of the day, Hon. John T. Blakemore, of Birmingham, gave the gathered hundreds a most inspiring address covering a vast range from ancient Greece to modern America, but laying especial emphasis on a still "Greater United States, Greater Alabama," and last, but not least, "a Greater Birmingham." The quartet then gave "America," the audience joining in, and then adjourned for dinner when the barbecued meats and other good things were enjoyed. The afternoon was to be devoted to games of different kinds, which we did not see, as a telephone message from Clanton called us home to find that the "fire fiend" had devoured our "Lares and Penates."

READ THIS.

Read the card from the Girls' Industrial school at Montevallo and send your girls there and fit them for making their own way in life, if circumstances should compel them to find for themselves. A fine president and faculty. Everything calculated to benefit the girls.

CEDAR GROVE.

Children's day at Cedar Grove was a grand success. There were present and addressed the gathering Judge L. H. Reynolds, Revs. J. E. Champion, Joe Gibson, L. B. Pounds, R. A. Rasco and J. R. Williams. Miss Mary Carr Gibson, of Verbena, the secretary of the Chilton County Sunday School Union, was down for an address, but instead gave her hearers a recitation, entitled "High Tide on the Coast of Lincolnshire," and it was a treat to the audience. Prof. John Gore led the singing, and Mrs. Gore presided at the organ. The dinner was very good, and far more than the large crowd present could dispose of. The following is the program as rendered, and needless to say the children all did their level best: Opening song, scripture reading and prayer by the school; welcome address, Arthur Eiland; "Trees," Dewey Collins; "Leaves of Healing," Mandie Childress; "The Peace Branch," Meadie Hayes and Alvia Mims; "Peace on Earth," Roberta Collins; "The City of Light," Jimmie Scott; "What of the Night?" Mamie Collins; "Thy Kingdom Come" (a reading), Alma Childress; "Three Little Workers," Willie Scott, Snodoun Hayes and Marshal Price; exercise, Gertrude Collins; "A Plea for Sowers," Emma Childress; "When I am a Man," Lawrence Hayes; "Suffer the Little Children," Simpson Collins; "The Tree of Life," Minnie Scott; "O, Tell to the Children," Annie Eilands; "The Great Physician," Minnie Scott, Alma Childress, Roberta Collins, Alma Mims and Meadie Hayes; "Changing His Views," Ollie Mims and Edgar Collins. Every one connected with the school worked, from Superintendent John Hayes on through the line, and especially the committee on ice cream and lemonade. In the words of the closing song, "God be with us till we meet again."

RURAL ROUTES.

The following letter from Congressman Bowie should be of interest to all. Now go to work and get up a "route" if you haven't one already:

Anniston, Ala., July 1, 1905.

Editor Union, Clanton, Ala.:

The department at last is catching up with its rural free delivery work, and petitions are now being examined within sixty to ninety days from the time they are filed, whereas formerly it took from six to twelve months. If the routes are favorably acted upon at all the government usually establishes them within about sixty days after the receipt of the report, so that final action can be expected in ordinary cases within six months from the filing of the petition.

We have nearly ninety routes already established in this district, but there is considerable territory yet unsupplied with this service. It pays the carrier a salary of $60 per month for routes twenty-four miles or over in length, and in the same proportion for shorter routes.

The requirements for the establishment of the routes are simple, and blanks and all necessary information will be furnished by me cheerfully on request.

I am very anxious to extend this service over all available territory in my district, and any one interested can get all desired information. The service wherever established is giving great satisfaction, and has resulted in decided benefit to those communities which have forwarded their petitions and secured favorable action.

Very respectfully,

SYDNEY J. BOWIE.

POPLAR SPRINGS.

Editor Union:

Our community is doing nicely and our S. S. is getting along nicely and everybody is taking an interest in it. Our pastor, Rev. J. L. Hand, gave us an excellent talk on "What is Sunday School, and What Has it Done for Our County and Children?" The subject was treated with great ability and the people seemed to enjoy the talk much. We heartily invite every one to visit our S. S. and we'll be glad to have our visitors talk to us on various subjects. Crops are looking well, for the season, and people are laying by fast and praying for rain. Well, Mr. Editor, we'd be glad if you would pay us a visit and cut a watermelon and look at the crops. Your friend and subscriber,

W. O. RICH.
S. S. Supt.

CONCORD.

Our S. S. is progressing nicely and looking forward to the Children's Day on the banks of the Coosa. Well, we had a 4th of July with plenty of iced lemonade and other goods things. This was at the home of J. D. Wyatt. Present, his family and the families of J. J. Maddox and W. S. Adams. Every one enjoyed themselves fine. Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Cleckler went to Wadsworth's mill. J. J. M.

COLLINS CHAPEL.

Editor Union:

I want to say a few words about the way our Alliance Committee have treated we folks who elected them and paid them to work for us. You see how they have done. They went to work for the big man, and we poor little farmers can come in and take what is left. But, we are going to build us a plant at Thorsby just the same and we farmers will patronize it and get our fertilizer cheap—that is what we want.

A FARMER.

BEAT ONE.

Editor Union:

As to the stock law question, I want to say this: When God made the world he made it just right; what man don't enclose to raise his food on is for the stock to roam over. I can't see how a Christian can vote for stock law. Respectfully,

"HILL BILLIE."

RANDOLPH.

Tomorrow is the 4th of July. Some are going fishing, some will go to other places and some will rest. We welcome July with its melons, roasting ears, etc. Mr. Thomas Gentry, an old time Chiltonian, a populist of the right ring, now of Active, was a welcome visitor last week. Harvey Nix, Grover Cleveland, Harry Macmillan and T. I. Ward attended church service at Mars Hill Sunday. Among our visitors last week we were pleased to meet Commissioner Glasscock, Tax Collector Hubbard, F. J. Fitts, Y. O. Freeman and W. R. Latham. Miss Emma Hubbard, one of Macedonia's charming young ladies, spent a day in town last week. Miss Bell Waldrup was in town Thursday. Your correspondent was present at Mars Hill Sunday at the Children's Day exercises. There was at least 1,000 people present. The music was fine, conducted by such leaders as James Franklin, J. F. Lowery, G. W. Gothard and T. Cofer. The dinner was bountiful, order good. The programme was well carried out. Just before noon Judge Reynolds was introduced and for a short while addressed the vast concourse of people on the training of children and the importance of thorough preparation for life's duties. The judge was among his friends and was in a happy vein and made a splendid speech, which was liberally cheered. The judge publicly stated he never attended before a children's day exercises that was better than Mars Hill. Abundant success to the Union, the people's paper. Subscribe for it and get the news.

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

MARS HILL.

Editor Union:

Crops are looking well since the rain, and we've got the best of General Green. We're glad to see whippoorwill express himself so freely, though we think he is a little extreme on the hog question. How can you expect a man that works on the railroad to know about law suits in the county? If any one of your readers have a remedy for stifled horses, we wish you would print it, and it would be greatly appreciated. Our children's day was a grand success from start to finish, there being the largest crowd of people present that was ever here at one time. Among our finest speakers were Misses Levy Cofer, Bettie Gothard, Leila Langston and Eunice Scott; Messrs. Martin Langston, Toney Cofer Jackson Scott and Columbus Scott. A recitation entitled "Christ is Risen," spoken by 16 girls, was about perfect. The children's exercises were in the morning, except five which were given in the afternoon. Judge Reynolds gave an interesting talk and we're glad to have him with us. Rev. J. H. Thomas' address was appreciated very much. Plenty of dinner and a lot left over. In the afternoon a song service was held, led by Messrs. E. J. Scott, James Franklin and E. G. Cofer. Miss Addie Horsley and Toney Cofer and J. D. Scott presided at the organ. Everybody went home seemingly having had a very happy day.

THE CHILTON COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the Chilton Co. S. S. Association will be held at Maplesville, July 22 and 23, 1905. The basis of representation is: All ministers of the gospel, the superintendent and 3 delegates from each Sunday school in the county. It is earnestly desired that ALL the superintendents will announce this convention in their Sunday schools, see that delegates are elected and urge them to be present. The convention promises to be the most successful ever held during the ten years existence of the association. Several officers of the State S. S. Association will be present and men prominent in all county affairs will be in Maplesville to add their interest and enthusiasm to the S. S. movement in Chilton county.

MARY CARR GIBSON,
Secretary-Treasurer.

ATTENTION, ALLIANCE MEN!

Chilton County Farmers' Alliance will meet with Rocky Mount Alliance on Wednesday and Thursday, July 19, and 20, 1905. Business of great importance will come before the Alliance.

MOTHER GOOSE REVISED.

There was a young woman who lived in a shoe,
The size of aforesaid was known to be two;
There was a young fellow who tied up the lace,
His heart beating wildly and red in the face.
There was an old Pater who lived in a shoe
In fact, to be truthful, resided in two.
The young fellow called and departed in haste,
The maiden was tearful and life was a waste.
There was a young person, Dan Cupid by name,
Who never was bootless, regardless what came;
Just how 'twas accomplished will never be known,
But soon, it is whispered, old shoes will be thrown.

"I suppose those feasts given by Lucullus were the most expensive ever served." "Lucullus? What insurance company was he connected with?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Edythe—Divorce! Well, I never! What grounds can she possible have? Mae—The very best. A quarter-section in North Dakota and a three-acre plot at Newport.—Puck.

Fond Mother—Tommy, darling, this is your birthday. What would you like best? Tommy (after a moment's reflection)—I think I should enjoy seeing the baby spanked.—Pick-Me-Up.

Casey—D' yez think cigarette smokin' do be harmful t' the teeth? Corrigan—Oi do that; a young dude blew some cigarette smoke in me face yisterda' an Oi knocked out six av his.—Puck.

Excited New Reporter—Say, there was a man named Smith killed a bit ago down on Blank street! Cool City Editor—Well, don't get excited. There's plenty of Smiths left.—Baltimore American.

Askitt—Your friend Lambley is quite well off, isn't he? Knowitt—He was. Askitt—He was? Knowitt—Yes, but he didn't realize it until after he had taken a flyer in Wall street.—Chicago Daily News.

Smart Pastor—My congregation is made up mostly of fools. Parishioner—Ah! That explains it. Smart Pastor—Explains what? Parishioner—Your habit of addressing them as 'beloved brethren.—Cleveland Leader.

Upson—Carnegie is a conundrum, isn't he? Downs—Why so? Upson—he can't get rid of his money fast enough to suit himself, and yet he says he doesn't want any worthless dukes in his family.—Detroit Free Press.

The Parson—Wouldn't you like to have your wife come to see you occasionally? The Prisoner—Not on your life. The Parson—Why? The Prisoner—You evidently are not aware that I'm in for wife murder.—Chicago Daily News.

Mabel—Now, Mr. Sporty, supposing you were Paris, which of us three would you give the apple to? Mr. S. (thinking he sees a brilliant way out of a difficulty)—Well—you see—there is such a sameness about you all!—Punch.

"No man is a hero to his valet," said the quotationist. "No sensible one wants to be," replied the personage. "The average valet's idea of heroism is measured by the amount of money you are willing to part with in tips."—Washington Star.

An Excited Voice—Hello, hello, is this the city editor? Well, one of your men down here at this fire has fallen down the elevator shaft and is very badly hurt. Busy City Editor—Never mind. I'll send down another.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

"Do you think that a man's political influence depends on his ability as a public speaker?" "Not altogether," answered Senator Sorghum. "I have found that the speeches which sometimes counted for most were made in the strictest privacy."—Washington Star.

Foozle—Come, now, do you really enjoy a game of golf? Niblick—Of course not! what a question. But I do love to talk about a game when it is all over, just as a man likes to talk about a narrow escape from death or a long siege of rheumatism.—Boston Transcript.

Miss Pyne—Did you notice, Mr. Tacky, that up in Wisconsin they are going to tax the bachelors $10 a head? Mr. Tacky—Are they? Well, if they were trying any such law here I'd find a way to evade it mighty quick, I'll bet you! Miss Pyne—Oh, Mr. Tacky, this is so sudden.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Professor's Tact—Miss Gushleigh—I'm sure, professor, I'm immensely flattered that you should leave that learned crowd and come over and talk to poor little me. Professor Chumpleigh—Well, you see—er—the fact is, I'm tired of their clever talk and I thought I'd come and listen to you and rest my mind for a while.—Cleveland Leader.
